SPECIAL FRESHMAN ISSUE

VOLUME XLVII NO. 1 | Complete A P Wire Service | CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1958 | Offices in Graham Memorial | EIGHT PAGES THIS ISSUE

2100 START ORIENTATION WEEK THURSDAY

Four Head Executive Activities

Four students are elected each spring in campus-wide elections to head the executive branch of student government.

Serving as student body president this year is Don Furtado, senior from Garner.

Others officers are:

Ralph Cummings, vice president, Raleigh; Miss Paddy Sue Wall, secretary, Winston-Salem; and Charles D. Gray III, treasurer, Gastonia.

One of the president's most important duties is to represent the student body in all dealings with students of other schools, and with the faculty and trustees.

The president also is authorized to appoint committees and his cabinet, carry out laws passed by the student legislature, and veto legislature acts. Legislation can be passed over his veto, however.

HIGHLIGHT

A highlight of the presidential year is the State of the Campus address, given annually to the legislature.

The vice president serves as speaker of the legislature and as its presideing oficer .He becomes president in the event that office is vacated.

Maintaining the records and files of he student body is the secretary She also records the minutes of all student body meetings and handles correspondence for the executive branch.

The treasurer disburses the money appropriated by the legislature.

No Freshmen Allowed Cars On Campus

With the parking meter fight ended with at least a partial victory for the students in that there will be no meters in fraternity areas, there is still the sobering note of old and new car regulations for students.

In order to relieve congestion on campus, two years ago Bob Young, then president of the student body, agreed to the following limitations on car privileges so that most students would be allowed cars:

1) No freshmen may have cars on the campus.

2) Only sophomores who have attained a "C" average may have cars on campus.

3) All cars must be registered with the assistant to the dean of student affairs. (Registration costs $1 and will be conducted during academic registration, the procedures to be announced at that time.)

4) No car may park between the hours of 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. in areas of the campus designated for staff use.

5) Student cars should show their registration stickers at all times.

Violation of the parking rules may mean that a student loses car priveleges at Chapel Hill.

During the past year the University built a parking lot near the Bell Tower to ease the growing car problem, due to growing enrollment.

NOT USED

However, students did not use the lot, and consequently through agreement betwees student government and administration a plan was set up to make use of this lot.

The new regulations state that all General College cars with the exception of those who have a place to park off the street in fraternity areas must park their cars during the hours of 7 a.m.-3 p.m. in the Bell Tower Lot or away from both campus and the dowstown section of Chapel Hill.

These cars will be given a special Bell Tower Lot sticker which will assure their finding a space in the lot.

Warm Greeting To Be Staged For Foreigners

Plans are underway to insure a warm welcome for the estimated 75 new foreign students who will be enrolled for the fall semester in the University.

F. Carlyle Shepard, associate dean of the General College and assistant adviser for foreign students, estimates that between 75 and 80 new foreign students will join the 30 returning foreign students on the UNC campus this week.

A committee headed by Miss Sipra Bose, a University student, has mapped out a program to orient the students from the various points of the globe to the "Carolina way of life."

Upon their arrival in Chapel Hill, the foreign students will be met by members of the orientation committee. Undergraduates will arrive Wednesday and will follow the regular orientation schedule set up by the University for all new entering students.

The special orientation program for foreign students, except those in the School of Public Health, will begin Saturday with a picnic to be held in cooperation with the Community Church in Chapel Hill. A separate orientation program has been set up for students in public health.

On Sunday, Sept. 14, the foreign students will gather at the United Congregational Church for a group breakfast. At that time they will meet the adviser to foreign students, Dr. A. C. Howell of the University campus faculty; the president of the Cosmopolitan Club, Nola Hatten; along with counselors and student advisers.

Sunday afternoon the group will meet in the Library Assembly Room where they will be briefed on banking, post office regulations, eating and shopping facilities, and the academic life at UNC.

At 2:30, the foreign students will join UNC freshmen and others for a reception being given by UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock and his wife.

A Dutch dinner at Lenoir Hall with a discussion on extra-curricular activities will conclude Sunday's plans.

Monday morning will begin with a coffee hour followed by a special session of orientation for graduate students with tours and lectures. The final event in the foreign students' orientation will be

UNC Housing Situation? It's 'Thirty Below Zero'

By CLARKE JONES

What's the housing situation here?

Serious, says University Housing Officer James Wadsworth. "It's thirty below zero."

Wadsworth said there are thirty men here who do not have rooms at the present time. These men will be put in Cobb dormitory's basement until rooms can be found for them.

PROBLEMS

Wadsworth listed several problems he's facing in his job to get students placed.

"Some of the third year medical students are here and are temporarily living in Connor dorm. They have to shift around in Connor as the regular occupants arrive."

The football players are living in Winston, he said. They will have to move around as the regular students come back.

"But the problems make it routine," he said.

Three new dormitories behind Woollen Gym will open this fall and will house 652 students. But even these three—Avery, Parker, and Teague,—are not enough to get everyone settled at first.

THREE MAN ROOMS

Three-man rooms will be the situation again in four men's dorms—Mangum, Manley, Ruffin, and Alexander.

"Thirty don't have rooms so we're putting them in Cobb basement as we have done the past several years," he said.

Can't students find enough private rooms in town?

"Private rooms are getting very low," Wadsworth said.

"I am encouraging landladies to rent rooms to women. We can put the men in Cobb basement but the girls have no similar accommodations. And more people in town have started renting rooms to women."

While Wadsworth talked a third year medical student called, wanting to know when the undergraduate students in Connor were coming back.

"I don't know when they're coming back," he had to say. "School starts Sept. 18 but they may come back anytime. Some of them are here now."

Married student housing is still a big headache for the Housing Office.

"Married students are scrambling around and finding trailers and rooms. But there practically aren't any more two-bedroom places in Chapel Hill in the price range of the ordinary couple."

In fact, he said, there are "almost none of any kind."

He said "almost nothing is furnished."

A total of 350 married students are living in Victory Village, located in the Memorial Hospital and Medical School area.

"But there are that many if not more married students on the waiting list. Those on the list usually have to wait about a year before finding anything.

For all his problems Wadsworth is not unhappy or angry that he can't find enough housing. He is, on the contrary, very grateful.

"I am very happy that people are so understanding about the problems, which are nobody's fault, really."

He was particularly pleased with the way the local radio station was helping the Housing Office.

"I am very grateful to the radio station for their announcements about referring to us for rooms. The station has been very helpful."

Available At Registration Student Wives' Tickets

The athletic department has announced that tickets for student wives are available during registration.

These tickets will enable a student's wife to sit with the student in the student section.

The tickets cost $10 and will be available to any student who has registered at Woollen Gym.

Season tickets are still on sale at $20 for five games, a reduction of $2.50 from the individual ticket price.

Merchants Plan Large Welcome For Newcomers

On September 15, the University's new students will be welcomed to Chapel Hill by the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Assn. and Chamber of Commerce. Directors of the event, the Chamber of Commerce committee, plan to feature a "misplaced items" contest sponsored by participating merchants.

According to the contest rules, objects irrelevant to their business will be placed in the show windows. New students will write on contest blanks listing the participating stores the names of the irrelevant items they find in the store windows.

Ten-dollar gift certificates will be awarded to the first twenty correct answers drawn at the Merchants Assn. Office.

An estimated 1,500 new students are expected to visit the stores and take part in the contest. Welcome streamers and favors are being prepared by many merchants for the new arrivals.

Members of the Welcome Students Committee are: Milton Julian, chairman; Carlton Byrd, Ty Boyd, and Joe Augustine. The event is being financed by the Trade Promotion Fund of the Chamber of Commerce.

3 General Meetings Get Week Underway; Program Is Varied

Orientation begins Thursday for approximately 2100 new students at Carolina.

The real beginning will be at 7 p.m. Thursday when meetings for all new students will be held.

Freshmen men will meet in Memorial Hall, freshman women in Hill, and transfer men in Hill Hall. Math and English placement tests will be held earlier in the day, at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m., respectively, in Carroll Hall.

Entering UNC for the first time will be approximately 1200 General College students (including transfers), 400 coeds, 250-300 graduate students, 150 transfers, 65 Pharmacy, 65 Nursing, and 18 Dental Hygiene students.

All figures are approximate.

Directing the orientation program this year are Herman Godwin of Dunn, and Miss Katie Stewart of Norfolk, Va., respective chairmen for men and women.

New students will take physicals, placement tests, and several campus tours.

Friday night Chancellor Aycock will speak and a film entitled, "In the Name of Freedom" will be shown. The chancellor's reception will be held Sunday afternoon from 2:30 to 5:30 p.m.

A discussion of academic life will take place Monday night at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Speaking will Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, and Dr. George Taylor, associate history professor and head of the superior freshman program.

For the complete orientation schedule see page 6.

Free movies, a picnic, and a special welcome by local merchants are other highlights of the week-long program.

Men's Orientation Chairman Godwin said the program will be "a most interesting and enjoyable experience" for all the new students.

"In addition to becoming acquainted with the many aspects of life here at Carolina . . . the newcomer will also have opportunities to meet such important campus personalities as President Friday, Chancellor Aycock, and Student Body President Don Furtado," Godwin said.

The Orientation Committee has tried, he said, "to keep the welfare of the student in mind. It is the committee's hope that all the activities will be fully participated in by all."

Staffers Needed For Newspaper

The first regular issue of The Daily Tar Heel will be published Thursday, Sept. 18.

During the time in between Editor Curtis Gans and Managing Editor Clarke Jones will be in The Daily Tar Heel Office to show any potential staff members and visitors the newspaper's facilities.

There are many openings on the staff for writers, feature writers, columnists, sports writers, and advertising people.

No experience in necessary and one can learn a great deal by working on the paper.

The advertising positions give a person with initiative a chance to earn up to $150 a month and there are cash prizes for reportial and editorial excellence.

Opportunities for advancement are many, and a trip to the office on second floor of Graham Memorial will not be worthless.

Welcome Given New Students By Furtado

Student Body President Don Furtado Tuesday welcomed all new students to the campus.

"On behalf of your fellow students here at UNC, I welcome you to our campus.

"You will find that Chapel Hill is a wonderful place ot live and study," he said.

Furtado said "Here at your disposal is everything the student can ask for to mak his stay worthwhile and enjoyable—friendly and outstanding professors, an informal college atmosphere, a beautiful campus, and activities of every type."

He added there are various non-academic interests "which you will soon discover for yourself."

Furtado said "Your opportunity to funtion in a self-governing society is perhaps the most of all of these elements of Carolina life."

Debate Squad To Discuss Nuclear Testing Question

The UNC Debate Squad, under the leadership of Clay Simpson, will travel the conference circuit this year debating this question:

"Resolved: That nuclear testing shall be banned by international agreement."

Students interested in participating have been asked to visit the orientation activity session booth of the debate squad or send a postal card to P. O. Box 1152, Chapel Hill.

160 Freshmen Get Early Start At New Hope

A total of 160 freshmen Monday got the jump on the remaining 950 (approximate) firs year men enrolling here.

The group came early for the annual Freshman Camp—sponsored by the YMCA and YWCA—at Camp New Hope.

The program was drawn up by Jim Carse and Claude Shotts of the YMCA staff and Jim Jordan, UNC senior from Greensboro. Around 30 upperclassmen signed up to serve as camp counselors.

Monday the freshmen took part in sports and get-acquainted sessions. Morehead Foundation Executive Secretary Roy Armstrong and Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver were guest speakers that evening.

SUCCESS TIPS

Tips on how to be a college success were given the new students on Tuesday by former UNC Chancellor Robert B. House Tuesday morning. Tuesday afternoon the group heard the YM and YW presidents, Bill Sugg of Winston-Salem and Miss DiDana DeVere of Morganton, describe their organizations.

David Gover, graduate sociology student, talked to the group Tuesday night on "Dating, Courtship and Marriage."

PANEL TALKS

The pros and cons of fraternities were discussed by a panel including Jim Carse; Tucker Yates, president of the Interfraternity Council; Bob Carter, past president of the Interdormitory Council; and Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

A panel consisting entirely of UNC students then discussed extracurricular activities.

This group was made up of Don Furtado, student body president; Harold Johnson, representing the debating societies; and Seamon Gottlieb, speaking for the cultural group.

The Rev. Charles Jones, Community Church minister, talked about "The Religious Challenges and Opportunities of College."

The freshmen were introduced to all the campus denominational chaplains.

WINDUP

Consolidated University President William C. Friday is scheduled to speak informally to the group on Wednesday, the program's final day.

Also visiting the camp then will be Chancellor William B. Aycock and several other University officials.

UNC's cheerleaders will participate in a program then that will end the affair. The campers will then return to the campus to join other newcomers for orientation week, beginning Thursday.

GRAHAM MEMORIAL:

'A Home Away From Home'

Graham Memorial, the student union building, is the place to go if you want to:

1. work on a major publication,
2. join one of Carolina's two political parties,
3. play pool in the basement,
4. listen to good music while concentrating on a game of chess.

In short, Graham Memorial is the center of extracurricular activity here. It has often been called "a home away from home."

FIRST FLOOR

The chief attraction on the first floor is the large main lounge where you can go to read, talk, or just relax and watch other students relax.

Adjoining the main lounge on the north end is the TV room. A color set was installed here last year. During commercials you can trot back to the coffee room for a quick break.

At the other end of the hall is the information office. Around the corner is the dierctor's office. The building is directed by Howard Henry, who arrived on campus last summer from the University of Wisconsin.

The two mezzanine landings on the stairways include the Carolina Quarterly office (north end) and the assistant director's office (south end). At present there is no assistant director.

SECOND FLOOR

The econd floor includes offices of:

The Student Activities Fund. This office handles the accounting for all campus activities.

The Daily Tar Heel, student newspaper.

Student government where the student body officers work.

The Publications Board and the Carolina Forum.

The Graham Memorial Activities Board—sponsors of activities such as bridge and dancing instructions, free movies, and band concerts.

Also on this floor are:

Roland Parker lounges 1, 2, and 3. Meetings of the Student Party and the University Party are held here. The rooms may be used separately or as one big room.

The Woodhouse Conference Room, where meetings and conferences of different sorts are held.

The Council Room, where violators of the campus and honor codes are tried by the men's and women's councils. The Women's Residence Council meets here also.

The Grail Room where the Order of the Holy Grail meets. This room is also used for small conferences.

BASEMENT

The word basement usually brings to mind a damp, dusty place used mainly for storage. Graham Memorial's basement is quite different.

Here you can play pool, get a haircut cheaper than town rates, or try your hand at developing pictures in the darkroom. Offices of the Yackety Yack, student annual, are located here.

Carolina's service fraternity, APO, has its offices here.

The Rendezvous Room is a popular place on this floor. It is used for quiet recreation and includes a jukebox, piano and numerous tables. Campus election votes are counted here.

Unless

The year starts and it is a new experience for many. For many, billed by their high school presidents or school superintendents in a somewhat less than eloquent commencement speech as America's future leaders or citizens or tomorow, the change will be quite drastic. For most the change is predictable.

There will be first the interminable orientation with meetings, meetings, and more meetings, some of which some of the new class will skip. They will hear many words about the Carolina tradition of freedom, about the Honor System, and about student government and activities in general. They will be told that a proper balance between scholarship and other interests will have to be made.

With much new found wisdom the student will go to his dormitory and get ready for the first day of classes.

Soon the student finds out that the Honor System does not work too well, and that the noise in many dormitory corridors makes study impossible and life only a little unhappy. At about this time they also find that one in five, if that many, professors that they have for freshman courses are interesting—not even stimulating.

So, quite early about one-fourth of them pledge fraternities and more than half of those are never seen doing something useful for themselves between that time and graduations. Others will take out their sorrows on the Tempo Room or the Rathskeller late in the evening, and others still will shortly drop out.

Almost all will forget their academic load until before the quiz and then assimilate what is necessary for quick regurgitation on the next day. They will be attuned to assimilating fact temporarily without placing the fact into context. They will be attuned not to think, and even those who came here not looking for a higher paying job as the primary result of a college education, will give up their goal early.

Those persistent enough to continue with intellectual pursuit will find it difficult to find people to converse with about anything save liquor, sex, and past experiences. A feeble attempt will be made by some to participate in activities, but for most this will mean lines in a yearbook rather than a personal contribution.

By the end of their sophomore year, those who have not received a high office will retire permanently to the bar stool or the uncomfortable cots that grace most dormitories and fraternities. They will content themselves with the activity of a Saturday night party or the intellectual pursuit of Mickey Mantle's batting average. They will be by the end of college little changed for the better by their four years.

They will be reactors rather than thinkers. They will be waiters rather than doers. They will be part of soceity at the expense of their own individuality. They will be intellectually dead.

There will be several who will become "teachers," but there will be but one or two teachers. There will be a few who will become "lawyers," but there may be one lawyer. There will be many writers and businessmen, but few will see their writings in print and few will rise above wanting to make the most money for themselves. There will be some scientists, but few with the prospective to place the greatly growing body of knowledge into. There will be a few "leaders" and probably no leader. Many will not finish school.

Those that do finish will listen to a brilliant commencement speech by a famous person and comment on how brilliant the speech was largely because they know that the person must be famous for some reason. Few will question how and why he got his fame and almost no one will carry the words of the speaker into life.

Embarking on the long voyage of life outside the ivory tower, "America's future leaders" will be the same generation as the last. They will plunge themselves into Spanish-American Wars, as quickly as they react "Coca-Cola" to "The Pause That Refreshes." They will hear the word communist, socialist, radical, non-conformist, and even individualist and react negatively not knowing what they are reacting to, but blindly taking somebody else's word for it.

In they the future leaders, as they have been called, lies not the hope of America but the promise of its annihilation in an age when annihilation can be accomplished easily.

This will happen as surely as you are reading this, UNLESS . . . .

Unless they as individuals try to find what they are and preserve the uniqueness of themselves.

Unless they resist the tide that chips at and ebbs away the curiosity htat should be native to students.

Unless they become actively critical of their society and work, not just gripe, towards its improvement.

Unless thel realize that reality is not a social whirl but rather is a problem worth coming to grips with and working out on a day to day basis.

Unless they shake the cliches and customs that society has foreed upon them and they have accepted as making it the easiest way.

Unless they refuse to subvert themselves at all times to the will of the group.

Unless they think.

The wading against the stream is the most difficult. It demands courage and endurance. A successful passage, however, has rewards that far outnumber any of those received going another way. The road to a personal sense of well-being lies this way; the road to a personal Hell lies in the other direction.

The alternatives are clear. It is their choice. They will probably make the wrong one.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N.C., under the Act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

The Islands: Heads, You Win; Tails, I Lose

THE FAR EAST — Will U. S. foreign policy bring peace?

Dean Acheson

Following is the text of a statement on China policy issued today by Dean Acheson, former Secretary of State:

We seem to be drifting, either dazed or indifferent, toward war with China, a war without friends or allies, and over issues which the Administration has not presented to the people, and which are not worth a single American life. Apparently, also, the President and Secretary Dulles, with or without military advice, will make all the decisions for us, surrounded by secrecy, designed to keep everyone guessing.

In this situation we ought to examine with a sharp eye the Eisenhower-Dulles pronouncement from Newport of Sept. 4.

It makes eight points:

Point one. Neither Formosa nor the offshore islands have ever ben held by the Chinese Communist Government.

So far as the offshore islands are concerned, this is an irrelevant legal point. The important fact is that always, until the present civil war, the offshore islands—Quemoy, Little Quemoy, and Matsu—have been coatrolled by the same power which controlled the adjacent coast. These, whatever may be said of Formosa, are the coastal islands, as are Long Island, Staten Island, and Martha's Vineyard. Their population is minimal. The only purpose of their being held by a force hostile to the mainland government is to block the mainland harbor of Amoy and to offer a threat as an invasion base. Only weakness would lead a mainland government, whatever its nature, to permit this situation to continue. No American interest is served merely by denying them to a regime controlled by the mainland.

Point two. Two statements are made here:

First: That the United States has treaty obligations regarding the defense of Formosa. True, but at the same time that the treaty was before the Senate Secretary Dulles was specific that it had no bearing on the offshore islands. "The position on the offshore islands," he said, "is unaffected by this treaty. Their status is neither promoted by the treaty, nor is it demoted by the treaty." (Press Release 686, Dec. 1, 1954.)

Second: The President is authorized by Congress to employ our armed forces to protect these islands. To be wholly accurate, the language of Congress refers to "the protection of such related . . . territories . . . as he judges to be required or appropriate in assuring the defense of Formosa . . ."

The question the American people are concerned with is not one of legal authority (which under the Congressional resolution is left to the President's conscience), but rather with the question of the common sense of war over these offshore islands.

Point three. The statement says that the seizure of the offshore islands by the mainland Government would be a seizure of new territory and therefore, a violation of the principles on which world order is based.

This perverts simple words. The principles on which world order is based (whatever they may be) are not involved at all. Two Chinese forces are contending over Chinese coastal islands which quite obviously have much more effect on the security of the mainland (as the present state of the port of Amoy demonstrates) than upon that of Formosa (except as a base for invading the mainland).

Points four and five. These paragraphs state that the Chinese Communists have been bombarding Quemoy, that after their radio has also been threatening an attack on Formosa (as, indeed, it has for eight years), but that neith-Chinese Communist intentions to invade nor the capacity of Chiang Kai-Shek to defend Quemoy are clear.

All of this is true, so far as it goes. But it does injustice to our capacity to discern Chinese intentions, on both sides. Two intentions, are pretty clear. One Chiang Kai-Shek's, to embroil the United States with his enemies, the Communists; the other, the Communist intention to drive the United States into conflict over an issue so unimportant as to lose us the support of all our friends, and which can never be finally settled in our favor, since the Communists could always control the fighting. The tensions which they can create at will would further erode the confidence in American leadership.

Points six, seven, and eight. These points are worth close attention. They begin by saying that Congress has declared that Formosa in friendly hands is essential to the vital interest of the United States; that Congress has authorized the President to defend Formosa and ("under certain circumstances") the offshore islands; that while he is not clear yet that these circumstances exist, if he thought they did exist he would defend them; that the defense of Quemoy has become increasingly related to the defense of Formosa, and finally that this action "would forecast a widespread use of force in the Far East" and would "threaten peace everywhere." In conclusion the statement urges he Chinese Communists to renounce force in the Formosa area.

This is the "falling domino" argument which we heard some years ago about Indochina. There it is that, if the small islands are captured, thus Quemoy will be captured. If this occurs, Formosa will fall. Then Southeast Asia, and so on until the United States is imperiled. But now there is an added note. This is furnished by an interpretation of the statement by "a high-ranking American" official as meaning that, if Chiang Kai-shek cannot hold Quemoy, American fighting men will be sent in to do so. That official was Secretary Dulles. In short, the decision seems now to have been made to defend Quemoy, even though it leads to world war.

Let us see what justifies so horrendous a decision. To do so requires a review of the premises on which this justification for world war is founded. Is Formosa in friendly hands essential to the vital interests of the United States? Congress certainly has been led to say so.

But Congress cannot make something true which is not true. Four times between 1948 and 1950 our highest military authorities concluded that this proposition was not true and did not justify American military action.

But, however, that may be, it is not involved here. The immediate question here is whether the defense of Quemoy is vital to the defense of Formosa. The Newport statement does not face this quite frankly. What it says is that "the securing and protecting of Quemoy and Matsu have increasingly become related to the defense of Taiwan (Formosa)." This is a very different thing. What is really meant is that, after the President's mesage to Congress in 1953 on "unleashing" Chiang Kai-shek, he was unleashed just enough to permit the incredible folly of transporting about a third of his forces to the untenable Quemoy. The obvious goal to be souhgt is to get them back again. Whatever might at one time have been said for the utility of Quemoy as an advance defense against a weak regime without air or sea power, in the face of present Chinese air and rocket power it can be defended only by general war with China—as Mr. Dulles, indeed, asserts. The Chinese Nationalists have been quite frank that the coastal islands are held for offensive and not defensive purposes. See statement of Nationalist Maj. Gen. Yin Tien-chia, New York Times, July 18, 1957.

The fact that the matter is that our Government has most unwisely maneuvered itself, with the help of Chiang Kai-shek, into a situation of which it has lost control. Either the Nationalists or the Communists, or both, can at any moment—this is one of them—precipitate us into war or back down. The attitude of the Administration is that nothing will be done to extricate ourselves from this position during periods of quiet, and that nothing can be done about it in times of crisis. This is an attitude which ought not to be tolerated.

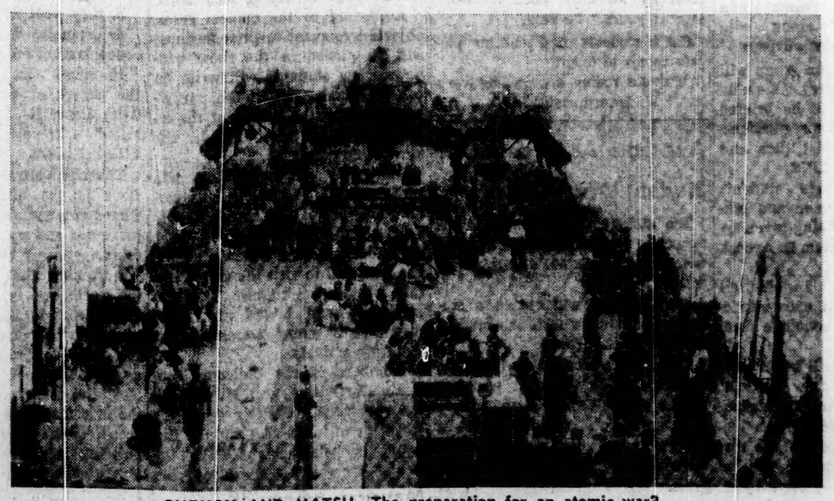
Already, once this summer, the Administration has been given a start in extracting itself from the consequences of its own misjudgment by helpful friends in the United Nations. Another session is about to begin. I suggest that the conferences at Newport might be enlarged to include some cool-headed friends ftom other countries which would be affected by the forecasted "widespread use of force" which "would threaten peace everywhere." This is especially appropriate since none of them were consulted when in 1954-55 the Government of the United States embarked upon the poicy which now concerns them all so deeply. They doubtless remember that President Eisenhower concluded his message to Congress of Jan.24, 1955, asking for the authority to defend Formosa with these words: "In all that we do we shall remain faithful to our obligations as a member of the United Nations to be ready to settle our international disputes by peaceful means in such a manner that international peace and security, and justice, are not endangered."



QUEMOY AND MATSU—The preparation for an atomic war?

Out Of Joint

March Wind

John Foster Dulles appeared rather suddenly at Forest Hill this Sunday to present the championship trophies to Althea Gibson and Ashley Cooper. Grinning like a Cheshire cat, hte Secretary of State said, "I guess some of you folks thought the Chinese Communists had me boxed in. Well, here I am!" A nervous laugh went through the crowd and there was a scattering of applause.

Mr. Dulles apparently envisions himself as a twentieth century Horatio, standing on the bridge alone, fending of 600 million screaming Chinese Reds. If this meglomaniacal vision were only so, we could depend on the Dulles career coming to a rather abrupt (and well-deserved) conclusion. But it is not so. The Chinese Reds have boxed in, not Mr. Dulles, but rather the United States of America.

Thanks to a long series of blunders, beginning probably back in 1950, and climaxed by the "high government official" (Dulles himself) who "explained" the President's carefully worded Newport statement, we are not irretrievably committed to the defense of islands within spitting distance of the Chinese mainland. This must surely be the ultimate in awkwardness. It is an untenable position, both militarily and diplomatically.

What the Administration apparently envisions is a "limited" war fought with tactical nuclear weapons and confined to the area of the mainland adjacent to the islands in dispute. Nuclear strikes would be mounted from carriers of the Seventh Fleet, bombers on Okinawa, and the Army Matador Missile Squadron staged on Formosa itself. This is the only possible way that the offshore islands can be defended by us, and it leaves the Chinese (and Russians) with some rather interesting alternatives short of the all-out thermonuclear war which nobody wants.

Let us assume that the Chinese Communists, for propaganda reasons, will not retaliate with nuclear weapons against their fellow Asiatics on Okinawa and Formosa. What then is their target? Answer: the Seventh Fleet.

In tests conducted since 1946 the U. S. Navy has found that their best defense against atomic weapons is a combination of speed and extreme dispersion over enormous distances of open sea. But this is precisely what is not available to the Navy in the present situation. John Foster Dulles may not be "boxed in," but the U. S. Seventh Fleet most certainly is. The 100 mile wide Formost Strait does not leave much room for dispersion; it leaves no room to hide from prying reconnaisance eyes; and the nature of the mission itself puts a premium on relative immobility.

Presumably, the bulk of the Seventh Fleet is staged near open water at either end of the Strait. With war imminent and inevitable, the Fleet would make a run for the high seas. But this too has its drawbacks. Chinese jet bombers have at least as long a range as the Fleet's aircraft. Secondly, the Fleet's fighter planes, needed for the defense of Formosa, have a very limited range. And, finally, in open water the Fleet would very probably have to fend off determined attacks from Russian submarines filtering down from Vladivostok.

It was widely reported several months ago that Admiral Felix Stump, one of the Navy's Pacific big-wigs, came close to insubordination when he argued with the President in a defense conference held at Quantico, Va. The sort of thing that evidently disturbed Admiral Stump is the sort of thing we have been discussing today. By the very nature of its mission, the Seventh Fleet must stay "under the gun." Staying under this particular gun may well result in an atomic Pearl Harbor.

It is always great sport to play the role of "military expert" when our opposition is of the caliber of Lebanese rebels or Greek guerillas or Algerian terrorists. It is not so much fun to play the same role when we ar about to collide, head-on, with two first-rate military powers, under strategic and diplmatic conditions which make our task almost impossibly difficult.

We are in this mess because we have stubbornly, obstinately and childishly refused to recognize the Chinese Revolution as an accomplished FACT which, however unpleasant, may not be reversed by American armed might.

Perhaps the solution is to "fix" one of our quiz shows to award Chiang Kai-Shek a two weeks, all expenses paid, vacation in glamorous Miami Beach. We could then let nature take its course in the Formosa Strait. Certainly, this would be a drastic shift in the precarious balance of power. But the real shift occurred in 1949 when the Chinese Communists conquered China. We have only been kidding ourselves since then.

Freshman And Parents' Issue Of Carolina's Daily Tar Heel

This issue is dedicated partly to informing freshman of some of the opportunities that are available on campus as well as bringing them up to date on many campus happenings.

It is being mailed out to all students at their homes with the feeling that the parents of students at the University want to know about the campus and the actvities therein.

The Daily Tar Heel is a chronicler of the events of the campus as well as the events of the world in order to put the campus issues in the perspective of the world.

The Daily Tar Heel is available to all students free and to all other persons at the rate of $4.50 for one semester and $8.50 for two semesters.

Subscriptions may be obtained by writing Box 1080, Chapel Hill.

Staff Meeting

The first staff meeting of The Daily Tar Heel will be Wednesday, Sept. 17, at 2 p.m. All people who have worked on the paper and all interested students are urged to attend. No journalistic experience is necessary to work on The Daily Tar Heel.

Credits And Debts

This issue of The Daily Tar Heel was made possible through the efforts of managing editor Clarke Jones and assistant advertising manager John Minter.

The two plus the editor were responsible for almost the entire issue and the editor wishes to extend his gratitude for their effort in making this issue possible.

Just Chattin'

Davis B. Young

I remember well that day just twelve months ago as I walked down the streets of Princeton, N. J., for the last time shaking hands with friends, merchants, local juvenile deliquents and old ladies. "I had mixed emotions."

I was glad to be bugging out, but didn't know what lay ahead. The road to Chapel Hill from my doorstep is 471.29 miles, and I knew it would be a long time till yours truely would 'make the Yankee scene again.'

As I drove off in the afternoon, I passed many of the spots that I will always remember. There was my home, where I'd spent many years mowing the lawn and fighting with ma mere et mon pere; old Princeton U. and its 'ivory towers'; Marquand Park, where we played touch football in the afternoon and necked at night; Saks' Fifth Ave. University Store, where I peddled overpriced colthes to underpriveleged prep school kids and a local gin mill that sold vodka martinis to anyone with the money.

I drove on down the N. J. Turnpike and over into Delaware and Maryland right into Washington, D. C. where I spent the night. My mother wanted to go to the Capital Building, I wanted a beer and my father was too bushed to protest. We went our separate ways for the evening.

Bright and early in the a.m., we went "on the road" again. Straight down the Shirley Highway and on to Route 1 heading ever onward for Henderson, N. C., where we'd switch on to Route 15 and head into Durham.

As I drove on through the miserably hot afternoon, my thoughts turned to what lay ahead. I wondered whether I was going to be in a school full of off-season cotton pickers. I wondered whether fellas had belt buckles across their posteriors. I hoped there would be some nice girl waiting in the Tempo Room, which I'd read about somewhere. Maybe she'd buy me a tall Bud and swing around the town with me for awhile. I though about what my roomates would look like. I figured they'd be southern gentlemen and make it rough on an uncouth Yankee. I looked forward to fraternity rush, where I figured all of the houses would bid with equal vigor to pledge me up. And what about McGuire's basketball team and their 32 game streak? Maybe they'd go undefeated again and I could go home and laught at all my friends at Yale and Dartmouth with their de-emphasized athletic programs.

Mile after mile we sped on, ever onward, further and further.

All of a sudden I was there. The Mecca of American college towns. Chapel Hill in all its splendor. A maze of clothing stores that thrive on student trade, big football players, the Rathskeller and the Student Union. Orientation Week started the next day and with it came receptions with the Chancellor, physical exams given by youthful interns, pretty junior transfers with an eye on an engagement ring, lectures on the Honor System, the Book Ex, and the Goody Shop.

My roomates were there too and weren't anything like what I had expected. One was a big tall Yankee, who'd recently migrated to Georgia. The other was a rugged little guy from a small town in North Carolina. I was overpowered by it all.

I could understand what was going on, but was unable to completely dissect my complex surroundings. I wanted to do it all, even give one of those coeds that ring she was looking for.

Orientation Week ended and the rigors of academic endeavors commenced. It was "up in the mornin' and work all day." I began to find out that this place was no picnic. I wouldn't have time for that coed and that beer would just have to wait for a rainy day.

Pretty soon the first semester ended and I was able to survey my accomplishments, small as they were. Coming back to the dorm I was amazed to see several friends packing to go home. They'd flunked out. Now I knew what they meant when they said only 40% will finish.

Yes sir, it's September again and school bells ring all over America. In Vermont little children go off to kindergarten, in Chicago there's a grammar school opening and in Princeton, N. J., the old high school is once again swinging open its doors. And in Chapel Hill old UNC is kicking off another academic season.

Here, many of you will fall by the wayside. Many of you will be unhappy. Some will say it's okay here, but wished they'd gone to State or Duke. Others will fall in love with this campus as I have done. They will respect its liberalism, recognize its failures, and become a part of something they will never lose.

Some will leave after a few weeks. Others will join the USAF after two years. Forty percent will collect that sheepskin after four years. No matter what the duration of your stay at Carolina, you will profit to some degree.

A football game, exams, coeds, beer, fraternity parties, Playmakers, Graham Memorial and Ray Jefferies are what you'll find here. These are the traditions, the memories you will carry from UNC.

And now I've completed my obligation to the Editor. I've written my column and I'm going over to the Tempo for a beer in the afternoon. Maybe that girl is waiting there now.

I'm a Yankee in Paradise.

AT UNC INFIRMARY

With Examinations Comes First Look

While going through their physical examinations, new students will get a look at the University Infirmary.

Chances are it won't be a last look; for sooner or later, there will be a sore throat, cold or some other ailment necessitating their return for medical care.

The present Infirmary building was built during World War II by the University and the U. S. Navy, and was first occupied by the Infirmary Staff in 1946.

ENTRANCES

The Infirmary is best entered through the hospital's clinic entrance if one is walking, or through the side entrance at the rear of the hospital if driving over.

The first floor houses the outpatient department, consultation rooms waiting hall and laboratories.

The second floor provides rooms for those who must remain overnight. It boasts some 60 beds, although the average number of students remaining overnight is from 20 to 25.

Infirmary doctors say they always expect and have the greatest number of patients during January, February, and March, the respiratory disease months.

EXCUSES

Excuses can be obtained from the Infirmary. Students can be excused from classes for medical reasons at the time an illness occurs, if in the judgment of the attending physician, such excuses are justified. The University expects students to meet their obligations and accept their responsibilities for classroom work missed.

Excuses are not granted for reasons other than trivial nor for trivial complaints like slight headaches, where the fulfillment of their classroom obligations does not endanger the students' welfare.

Excuses are not granted at night, Saturday afternoon or Sunday. In the event the student becomes ill at home, a signed statement by the physician or parent must be presented at the Infirmary before the student can be excused from those classes missed.

HOURS

Infirmary hours are 9-11:30 a.m. and 2-5 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Sunday hours are 10-11:30 a.m. and 2-5 pm.

However, the Infirmary's doors never close; emergency cases are received 24 hours a day, including holidays and periods when school is not in session. No charge is made for usual treatment because a standard medical fee is included in student fees. But if treatment requires use of Memirial Hospital facilities, the usual hospital expenses must be paid by the student.

The Infirmary has equipment for laboratory work and routine X-rays, plus the opportunity for the student to have access to the consultative staff and use of equipment of the larger Memorial Hospital.

Freedom Here Carries Responsibilities

Freedom at Carolina? There's lots of it.

But along with this freedom goes responsibility.

Students here are completely on their own during quizzes and exams, for instance. The professor or instructor does not monitor his classes during those periods.

This puts the student on his honor not to lie ,cheat, or steal, the three activities forbidden by student law.

Aside from this and the fairly detailed regulations governing co-eds, the rules here are few and simple.

Prohibiting the three violations mentioned above is the Honor Code, which tries to encourage what is called the Honor System.

Students who find being on their own too great a temptation, however, are likely to wind up before the Men's or Women's Honor Council. These organizations have the authority to suspend or even expel students.

The Honor System, says Men's Honor Council Chairman Hugh Patterson, "gives a student the chance to be honorable and it provides that part of an education which develops in the student qualities of character and learership."

This system, said Patterson currently is taken for granted by most students here.

"Carolina has not always had an Honor System," he said. "This system was initiated through the efforts of many students who felt, as we feel today, that men are basically honest and should be given the chance to prove themselves such."

Patterson said not many students stop to think about the system's purpose.

"In part, I have answered the question already. We like to think that man is a basically honest creature, but an individual does not inherit the qualities of integrity which society demands of its citizens.

"A person may be instructed as to those things which he should and should not do, but he can only become honorable by practicing being honorable," he said.

The Honor System here gives students the chance to prove they are "basically honest," he said.

"The student enters an atmosphere of complete trust and he is trusted explicitly until he shows through his actions that he is no longer worthy of that trust.

"Thus, the purpose of the Honor System are many. It gives a student the chance to be honorable and it provides that part of an education which develops in the student qualities of character and leadership," he said.

Patterson said the system here is "much above criticism as it embodies those principles of honesty and integrity which men throughout the world hold dear.

"The Honor System cannot fail. Only we as students can fail. Our Honor System is only as good as the students who live under it," he said.

Patterson ended with this warning:

"Uphold it and we as students will have an Institution of which we can be proud. Defame it and only we can be held responsible for the consequences.

Rep. Umstead Receives Award

John W. Umstead, Jr., of Chapel Hill, State Representative from Orange County and chairman of the North Carolina State Hospitals Board of Control, was honored Saturday in Durham.

Rep. Umstead was given special recognition by the North Carolina State Employees Association as a special feature of their 12th annual convention in Durham.

The convention was held at the Washington Duke Hotel.

FIVE FROSH OPPONENTS

Coac Bud Carson's frosh eleven will get their initial test when they meet up with the Virginia freshmen at Virginia Oct. 3.

The rest of the schedule includes games with Wake Forest at Wake Forest Oct 17, Maryland here Oct. 31, N. C. State at Raleigh Nov. 8, and Duke at Duke Nov. 27.

Valkyries And Fleece Top Honoraries Here

Carolina's highest honorary organizations are the Valkyries for women and the Order of the Golden Fleece for men.

The Valkyries takes each year no more than two per cent of the total undergraduate coed enrollment. This organization taps its members in secret, pre-dawn ceremonies. It serves to promote leadership and service among women students.

Coeds chosen to be tapped are selected on the basis of leadership, character, scholarship, and unselfish service.

The Order of the Golden Fleece taps an undetermined number of men students in the junior class or above. Graduate students, faculty members and prominent outside citizens are often taken in.

The Fleece, founded in 1903, attempts to cut across sectional boundaries of student interest. It honors the outstanding men in all field of campus endeavor.

The annual tapping is held each spring in Memorial Hall.

Other honoraries here include the Order of the Holy Grail and the Order of the Old Well.

The Grail is an honorary service organization that each year takes in thirteen rising juniors and seniors. The membership is divided equally between dormitory and fraternity men, with the delegata being the 13th man. Selections are made mainly on character and achievement.

The Grail is dedicated to improving the Carolina way of life by awarding scholarships to deserving students, sponsoring informal dances, handling senior rings and invitations, aiding other campus groups, and sponsoring campus improvements.

The Order of the Old Well is an honorary organization open to both men and women. Members are chosen for their participation in campus activities by a point system.

Several Places Have Supplies For Students

The Book Exchange, located in the basement of Steele Dorm on the south side of the campus, sells new and used books and school supplies ranging from pencils to the finest stationary.

New books are sold at the market price, but for the thrifty student, there are used books priced according to their condition. Students may also sell their used textbooks to the Book Ex, obtaining from nothing to half-price.

Store hours are 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on class days.

The Scuttlebutt is located diagonally across from the Carolina Inn and Big Fraternity Court. The rushed student may obtain school supplies, snacks, sandwiches, soft drinks, magazines, newspaper, toilet supplies and lotions here.

The Scuttlebutt hours are 7:30 a.m. to 11 p.m. weekdays and 1-11 p.m. on Sundays.

The Mongram Club, directly across from the tennis courts, also has a snack bar and fountain known as the Circus Room, and sell various school supplies and toiletries for the students use. The Circus Room observes the same hours as the Scuttlebutt.

Supplies, toiletries, etc. may also be bought at Y Court from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Lenoir Hall during meal hours, and at downtown stores.

High Grades Earn Frosh Honorary Membership

What honors can freshmen win their first year? There's one that takes hard work but it's worth the effort.

This honor is making Phi Eta Sigma, the national honorary fraternity for freshmen who gain high averages in their work. To be chosen you have to make one half A's and the other half B's during your first year.

The organiaztion is comparable to Phi Beta Kappa, honorary fraternity for upperclassmen.

With a good start this year you may be bale to make the latter honorary. Many freshmen have gone on to do this.

Student Aid Office Helps Locate Jobs

Many students here work part-time while going to school.

If you want or need a job the first thing you must do is visit the Student Air office in the Hanes Hall basement.

There you will be interviewed oand you will tell them what kind of job you are interested in, the work you are capable of doing.

Also available are scholarships, loans, and grants-in-aid. These can be applied for at the same office.

If you get a job working for meals it will likely be at Lenoir Hall or the Carolina Inn, that is if you work for the University. Some students get jobs in downtown eating places.

Other places to work here include Graham Memorial, the Scuttlebutt, the Monogram Club, the Pine Room, the library, and others.

A "C" average is usually required to keep a job but exceptions sometimes can be made.

Freshmen have been advised not to work unless it's necessary. But the Student Air office realizes that sometimes you can't get by without working.

This office is open from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on weekdays and until noon on Saturdays. Students interested in discussing job or scholarship possibilities have been invited to come by.

Approval of the Student Aid office is not needed if you want to work for downtown restaurants, theaters, filling stations, or other privately-owned places.

In this case the student is completely on his own.

University Dance Group Serves As Host Often

The University Dance Committee serves as host at Carolina dances and maintains order at social functions given by various campus organizations.

Friday And His Man Aycock

Who's Who In South,

Several changes ave occurred recently among the University's administration circles, the main one being the move from South Building by the Consolidated University offices.

The Consolidated University offices formerly were located on South Building's first floor. Last year they moved to the old Institute of Government Building, across the street from the Planetarium.

BUSY MAN

Top man in the Consolidated University is William C. Friday, usually a very busy person.

His duties constantly keep him moving back and forth to State College in Raleigh and Woman's College in Greensboro, both units forming part of the Consolidated University.

Serving as Friday's special assistant is Claude Teague, formerly the University Business Manager. Teague retired year before last but Friday retained him on his staff.

William D. Carmichael Jr. is the Consolidated University vice president and finance officer. His duties include handling the University purse strings and assisting Friday on other monetary matters.

Business Officer and Treasurer is Alexander H. Shepard.

SOUTH BUILDING

Inside South Building there have also been recent changes.

Roy Armstrong, for many years director of admissions, moved up during the summer to become executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation.

Temporarily serving in Armstrong's old position in Charlie Bernard, assistant admisions director until this summer. Many expect Bernard to be named permanent director.

Chancellor of the University is William B. Aycock, appointed year before last to replace Robert B. House. House retired due to a trustee ruling requiring officials to step down at age 65.

Next to the chancellor the two top positions in South Building are occupied by Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver and Dean of Women Miss Katherine Kennedy Carmichael.

Under Weaver are Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, aid Ray Jefferies, assistatt to the dean of student affairs.

WOMEN'S STAFF

In Miss Carmichael's office are Miss Isabelle MacLeod, executive secretary; Mrs. Martha DeBerry, assistant to the dean of women; and Miss LuAnne Thornton, personal adviser to women.

Charles M. Shaffer is the director of development. Working with him as assistant if Roy Holsten.

Dean of awards and distinctions is Ernest L. Mackie.

Respective deans of the General College, the faculty, and the College of Arts and Sciences are, respectively, Cecil Johnson, J. L. Godfrey and J. Carlyle Sitterson.

Gen. Carlyle Shepard, whose office is in 315, is the man to see if you have questions about your draft status. Veterans must go by his office to receive their monthly GI Bill payments.

Insurance Rate Has Dropped, Says Jefferies

October 10 has been set as the deadline for student insurance.

The cost of the policy is $9.00 a year. According to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, the premium's cost has dropped since last year.

Insured students will be covered for up to $1000 for loss of life and for up to $200 for surgical benefits.

Jefferies said, "I think this insurance plan paid off for us last year." He pointed out that the insurance will only cost 75 cents a month.

The insurance coverage is for a 12-month period, Sept. 1, 1958 Sept. 1, 1959, including the periods when students are traveling to and from Chapel Hill, during vacations, and the summer breaks. Jefferies said last year there were not many claims during the school year but the company paid off many times during the summer.

The policy is made available through the Pilot Life Insurance Company, Raleigh.

For the married student, there is a Blue Cross and Blue Shield program at a special group rate. This program offers an excellent opportunity to the married student to provide coverage for himself, his wife and all unmarried dependent children under 19 years of age. The cost of the program will be 17.50 per quarter.

An information booth will be set up during registration. Applications for either insurance policy will be available at the information booth, the Y and at Graham Memorial.

Jefferies reminded students who already hold policies and are eligible to receive payments for claims must file claims with the company. Blanks are available at his office and the Infirmary, he said.

Two Separate Codes Form Honor System

The judicial arm of student government here consists of a Men's and Women's Honor Court, a Student Council, and a law and medical school court.

Other special bodies include the Interdormitory Council, the Women's Residence Council, the House Council, and the Dance Committee.

Two different codes form the backbone of the honor system: the Honor Code and the Campus Code.

The first states that a student shall not lie, cheat, or steal. Other violations include plagiarism, falsifying class rolls and library cards.

The pledge you sign for each quiz or exam is your word that you have neither given nor received any aid.

The Campus Code says you shall act as a gentleman at all times and, whenever possible, see that others do. This is supposed to apply to both on and off the campus.

The Student Council has jurisdiction over campus code cases, elections law and constitutional violations.

The Honor Courts try all cases involving Honor Code violations. The Attorney General's office does the investigating; a jury decides whether the accused is innocent or guilty.

In the event the student is found guilty, the Honor Council decides the penalty.

Honor case trials are closed to the public for protection of those involved.

Right of appeal? Certainly. If a student thinks his trial was not conducted properly he may appeal to a student-faculty appellate court, made up of the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils, the chairman of the Student Council, and three faculty members.

All interested students are eligible to serve on the jury.

CWA Set Up For Those Not In A Sorority

The Carolina Women's Assn is the legislative organization of all UNC women students who do not belong to a sorority.

The group is made up of three representatives from each of the women's dormitories and three from the Town Girls Assn.

Its purposes are to promote extracurricular activities, aid other campus organizations, provide opportunities for independent coeds to participate in campus affairs, and to coordinate the activities of independent and sorority girls.

Speeding was blamed for 13,200 deaths on U. S. highways in 1957.

53,000 Americans were injured in car-bicycle mishaps in 1957.

Publications Offer Interesting Variety

Interested in publications? Here you have a choice of four major ones and several smaller ones.

The principal publications put out by students include The Carolina Quarterly, the Yackety-Yack, the Ram-Ewe, and The Daily Tar Heel.

All of these are connected with the Publications Board, which supervises their finances. This board does not exercise control over the different editors, however.

The Quarterly is the literary magazine, the publication to work on if you want to write creatively. Published three times a year, it is edited by John (Pepper) Tice, philosophy instructor. Its offices are in Graham Memorial.

The Yackety Yack is the annual. It is distributed one to a student, usually in late May. Editor for this year is Cameron Cooke of Durham. Offices are in Graham Memorial's basement.

The Ram-Ewe is the campus humor magazine. It has been in operation for one year, having replaced the old Tarnation. The Tarnation was forced to stop publishing year before last because of financial troubles. The editor is Samuel Varnedoe of Savannah, Ga.

The Daily Tar Heel is the campus newspaper, published daily except Monday. The paper is run entirely by students and is not subject to control by faculty or administration. It has no connection with the School of Journalism, although journalism students often work on the staff.

The paper often has had its rough moments. Twice in the last three years the editor has been forced to run in a recall election because of students' dissatisfaction with the editorial policies. The first recall was unsuccessful; last year the editor, Neil Bass of Spring Hope, was voted out of office. He was replaced by Douglas Eisele from Statesville.

Editor for this year is Curtis Gans, senior from Waynesville.

Other publications students may work on include those put out for orientation purposes, such as the Carolina Handbook, the Woman's Handbook, and the Interfraternity Handbook.

Students have been invited to work on the publication of their choice.

50 Students Comprise Legislative Arm Here

The lawmaking body on campus is the Student Legislature.

As far as its powers go it is analoguous to the state legislature and Congress.

Meeting every Thursday night, the legislature is presided over by the student body vice president—Ralph Cummings of Raleigh this year.

LEGISLATORS

Making up the legislature are fifty members elected from ten campus legislative districts. The legislators are members of either the Student Party or the University, the two political parties.

Among the legislature's powers are:

1. to make laws governing elections.
2. to ratify presidential appointments.
3. to determine offenses against the student body.
4. "to make all laws necessary and proper to promote the general welfare of the student body."

One of the biggest responsibilities of the legislature—a task that is shared with the Budget Committee—is the handling of the student budget.

USE OF FEES

Legislators determine how the student fees are to be used. Large amounts annually go to the Yackety-Yack, The Daily Tar Heel, and Graham Memorial.

The legislators come from both the Student Party and the University Party.

SP Chairman this year is Leon Holt from Julian. Leading the UP is Jack Lawing of Marion.

The SP's purpose, says Holt, is "to promote the welfare and best interests of the students . . ., by securing for student government the services of the best qualified students and by promoting within student government policies calculated to promote the interests of all students."

Any student endorsing the above statement can become a member of the SP, Holt said.

To become an official member you must attend two meetings and pay nominal dues, he said.

"The Advisory Board, operating only in an advisory capacity, formulates the legislative program, assumes the responsibility of the long-range planning of party activities, and supervises the elections campaigns.

"The success of the SP is indicated by its members who have continued to hold top student government offices, an accomplishment only attained by first proving to the students . . . that it is willing, capable, and qualified ti do an excellent job."

UP PURPOSE

UP Chairman said his party, formed in 1926, "has been functioning to encourage and support better student government through its platforms which reflect the student opinion, representing all portions of the campus."

To join the UP, Holt said, you must represent an organization or present a petition with 25 students' names on it.

The Student Party holds its meetings on Monday nights in Graham Memorial. The University Party meets on Tuesday nights.

Mrs. Markham Services Held

Graveside services were held Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock for Mrs. E. C. Markham at the Chapel Hill Cemetery.

The Rev. Vance Barron officiated at the service.

The wife of Prof. E. C. Markham, Mrs. Markham was fatally-injured in an automobile accident in California Aug. 30.

Surviving are Prof. Markham, a son, Allen W. Markham, and his wife of Chapel Hill, two grandchilhren, ann a naughter, Mrs. William Roach of New Jersey.

Museum Opening To Realize Long Dream

A Tennessean's life-long dream of a Southern art center will be realized here next month at ceremonies on the UNC campus.

The occasion will be the dedication of the William Hayes Ackland Art Center, planned for September 20. National art figures as well as state officials will be present for the opening of the newly-completed museum.

Ackland, a Washington, D. C. attorney, was born, reared and educated in Tennessee. But he thought beyond state boundaries in his dreams of creating a great Southern university art center.

Physical evidence of that dream is a handsome brick building, located on the northwest corner of the University campus, fronting on Columbia St. near its intersection with Franklin St.

LAST WILL

Ackland specified in his last will, executed in 1938, two years prior to his death at the age of 84, that his entire estate be used to construct a memorial building and to acquire art objects for exhibition in the museum.

Considerable legal action preceded the building of the art center at UNC. Ackland had originally named Duke University as recipient of the estate, with UNC and Rollins College as second choices, but later amended his will to stipulate Duke only.

Duke's rejection of the offer, following Ackland's death, saw the beginning of six years of litigation. In a 1943 decision, at the start of litigation, the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia stated:

"The actual beneficiaries of the trust were intended to be students and other members of the public throughout the South, interested in art, who should visit and use the building . . .

"The dominant idea in the mind of (Mr. Ackland) was the cause of art in the South. He intended that the site of his enterprise should be a university, with its well-known accompaniment of students, instructors, research and publication facilities, permanence of administration and of educational purposes."

Students at UNC will certainly benefit from the facilities of the center, which provides teaching and creative space for the Department of Art, formerly housed in Person Hall and part of Caldwell Hall.

Many visitors from the general public who come to enjoy art in the years ahead will certainly fulfill the dream of the Tennessean.

William Hayes Ackland grew up in a setting which cast the mold for his later interest in art and all things cultural.

His parents were Col. Joseph Alexander Smith Acklen, an Alabama attorney who saw Army service during the Mexican War, and Adelicia Hayes Acklen. Mrs. Acklen had been married first to Isaac Franklin, a wealthy Southern planter who owned property in Tennessee and in Louisiana.

The family home, "Belmont," near Nashville, Tenn., has been described as possessing an "atmosphere of culture and refinement."

Ranked as one of the finest in the south, it claimed "lawns laid out after the manner of Hampton Court and the mansion furnished with valuable paintings, pictures, rugs, china and other objects of art."

After his upbringing in such an environment, Ackland took undergraduate work at Nashville University and receved his law degree at Vanderbilt University.

During his extensive travels later in life, he visited leading art galleries in Europe and the United States. An avid student of art and literature, he spoke French and German fluently, and was well-versed in Greek and Latin. The classics, modern literature and oriental religions were other areas of his knowledge.

Ackland was well aware of the lack of facilities in the south for the study and appreciation of art—and felt that a great need existed for an outstanding art center.

Dignitaries will gather in Chapel Hill in less than a month to mark the realization of a dream come true.

Playmakers Bring Fame

The Carolina Playmakers organization has brought nation-wide fame to Carolina.

The Playmakers began as a pioneer fold theater over 40 years ago and since then has given performances in theaters from Boston to Texas, including several in New York City. Claiming to be nothing more than a university-community theatre, it often has proved to be the stepping-stone for many successful theater professionals.

The Playmakers' Theater is one of the University's oldest buildings located on Cameron Ave. across from Old East Dorm. During its his-

Schedule Announced For Library

The Louis Round Wilson Library will follow this schedule during freshman library orientation:

Tours will be held two days, starting Friday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. for freshmen men and transfer students.

On Saturday the freshmen men tour from 8:30-10 a.m. Freshmen women and transfers are scheduled from 10:15 a.m. to 13:15 p.m.

Screening tests will be held Monday-Wednesday, Sept. 15-17, at the Main desk of the Humanities Division.

Library lectures will be given freshmen from Sept. 22-25. Pharmacy and nursing freshmen will attend Sept. 29-Oct. 2. All lectures will be given in the Assembly Room, it has been announced.

The Library also announced several changes in the building.

The Reserve Reading Room is being painted. New tables and chairs have been ordered and are expected to be here by th first day of classes. Smoking will no longer be permitted in this room.

The former General College Library space will be organized as a group study and smoking area.

The Library will be able to seat twice as many undergraduates as last year with the combined resources of the undergraduate library, the Reserve Room, and the group study room, it has been announced.

Personnel changes include:

Promotion of Mrs. Audrey Zablocki to Principal Library Assistant (searcher), the position formerly held by Ray Carpenter in the Acquisitions Dept.

Promotion of Olin Murray, formerly in the Current Affairs Reading Room, to Principal Library Assistant in the Serial Sections, the position left vacant at Mrs. Zablocki's move.

Resignation of Murray MacDonald from the Catalog Dept., effective August 31.

Playmakers

tory, it has been everything from the University Library to the "University Stable."

It houses four of the six productions each year, while the annual musical comedy is presented in Memorial Hall and the spring outdoor production is at the Forest Theater, across the road from the Monogram Club.

Besides having produced such famous persons as Paul Green, Thomas Wolfe, Betty Smith, and Kermit Hunter, the UNC Dramatic Art Dept. has been the training ground for about 30 professionals recently working in New York's theaters and on television.

These include Andy Griffith, who starred in "No Time For Sergeants" before he was called to Hollywood; Bob Armstrong, who appears in "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof;" Dick Adler, collaborator on "Pajama Game;" Shepperd Strudwick, screen, TV, and stage actor; Douglas Watson, who has appeared in several successful Broadway productions, and many more.

The Playmakers tryouts and activities are completely open to the public and the student body. Anyone who is interested may try out for a part or gain valuable experience with the backstage work. The name "Playmakers" applies to anyone who has in any way helped on a production—often including representatives of such departments as statistics, history, and economic, as well as local housewives, merchants, clergymen, and members of the faculty.

Rosenstengel Library Given To University

The professional library of the late Dr. W. E. Rosenstengel, a member of the University faculty for 16 years, has been given as a memorial to the School of Education here.

His winow, Mrs. Frda W. Rosenstengel, has presented the collection, which is housed in a special section of the new Education School Library in Peabody Hall.

It contains most of the better-known volumes on school administration and several series of bound periodicals along with numerous monographs on particular subjects. The collection will be available to students at the University for research in school administration and will be especially helpful for work in the areas of school buildings and finance.

Tar Heel Gridders Look To Winning Season In '58

THE UNC CARDBOARD—For the new season a new bag of tricks to cheer the Tar Heels on their way to a possible Sugar Bowl invitation. President of the Cardboard is Pat Dooley. The over 2,000 students who sit in the card section make it possible for the tricks to be a success.

Tar Heels Face Ten Teams

A stiff schedule faces the Tar Heels in their bid for a trip to the Sugar Bowl and the Atlantic Coast Conference Championsip.

Not only do they have to wade through such strong opposition as Notre Dame, Southern California, and Tennessee, but they also have to face every member of the Atlantic Coast Conference at least once.

Clemson figures to be the number one test for the Tar Heels in the conference, but any of the three non-conference opponents could be difficult to knock off.

Next Saturday Jim Tatum's eleven, anxious to avenge a 7-0 beating at the hands of North Carolina State, meets the Wolfpack in a clash in which the Tar Heels will undoubtedly be favored to cop, since State has lost Dick Christy, their All-America halfback.

The following Saturday the team journeys to South Carolina to engage the Clemson Tigers in a contest that may well decide the winner of the Atlantic Coast Conference. Coach Frank Howard of Clemson has been building a team which figures to mature this year, and the battle can only be called a toss-up.

Despite the length of their trip, the Tar Heels are favorites to beat the Trojans of Southern California in their bout in California, Oct 3.

King Dixon, star of the South Carolina Gamecock team, may

(See TAR HEELS, Page 8)

Sugar Bowl Possibility

Sugar Bowl bound?

At least one national magazine as picked Jim Tatum's UNC football team to spend New Year's day playing football in New Orleans, and perhaps with some reason.

This year's eleven has shown promise of not only bettering its 6-4 record of last year, but of having one of the best season's of any in Carolina history.

The signal-calling position is three and four diep with talent, both holdover lettermen from last year and newcomers from the freshman team.

Heading the quarterback brigade is Jack Cummings who is getting a run for his money this fall from Nelson Lowe, a junior who played only one game last year.

Cummings, already holding one school record for his passing in the Virginia game last year, may turn out to be one of the best quarterbacks that the Tar Heels ever possessed.

Russ Hollers and Skip Clement, two sophomores with unusual promise, complete the quarterback corps.

Somebody said early last week, that this would be a year for aerial artistry. That prophecy may well hold true with four capable flingers at quarterback.

In all twenty-three lettermen are returning from last year's Tar Heel team. The big loss was that of end Buddy Payne, who captained last year's squad.

The large job of filling Payne's shoes falls to Mac Turlington, Don Kemper, and Al Goldstein, all of whom seem capable of doing more than an adequate job in the pass snaring positions.

Co-captain Phil Blazer heads an impressive list of proven linemen and ascending newcomers at the tackle slots. Blazer, a senior from Whitaker, Pa., is potentially an All-American and during the early practice sessions of this season has been living up to his billing.

Behind him Don Redding and Don Stallings are the ones' most likely to see a good deal of action during the season, but the position is stacked deep in capable men.

Lettermen Fred Swearingen and Jack Lineberger are expected to lead the Tar Heels at guard, however, this still depends on whether Lineberger's neck responds well after the injury he suffered last season.

Fred Mueller and Frank Riggs will take most of the slack out of he position, and seem to be almost as capable as the two regulars of ast year.

The center slot is capably filled by Ronnie Koes, who was a standout last year and should be even better this year. Giving him a big hand at the position will be Rip Hawkins, a sophomore standout in spring practice.

Sonny Folckomer, showing brilliant form in practice, may be the dark horse to cop one of the starting halfback slots. He faces stiff competition fir the post in the persons of Jim Schuler, Emil DeCantis nd Daley Goff, all lettermen from ast year. Wade Smith and Danny Droze should add depth to the halfback picture.

A real battle is being waged for he fullback slot between Don Coker and Don Klockak, a returnee from the service. Both are powerful runners, and both should see much ction this year.

Ed Lipski will be up their fighting for a starting berth also and his experience during last year's campaign out to bear him in good stead is year.

The only severe blow the Tar Heels have suffered so far is the loss of co-captain Curtis Hathaway whose broken arm sustained last spring was failed to mend. He probably will miss the entire season.

What with the new substitution rules, making it possible for Carolina to draw on its depth at every position, the Tar Heels and Jim Tatum may well go all the way to the Sugar Bowl. Who knows? They may win that too.

Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 16-17, registration for all new students and all former students not pre-registered at the University will take place.

Harrier Hopes High For '58 Team Title

A healthy Wayne Bishop and an ever-improving Dave Scurlock promise Carolina a top cross-country team this year and perhaps a repeat of the Atlantic Coacht Conference title the team won last year.

Gone from last year's team is Ev Whatley, but the nucleus of the team is still there, and many have been running most of the summer and are in fine condition.

Coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton look forward to a highly successful year.

Bishop was unbeaten last year in cross country competition and a repeat of that record is in sight.

The person to give Bishop the most trouble may be Dave Scurlock who is during track season a middle distance runner, but who copped second place in last year's ACC competition.

The Harriers have other runners returning. Cowles Lipfert who showed great ability last year will be returning along with Doug Henderson and Alex Coffin.

Joe Friedberg ought to be ready to compete this year, a host of freshman stars are to come back.

Harvey Miller, Worth Sweet, Neal Chappell, Bobby Foxworth, and John Bowles are all returning to make the two coaches life easier.

The strength and depth of the team will be tested early when they face Clemson at Carolina Oct. 4. The dual meet will be followed by another against Virginia here Oct. 10.

Maryland and Wake Forest invade for a triangular meet Oct. 28 to be followed by a dual meet with N. C. State Oct. 22.

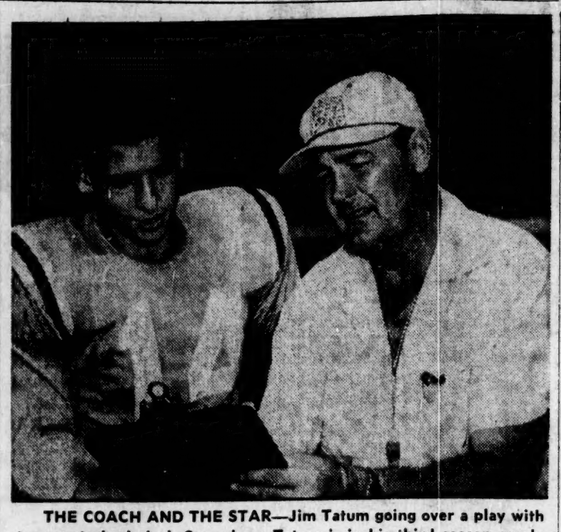
Three New Rules

There are three new rules on the football books that may make for more interesting action on the field this year.

The most controversial of these is the two point rule which enables a team to score two points if it runs or passes for a point after touchdown rather than kicking. A kicked point after touchdown will still count one point.

A second rule which ad many coaches up in arms is the one-armed block rule which is designed to make the game safer and to prevent as many injuries occuring from rough blocking.

Thirdly, teams may substitute more freely, which will probably work as a test of reserve strength during the season. There may be at least a partial return to the two platoon football that was prevalent a few years ago when free substitution was in vogue.



THE COACH AND THE STAR—Jim Tatum going over a play with star quarterback Jack Cummings. Tatum is in his third season coaching the Tar Heels after fourteen years away from Carolina. Cummings is currently having a fight to keep his starting berth from Nelson Lowe.

CU Day First Of Many Festive Football Days

Festivities will highlight all of the Carolina home football games thiis season.

800 girls from Woman's College in Greensboro will be over for the initial tilt with North Carolina State. State will have a contingent of some 4,500 students to fill the stands for Consolidated University Day.

Both the State Band and the UNC band will perform during the halftime festivities, but the big event of the day will be the choosing of a queen from three candidates selected from each school. Following the game there is a probability of a dance to be held that evening.

A new feature of the game will be the wooden goalposts erected so that both winning and losing sides can vent their emotions without damage to anything of value.

Dave Jones, president of the University Club, and Chuck Erickson, director of athletics are working with people from State to found a permanent trophy between the two schools like the Little Brown Jug of Minnesota-Michigan fame.

The South Carolina game will be Dad's Day, and parents of UNC students are cordially invited to attend, according to Erickson.

The Maryland contest will be a gala Homecoming Day and will have the added attraction that students can bring their dates at half-price. 1000 date tickets will be available at the special rate.

The University Club will sponsor a beauty contest.

The following week Bands from all over the State will participate in band day at Kenan Stadium.

The traditional "Beat Dook" parade sponsored by the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity in which groups from all over the campus make floats and ride down Franklin St. A queen of the parade will be selected as well as the winners of the best float prizes in at least two divisions.

The rivalry between Duke and UNC is highlighted by the bell that the victor is allowed to keep with his victory.

At every home game, The Cardboard will perform its card tricks that have made the organiztaion famous throughout the East.

The Cardboard was founded in 1948, and has greatly grown from its start.

Carolina Booters Look To Better 1957 Record

When the Carolina soccer team takes on Lynchburg College at home Oct, 4, the Tar Heels will be looking to better their 2-3-2 record of last year. They are looking possibly to take the Conference championship that was knocked out of their grasp last year by kep injuries and close defeats.

Coach Marvin Allen can be hopeful though, for only three regulars were lost from last year's booters and many freshmen who showed up well during the freshman season last year are coming up to the varsity.

Last year's leading varsity scorer Mike Thompsón will be back at the center forward position and will probably be better for last season's experience. Coleman Barks, Tom Rand, Charlie Whitefield, Rick Grausman, and Tom Ghanim are all competing for the four other forward slots.

Moreover, they have competition coming up from the freshman team in the person of Joe Perkins, Charlie Lipscome, Martin Perez, and Dick Hutson.

Jim Rattay will probably be back as goal tender, although he was injured last year.

The back situation is les clear with only two starters back from the 1957 squad. Hugh Goodwin looks like a sure bet for center halfback and Dave Corkey may take over the right fullback chores.

Bob Borden is another holdover from the booters and may play left-halfback.

Coach Allen will have to fill the vacant spots with freshmen and also he hopes to have some newcomers interested in soccer trying out.

Coach Allen has guided the booters for several seasons and has also taught physical education.

The team faces a stiff test after Lynchburg on Oct. 17 when they face Virginia.

After that they go on the road to play Washington & Lee and Pfeiffer College Oct. and 31 respectively, before returning to Carolina.

A three game final home stand pits the Tar Heel booters against Roanoke Nov. 4, against State, trying to avenge their defeat last year, Nov. 7, and against traditionally tough Davidson Nov. 14.

Maryland, perennially the conference kingpin or near kingpin, will be the next test Nov. 17, and the team closes out its season with Duke Nov. 21.

After a year in the doldrums and provided the team stays while, Carolina's booters may do very well this year.

Tar Heels

make life difficult for Tatum's crew, but the North Carolina eleven is a pre-season favorite to take the game on Oct. 11, back in Chapel Hill.

Homecoming day with Maryland is predicted to be happy, for the Tar Heels, anxious to avenge the defeat they sustained last year before Queen Elizabeth, are stronger this year, while the Terps have not improved noticeably.

Wake Forest will be trying to rebound from last year's all-losing season, but may find difficulty here on the last Saturday of the Tar Heel's long home stand.

The Tar Heels are looking for trouble, when they journey to Tennessee, Nov. 1, to meet the single-wing Volunteers. Tennessee beat Carolina last year, and at least one magazine predicts the same result this year.

TAR HEEL COACHING STAFF—The brain trust that makes it possible to turn out a winning team and the trainers who help the players with their every-day-on-the-field needs. Many are UNC alumni and most have either worked under Jim Tatum (left front) as players, as coaches, or both.

Tar Heel Coaching Staff Helps Mold UNC Eleven

It takes many men to mold a winning football team. The coaching staff needs to be competent from top to bottom.

Jim Tatum has assembled a strong coaching staff for this year's team, and the fate of the team rests at least partly in their hands.

Tatum himself perhaps needs no introduction. He graduated from UNC in 1935. He started out as an assistant coach to Carl Snavely at Cornell, and then returned to UNC as director of freshman athletics and head football coach for one year.

He coached later at Oklahoma, but received his real fame at Maryland where he produced five bowl game competitors and won one national championship.

He has compiled over the years a 94 win, 31 defeat, and 6 tie record and seems destined to go over the hundred with mark this year.

Emmett Cheek, an assistant to Tatum at Maryland, is handling a major portion of the scouting of opposition teams.

Cheek also is helping out with the linemen, and handles the players' files.

Ed Kensler was a lineman at Maryland under Tatum, before coming to UNC to help Tatum out with the chore of training lineman. He coached previously at Washington and Lee and at V.M.I.

A former athletic director at of UNC's most able football aides Wake Forest has turned into one in the Person of Pat Preston who also starred for Wake Forest in the early '40's.

Ernie Williamson, a UNC graduate, was brought here as a talent scout and head of the Educational Foundation, Inc. He was since helped out during off-season with some of the coaching duties.

Fred Tullai came with Tatum when Tatum made the switch from Marylan dto UNC three years ago. At first he served as freshman coach but afterward he was made an assistant to the varsity coaching staff.

Perhaps the most well known of the coaching staff is George Barclay former football coach of Carolina, who was an All-America at UNC during his playing days. He came out of semi-retirement in private business last year in order to help with the coaching duties for the Carolina eleven.

Barclay worked under Tatum for three years at Maryland as well as coaching at Oberlin, Dartmouth, and V.M.I. He was formerly head coach at Washington and Lee.

Leon Carson will bt coaching the freshman team. Carson is the newest member of the coaching staff and formerly played for Carolina under Carl Snavely from 1948-51.

Jake Wade as usual is handling the sports publicity for the Carolina eleven.

Head trainer for the team is John Lacey who worked under Tatum for five years at Maryland before coming to Carolina. Lacey will be assisted by Warren Morris.

Morris also asisted Lacey at Maryland.

The senior manager of the team will be Don Buckley and Jim Long, the latter is also chairman of the Student Council in student government work.

UNC FALL ENROLLMENT CLIMBS OVER 7,300

Bell Tower Parking Required For Sophs, Says New Regulation

All General College students having cars on campus will be required to park in the lot beside the Bell Tower, student body President Don Furtado has announced.

Students coming under this new ruling must park in this 500-car lot from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday, and from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturdays.

Furtado said they may park anywhere else after these hours.

COURT POWER

Failure to comply with the new regulations, he said, gives the Student Traffic Court the authority to revoke automobile privileges of students involved.

The new ruling, presented to the student body president last spring by the Bell Tower Parking Lot Committee, "has been adopted and will be the plan under which we will operate during the coming year," Furtado said.

This plan was adopted, he said, rather than restricting all freshman and sophomores from having cars. Currently, the only General College students eligible to keep cars here are sophomores with a C average.

"Student government, as well as the administration, dislikes requiring any student to park in any set area . . . ," he said.

JUSTIFIES REQUEST

He said he also thought "full utilization" of the $75,000 lot will justify Chancellor Aycock's request for additional funds with which to build more lots.

Furtado pointed out three things about the new rules:

1. Any student may still park his car in private parking areas such as fraternity, sorority, and apartment lots.

2. Any student may use the Bell Tower Lot space at any time. Unless General College students have private parking space they must park in this lot during the hours already mentioned.

3. Violation of the new rules gives the Student Traffic Court the authority to revoke car privileges for any students involved.

The present regulation prohibiting freshman—and sophomores without a C average—from having a car on campus was put into effect in 1956 by Bob Young, then student body president.

Furtado said the number of cars has increased steadily, since then, despite Young's action.

The Student Traffic Advisory Commission reported last year that there were twice as many cars here as there were parking spaces on the campus, he said.

The Bell Tower Lot was built summer a year ago for $75,000. It holds 500 cars.

Crackdown Is Planned On Violators - Lanham

Over 3,000 student-owned motor vehicles are expected in Chapel Hill, according to Mike Lanham, chairman of the Student Traffic Council.

Lanham said traffic violators will be dealt with more strictly this year in an effort to minimize the University's traffic problem. Failure to register cars will be considered Honor Code violations, and offenders subject to trial.

Violators of the restriction violations, persons whose motor vehicles does not display a registration sticker and persistent violators of Chapel Hill regulations and campus parking regulations will be tried in accordance with rules as defined in the by-laws of the Council, he explained.

An ascending scale of punishment and fines will be applied. All fines, he said, will be used to supplement automobile registration fees in the enforcement and administration of traffic and parking regulartions.

According to Lanham, the Student Traffic Council has the power to suspend indefinitely a person's motor vehicle privilege at the University. Council authority will extend approximately one block from the campus in all directions.

Under present regulations freshmen and sophomores who do not attain a "C" average during their freshman year are prohibited from having motor vehicles at the University.

Commuters, veterans and pysically handicapped students are exempt from these restrictions with the approval of the Office of Student Affairs.

Students enrolled in the General College, with the exception of the physically handicapped, will be required to park in the new Bell Tower Parking Lot.

According to Lanham, distinctive red stickers have been printed for upperclassmen. White stickers have been printed for car owners who are required to park in the Bell Tower Lot.

Further Rules Are Denied By Jefferies

Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies has denied a rumor that the Student Traffic Council is considering denying cars to all University students with the exception of second semester seniors.

He explained that he was referring to regulations to be put into effect this year at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, Va.

Ackland Museum Dedication Set For Saturday Morning

The William Hayes Ackland Art Center will be dedicated here Saturday at 10 a.m.

Highlighting the ceremony will be the dedication talk by a noted art educator and author, S. Lane Faison Jr. of Williamstown, Mass., and an exhibition of works of art from colleges and universities throughout the nation.

Faison, head of the Williams College Art Dept., will speak on "The Role of the College Museum in America." Introducing him will be Dr. Joseph Curtis Sloane, director of the new center.

S. LANE FAISON
. . . dedication speaker

Dr. Sloan, also chairman of the Art Dept. here will officially take office Feb. 1, 1959. He is currently at Bryn Mawr College.

Art authorities from throughout the nation, as well as state officials, are expected to be on hand for the opening of the center, named for its donor, William Hayes Ackland.

A native of Nashville, Tennessee who amassed a fortune as a Washington attorney, Ackland lamented the scarcity of paintings and other works of art in the South, and he resolved to establish an art center at a "great southern university." He died in 1940 at the age of 84, and his will provided for his "dream."

The Ackland bequest made possible the construction of the beautiful $1,000,000 art center, with galleries, studios, clasroom nad research facilities—one of the most modern collegiate art centers in the world.

Aside from the building and equipment there remains in the endowment over a million dollars, the income from which will provide about $40,000 a year for art objects: paintings, sculpture, drawings, etchings and the like.

A special "preview" for the faculty will be held on Friday evening, September 19, from 8 to 10 p.m. The inaugural exhibition will remain on display for one month, through October 20. The galleries will be open daily from 2 to 5 p.m.

PARTICIPANTS

Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside at exercises, and President William C. Friday will welcome visitors. Edson B. Olds of Washington, D. C., an Ackland trustee and close personal friend of the donor will present the building. John E. Larson, of Washington, who is counsel for te Ackland trustees will make comments relating to the Ackland bequest.

William D. Carmichael Jr., vice president of the Consolidated University who has handled details of the effort to establish the art center will accept the building in behalf of the University. The family and members of the law firm of the late O. Max Gardner will be honored guests.

Other invited guests include Gov-

Housing Situation Still A Problem

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

Classes are expected to start today with approximately 7,300 students enrolled in the University, according to an estimate made last month.

Around 2,100 new students, including 1,100 freshmen, were oriented to the campus last week.

Seventeen Negroes were expected to be included among the new entronts. One is an Undergraduate and two are graduate coeds. The others are doing graduate work.

The housing situation continues to be a problem. Tuesday night around 15 students spent the night in the basement of Cobb Dormitory, J. E. Wadsworth, director of the housing office, said.

There is still a squeeze on the married students. "Most apartments in town are taken," Wadsworth explained. However he noted the townspeople had been better about letting the housing office know about the availability of rooms.

The housing status for women was described as "very comfortable" by Miss Isabelle MacLeod, executive secretary of the Dean of Women's Office.

"Housing has been worked out very satisfactory; the biggest problem has been in finding space for the graduate students in Chapel Hill homes," she commented.

Registration ended yesterday afternoon. Late registration with a $5 fine will be held today.

Drop-add begins today. The schedule will be: today and Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Saturday, 8 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

Some changes have been made in the capacities and uses of dorms. Whitehead has been turned into a women's dorm. Grimes will be predominantly occupied by law students.

Steele and Smith-Evergreen will no longer be used as dorms. Three new dorms behind Woollen Gym have been opened—Avery, Parker and Teague.

LONDON, UP — Radio Moscow said Wednesday the Russians probably will be forced to resume nuclear weapons tests. It declared "The western powers are simply forcing the Soviet Union to take back its word."

Program Scheduled On CU Day

Consolidated University Day will be held Saturday.

Selection of a CU queen, a reception after the game for about 1,000 Woman's College girls, and a dance in Woollen Gym that night are among the events planned.

Nine contestants—three girls each from State, WC, and Carolina—will be presented at half-time Saturday. The CU queen will be crowned at the dance.

Selection of the three UNC coeds will be made tonight at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall, according to an announcement.

Twenty two busloads of WC girls will arrive at 1:15 p.m. at the west side of the stadium parking lot.

After the game the girls will be guests at a reception held in front of Graham Memorial. In case of rain the event will be moved to the Tin Can.

A popular Chapel Hill combo will provide music for the reception, according to the Consolidated University Student Council. CUSC and Graham Memorial are co-sponsors.

The dance will be held at 8 p.m. in Woollen Gym. Admission will be $1, stag or drag; WC girls will be damitted free, it has been announced by CUSC and the Order of the Holy Grail, co-sponsors.

The CUSC is an organization on the campuses of State, WC, and UNC for the purpose of uniting the three Consolidated University branches on social and intellectual planes.

Northern Lights May Be Visible

It's just possible you may see the northern lights here several times during the rest of September.

UNC cosmic ray experts and astronomers say several more manifestations of the Aurora Borealis will be visible to the naked eye.

Physicists pointed out that the lights are not uncommon this far south once every 11 years.

They say this is because the lights are especially strong when there are sun spot, or signs of special activity on the sun. This occurs in eleven-year cycles, and this is the eleventh year.

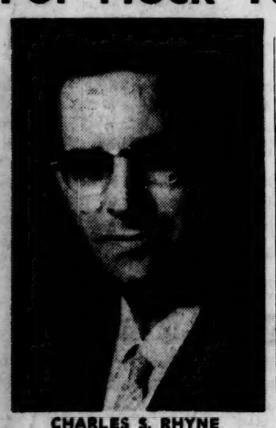
Because of the changing position of the earth in relation to the sun, it is also likely that the lights are visible during March and September.

The coincidence of the 11th year cycle and the month of September accounts for the likelihood of continued display of the northern lights at latitudes this far south.

Professor Everett D. Palmatier, chairman of the Physics Dept. and an authority on cosmic rays, said recently the remarkable "fire" seen in the skies earlier this year is likely to be repeated again this month.

Morehead Planetarium Director Anthony Jenzano compared the lights to a neon light—electricity passing through gas to cause a glow because it is in a vacuum. The same sort of thing happens as rays pass through gasses to cause the aurora phenomenon.

Charles Rhyne Slated For Heck Talk Friday



CHARLES S. RHYNE
. . . to kick off lecture series

Charles S. Rhyne, past president of the American Bar Assn., will speak here tomorrow night as a Heck Lecturer in the School of Law.

The Law Students Assn. will sponsor Rhyne's speech, set for 8 p.m. in Manning Hall and open to the public.

FIRST IN SERIES

It will be the first 1958-59 event in the Heck Lecture Series, which is supported by a fund set up by George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y., the Law School's oldest living alumnus.

LSA president Joseph B. Chambliss of Rocky Mount will preside at the program.

A native of Mecklenburg County, Rhyne took undergraduate and law studies at Duke University, and completed his LL.B. degree at George Washington University Law School in 1937.

He is a senior partner in the firm of Rhyne, Mullin, Connor and Rhyne in Washington, D. C., and is general counsel for the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers.

Holder of many offices in the American Bar Assn. during the past 16 years, Rhyne has been a leader in other legal oragnizations including the Bar Assn. of the District of Columbia, which he headed in 1955-56.

In the past Rhyne has lectured at American University Graduate School and at George Washington University Law School on federal, state and city relations, and on aviation law.

WHILE YOU WERE GONE:

There Was No Summer Slump Around Campus

COMPILED BY CLARKE JONES

Several important news stories occurred while you were gone during the summer.

Included are:

1. Visit of a Russian student group whose leader drew sharp criticism from News Bureau Director A. G. (Pete) Ivey;

2. The first truly international congress in the field of humanities;

3. Anniversary celebrations of North Carolina Memorial Hospital and Chi Phi fraternity;

SUMMARIES OF THE STORIES:

A group of ten Russian students visited the UNC campus in early August. Its leader, 34-year-old Evgenii Bugrov, consented to a press conference.

The time, however, conflicted with a Gov. Hodges conference, and a new time was set.

As a result only one reporter showed up.

Ivey waited ten days, then wrote an appraisal of the group's visit. He said Bugrov was "a model of modern Soviet double talk and tricky footwork." Ivey also called him "two-faced."

He said (Soviet Premier Nikita) "Krushchev would have been proud of the tactics Bugrov used at Chapel Hill."

Daily Tar Heel Editor Curtis Gans, then acting student body president during Don Furtado's absence, strongly disagreed with Ivey's appraisal.

Gans said Ivey ". . . forgot his responsibility to the facts" somewhere along the line.

"It could hardly be called Bugrov's fault that (Gov. Hodges) decided to call a press conference at the time that a Chapel Hill press conference for the Russians was scheduled."

Chancellor William B. Aycock stood by Ivey, saying the News Bureau official had the right to report his appraisal of the tour.

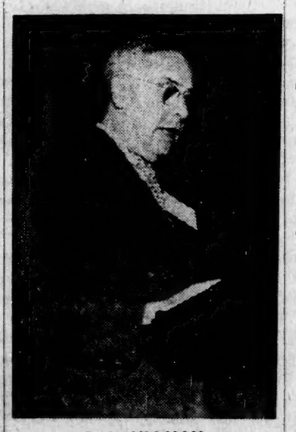
"Ivey is regarded by me as a fair and impartial reporter of the news," Aycock said.

LITERATURE CONGRESS

The International Comparative Literature Assn., the first truly international congress in the field of humanities held in this country, wound up the meeting last Saturday by electing two presidents, one a UNC professor.

Selected as joint presidents were Professor Werner P. Friedrich and Professor Marcel Bataillon of the College de France in Paris.

Dr. Friedrich is chairman of the UNC Comparative Literature Curriculum. He organized the congress along with Professor Jacques Voisine of the Univesrity of Lille in France.



B. L. ULLMAN
. . . at literature congress

Professor Bataillon, official administrator of the College de France, is a specialist in Spanish and Portuguese literature and in the literary and historical relations between the Iberian Peninsula and Latin America.

Two grants from the Ford Foundation and from the American Council of Learned Societies made possible the congress, attended by more than 240 scholars from Europe, the Americas, Australia, Japan, Indonesia, Ceylon, Poland and Yugoslavia.

ANNIVERSARIES

The sixth anniversary of the opening of N. C. Memorial Hospital was observed Tuesday, Sept. 2.

A buffet dinner was held that night in the hospital cafeteria honoring staff members and employees who have continuously served the hospital and the school of Medicine for five or more years.

Brief talks were given by Dr. Robert R. Cadmus, ohspital director; Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of the School of Medicine; and Dr. Nathan Womack, chairman of the school's Dept. of Surgery and chief of staff of the hospital.

The first patient admitted to the hospital was Mrs. John F. Bolton of West End. Since then patients from each of the state's 100 counties have been admitted. The hospital is owned and operated by the people of North Carolina.

Celebrating its 100th birthday Sept. 3 was the local chapter of Chi Phi fraternity.

Delegates from all over the country came for the celebration, which ran through Sept. 6. The annual Chi Phi Congress was held.

The local chapter was founded here August 21, 1858.

Helping the local unit in its position as host were Roy Armstrong, former admissions director and now Director of the Morehead Foundation; J. Maryon Saunders, Alumni Assn. secretary; and J. Arthur Branch, University business manager.

Students assisting were Charlie Dameron of Asheville, and Jim Purks of Raleigh, co-chairmen. Bobby Mauldin of China Grove also took part.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Roland Daley Goff Jr., Boyd Ray Barrier, James Lewis Sigmon Jr., Bryan Wilson Roberts, and Miss Julia Sue Ayers.

Unless

(The following is reprinted from the freshman issue of The Daily Tar Heel. The editor feels that this perhaps is the shortest-and best comment he could make on what is necessary to resurrect the University and American democracy in general. It is written for freshmen, but perhaps its message is more far reaching.)

The year starts and it is a new experience for many. For many, billed by their high school presidents or school superintendents in a somewhat less than eloquent commencement speech as America's future leaders or citizens of tomorrow, the change will be quite drastic. For most the change is predictable.

There will be first the interminable orientation with meetings, meetings and more meetings, some of which will be skipped by the new students. They will hear many words about the Carolina tradition of freedom, about the Honor System, and about student government and activities in general. They will be told that a proper balance between scholarship and other interests will have to be made.

With much new found wisdom the student will go to his dormitory and get ready for the first day of classes.

Soon the student finds out that the Honor System does not work too well, and that the noise in many dormitory corridors makes study impossible and life only a little unhappy. At about this time they also find that one in five, if that many, professors that they have for freshman courses are interesting—not even stimulating.

So, quite early about one-fourth of them pledge fraternities and more than half of those are never seen doing something useful for themselves between that time and graduations. Others will take out their sorrows on the Tempo Room or the Rathskeller late in the evening, and others still will shortly drop out.

Almost all will forget their academic load until before the quiz and then assimilate what is necessary for quick regurgitation on the next day. They will be attuned to assimilating fact temporarily without placing the fact into context. They will be attuned not to think, and even those who came here not looking for a higher paying job as the primary result of a college education, will give up their goal early.

Those persistent enough to continue with intellectual pursuit will find it difficult to find people to converse with about anything save liquor, sex, and past experiences. A feeble attempt will be made by some to participate in activities, but for most this will mean lines in a yearbook rather than a personal contribution.

By the end of their sophomore year, those who have not received a high office will retire permanently to the bar stool or the uncomfortable cots that grace most dormitories and fraternities. They will content themselves with the activity of a Saturday night party or the intellectual pursuit of Mickey Mantle's batting average. They will be by the end of college little changed for the better by their four years.

They will be reactors rather than thinkers. They will be waiters rather than doers. They will be part of society at the expense of their own individuality. They will be intellectually dead.

There will be several who will become "teachers," but there will be but one or two teachers. There will be a few who will become "lawyers," but there may be one lawyer. There will be many writers and businesmen, but few will see their writings in print and few will rise above wanting to make the most money for themselves. There will be some scientists, but few with the perspective to place the greatly growing body of knowledge into. There will be a few "leaders" and probably no leader. Many will not finish school.

Those that do finish will listen to a brilliant commencement speech by a famous person and comment on how brilliant the speech was largely because they know that the person must be famous for some reason. Few will question how and why he got his fame and almost no one will carry the words of the speaker into life.

Embarking on the long voyage of life outside the ivory tower, "America's future leaders" will be the same generation as the last. They will plunge themselves into Spanish-American Wars, as quickly as they react "Coca-Cola" to "The Pause That Refreshes." They will hear the word communist, socialist, radical, non-comformist, and even individualist and react negatively not knowing what they are reacting to, but blindly taking somebody else's word for it.

In they the future leaders, as they have been called, lies not the hope of America but the promise of its annihilation in an age when annihilation can be accomplished easily.

This will happen as surely as you are reading this, UNLESS . . . .

Unless they as individuals try to find what they are and preserve the uniqueness of themselves.

Unless they resist the tide that chips at and ebbs away the curiosity that should be native to students.

Unless they become actively critical of their society and work, not just gripe, toward its improvement.

Unless they realize that reality is not a social whirl but rather is a problem worth coming to grips with and working out on a day to day basis.

Unless they shake the cliches and customs that society has forced upon them and they have accepted as making it the easiest way.

Unless they refuse to subvert themselves at all times to the will of the group.

Unless they think.

The wading against the stream is the most difficult. It demands courage and endurance. A successful passage, however, has rewards that far outnumber any of those received going another way. The road to a personal sense of well-being lies this way; the road to a personal Hell lies in the other direction.

The alternatives are clear. It is their choice. They will probably make the wrong one.

New Students: New Directions?

Radicleer

Cort Edwards II

Another year has rolled around and we are once again faced with another year of academic strife.

How many will parry this strife? How many will fail? How many will be asked to secede from the University? How many will meet the requirements and pass upward and onward?

The answers to these questions are, of course, unknown. In a year or perhaps even less, the answers will be recorded in the book. But who cares?

The real test cannot be put on paper; yet everyone must take it. There is no set group of questions to be answered; yet everyone is exposed to them. There is no one correct set of answers; yet 90 per cent, a most conservative figure, will fail. There is no one to correct the test; yet each test is graded.

What is this test that is so difficult and that so many people fail?

The test is in LIVING and the endpoint is in becoming a MAN. We are born as animals. We are animals. Only we have one addidon't have. We can think; that is, tional ability that other animals we are born with the ability to think. But how many people do? Most people live as animals and die the same way.

Man is a thinking animal born with an opportunity to become a man.

It is time for each of us to look deep within ourselves. We must discover our motives for being here. Are they merely materialistic motives? They shouldn't be. We must try to recognize ourselves as what we are. We must try to shake off our animal-selves and try to achieve individuality.

Can we really be honest with ourselves? It is most difficult and painful to see what we really are. For deep inside us there is no normality. We each have our perversions, our idiocyncracies, and our fetiches. Normality is part of our outside behavior; the part that other people see.

To be able to introspect is the first big step on the road to "Mandom." It is not necessarily important that we try to change some of the "Bad" things within ourselves. It is, however, very important for us to be able to recognize them first, and then accept them as an important and integral part of our being.

The next thing we must do is to set our actions towards accomplishing that which is man's purpose. If we can attain this height then we can truly say that we have become a MAN.

How wonderful it would be to die wth the knowledge that during our life time we were able to overthrow our animal instincts and really and truly become a man.

Man's purpose in life is not to marry well, or to get a better job, or to die rich, or to die poor, or to die a corporation manager, or to wage wars.

Man's purpose in life is to be able to live with one's fellow man in total peace and harmony. Can there be anything more noble than this?

Just Chattin'

School bells ring and children sing, it's back to UNC again . . .

Riding to Raleigh the other night with two student government leaders who had just returned from the National Student Association Congress in Delaware, Ohio, I was impressed by one of the statements which I heard.

It went as follows: "The University of North Carolina once had the best student government in the United States. Now this student government is more of a fantasy because interest in youthful autonomy has reached a low ebb.

This is a sad state of affairs. New students have just finished a week of Orientation in which they have seen the best side of Carolina life. Student officers, honor Council leaders, orientation counselors, faculty and administration have all attempted to instill in the minds of the new that there is much to be proud of when you are a student on this campus.

Now, the young academicians who have so recently matriculated to alma mater will come face to face with the other side of the story. They will see boys who do nothing but play seven card stud in a dorm room, fraternity men who have little more to do than to drink a tall Bud, dormitory women who are too busy with petty problems to offer anything to the school, sorority girls who make a farce out of the Campus Code, teachers who care nothing for the individual et cetera.

This is the great crisis at Carolina. Over and over again you will find it easier to "follow the crowd." But, the crowd, as you will soon discover, is going nowhere. It is skirting on the brink of disaster, in a personal connotation.

It has no purpose. It has no goals. It lacks any direction. Leadership does not exist in the crowd. Ambition is a non-entity. Drive is not there.

No member of the crowd can be a leader. No member of the crowd will ever find his name among the ranks of the Golden Fleece. No member of the crowd will ever know respect.

Leadership is lacking on this campus. Out of each class will come only four or five students who are willing to sacrifice their personal motives in order that the group as a whole may profit. The work in each organization will be done by one or two dedicated individuals. The rest will only participate so that at the end of four years, their senior picture will have under it a few organizations to which they belonged. However, in a true sense, they will not belong.

This is our challenge as young Americans. These are the goals to pursue. This is our reason to be living. We must have a purpose.

This University will give more to us than we can ever repay. Yet by adding some contribution to our way of life, we can somewhat reduce our debt.

As Student Body President Don Furtado said the other night, "this nation cannot wait much longer for leadership."

The road to hell is paved with good intentions.

There are still great issues for students ot fight for, things to be done, situations to be corrected and previous mistakes to be rectified.

Essence

Don Dotson

An item on a sociology final was: Give a working definition of the University of North Carolina. Obviously there could be many responses to this question. To give one answer that would suffice for all purposes would be impossible and to list the many possibilities would be like trying to count the bricks in the University's sidewalks.

Part of any such definition, certainly, would be devoted to what the University consists of. It is easy to think of an institution as a great colossus—great and foreboding, static and hard. For most people this is their concept of the University. In reality this is not the case. For, unlike the Great Colossus itself, the University is not just a mass, not just grand old buildings and great trees. This place has not hallowed itself spontaneously and it will not perpetuate itself interminably. What we know of the greatness of the University—the people it has touched and the people who have touched it is not our unconditional guarantee that "things" will always be "that way." We must know instead that the very efforts, the very ideas, the very contributions of individuals over a long period of time are what have perpetuated the University and made it great. Even at this, it is easy to think that the greatness is permanent and has been consistant—and again this is untrue. tution has known the ebb and tutino has known the ebb and rise of human endeavor and human conflict. It always will.

At the present and in the future this very University of which every student and every graduate is an individual but connected part will be subject to new efforts, ideas, and contributions—new endeavors and new conflicts. As advances are built, one on another, so we are not the expressionless victims of a set past. We are the means, the only potential, for expression and perpetuation of this change —progress. The vital substances of progress are people and the present.

Furtado Asks Faculty Help

(The following is a letter sent by Student Body President Don Furtado to all faculty members regarding the University absence regulation.)

Last spring, after a great amount of discussion and individual contemplation by the members of the Faculty Council, our old and often impractical class attendance regulations were abandoned in favor of a more satisfactory system which allows the individual instructor to decide what attendance requirements, if any, he desires to maintain.

For both the student and the instructor, this system is a distinct improvement over our former plan, for it allows the instructor to take into consideration his own personal beliefs on the theory of mandatory class attendance and the individual student's needs, as well as the nature of the course being taught. In addition, the new discretionary system allows the instructor, if he wishes, to elimnate a valuable period of class tme at the beginning of each session often devoted to roll-calling.

Most instructors have realized the intent of our new class attendance regulations and have accordingly set up highly flexible rules which have proven satisfactory to everyone involved. Much to our regret, however, a few instructors have used their discretionary power to institute excessively strict regulations of a completely unrealistic and impractical nature, forgetting that the best way to guarantee good class attendance is to make each session meaningful and rewarding.

On behalf of the students, it is my request that you, as an active member of our educational community, will do all that you can to influence your fellows to make our new attendance regulations a working system rather than an admirable theory.

I apologize for the undesirable medium of a form letter, but I am sure you understand that this is the only means of expressing our hopes on ths problem to each of you.

DON FURTADO, President
Student Body

United States' Disease: Intellectual Attrition

The Saturday Review

"The man in the street is all too disposed to resentment against the too-powerful ally, all too prone to the bitterness from national weakness, to nostalgia for past glory and hope for a different and better future. But the intellectuals ought to restrain these popular emotions, ought to show the inescapable reasons for permanent solidarity and interdependence. Instead of fulfilling the role of guides, they prefer, especially in France, to betray their mission, to encourage the ignorant feelings of the masses by adducing hypocritical justifications for them. In fact their quarrel with the United States is a way of rationalizing their own guilt.

"In most countries the intellectuals are even more anti-American than the man in the street. Some of the outbursts of Sartre at the time of the Korean war or the Rosenberg case recall those of the Nazis against the Jews. The United States is represented as the embodiment of everything most detested."

"The Soviet Union purges and subjugates the intellectuals, but at lest it takes them seriously. It was intellectuals who gave to the Soviet regime the grandiose and equivocal doctrine out of which the bureaucrats have developed a state religion. Even today, when discussing class conflicts or the relations of production, they savor at once the joys of theological argument, the austere satisfactions of scientific controversy, and the ecstatic thrill of mediation on universal history. The analysis of the American reality will never provide pleasures as rare as these. The United States does not persecute its intellectuals enough to enjoy in its turn the turbid attractions of terror; it gives a few of them, temporarily, a prestige and glory which can compete with that of the film stars or baseball players; but it leaves the majority in the shadows. Persecution is more bearable to the intelligentsia than indifference."—From "The Opium of the Intellectuals," by Raymond Aron (Doubleday).

One meets all kinds of people in a summer resort. These people all have one thing in common. They are away from home and the inhibitions can be let down. They are away from momma or the little wife or the boss. They can say what they please, do what they please and drink what they please.

The results are hilarious . . . sometimes sad . . . and sometimes puzzling.

Saturday night, there was the woman in the beautiful white chiffon evening dress. So very refined. So demure. So reserved. And then she had a highball or two. Splash! The refinement, the demureness, the reservedness was all soaked, as was the chiffon evening dress, in a swirl of chlorinated pool water. Oh, those wicked old highballs.

And then there was the nice, intelligent-looking psychiatrist from upstate New York. He was the center of attraction. Everybody wanted him at their table at dinner so he could discuss neuroses and psychoses and Freud and Jung. He had strings of lovely case histories of abnormal people who did all sorts of symbolic things. He was a doll.

Then, the last night he was with us, he approached me after dinner.

"Miss, er . . . do you have any toothpicks?

"Yes sir." I handed him a peppermint-scented one.

He hesitated, looked sadly down at the single toothpick and made no sign of using it in any form or fashion. He merely looked at it.

Finally, he said, "Well, er . . . that is, I was rather hoping I could have more."

I offered him the box, out of which he gleefully scooped out ten or more toothpicks with the child ish excitment of a three-year old.

"Good-" he exclaimed to nobody in particular. "Now I can finish my bridge!"

And let's not forget the very educated, debonair couple who came for cocktails and for a single meal. Obviously they were in the "courting" stage, although they were both over forty. They were also obviously trying to impress each other desperately. The man led off in the first round.

"I've just returned from N. Y. . . . saw Tom Wolfe's new Broadway play."

"Oh, yes! Goodie!" cried the plump little woman. "Isn't he the best actor you ever saw? I think he does rings around Jimmy Dean."

And then, three courses later. The little lady this time.

Isn't the view gorgeous? Isn't it? I think it's good to remember nature and forget about success. Why, like Tom Paine said in his book Walden Pond, 'Some men lead lives of quiet desperation.'"

. . . yes, I guess they do.

The new students who have had occasion to visit Memorial Hall in one phase or another of their Orientation are probably ignorant of the transformation which has been effected there. Little do they know that the comfortable gold theatre seats on which they sat have but recently replaced the church pews which were for decades a real pain in the rear. Perhaps it is unfair that this year's freshmen should be so comfortably introduced to the University, while those who went before were fortified by having to sit in acute agony and listen to talks which, by virtue of the old seats, sounded like sermons.

Not only has the auditorium been transformed, but the stage has been sanded so that it is almost smooth: a little thing, perhaps, but tremendously important to hose who perform on it.

We won't know until October, when the Playmaker production of "Oklahoma" opens, just what he new seats will do for the acoustics of the Hall. Unless they are much better than they were before, the University might just as well have started from scratch and built a new theatre. Right now, all that can be said is that Memorial Hall is both attractive and comfortable; and as anyone who is not new here knows, that's saying a good deal.

As in the past, one of the most helpful services on this campus this year is the Graham Memorial Calendar, prepared by the Calendar Committee of GMAB. Until now, the Calendar appeared only once each semester, but it is now a monthly publication.

Alas! This welcome increase in frequency is not the only change which has come over this indispensable institution. Whereas the front of the publication was heretofore graced with a lovely picture of Graham Memorial, the current issue bears the smiling photograph of "Miss September—Nora Basnight—Delta Delta Delta Sorority—Senior—Sociology Major—Greenville, N. C."

Now the purpose of the Graham Memorial Calendar is to give notice of the dates of campus activities: perhaps Miss Basnight is the campus activity for the month of September, in which case we decline to participate because of the heat.

If, on the other hand, Miss Basnight is not included in the month's activities—at least for the student body at large—then she might well save her engaging smile for any of the other local beauty contests.

This is not to depreciate Miss Basnight, the Tri-Delts, the Senior Class, the Sociology Department, or the undoubtedly fair city of Greenville. We will gladly attest to the attractiveness of the young lady, the overall virtue of the sorority, the great worth of the department, and the glory of the city.

But Miss Basnight is sufficiently on view either at the Tri-Delt House (210 Pittsboro St.), or at the Sociology Building (Alumni Bldg.), or in Greenville (1404 Myrtle Avenue), and her further display seems uncalled for. It seems a waste of paper and of Miss Basnight, who undoubtedly has other virtures which would better recommend her.

(The calendar is still the best buy for nothing around, and it is available at the GM Information Desk.)

Tourists From State Ask For Jury Trial

Two North Carolina State College students caught sightseeing in Kenan Stadium Sunday night have asked for a jury trial on trespassing charges, police said yesterday.

Larry Dean Eudy, 25, and Jacumin Ray, 21, were arrested while examining the football field. They were released on $50 bond each.

No date was set for the trial. Judge William S. Stewart told the boys the case will probably come up in December at Hillsboro.

Eudy and Ray told police they had never seen beautiful Kenan Stadium and decided to ride to Chapel Hill to have a look at it, the arresting officers said.

Two years ago a large "S" was burned into the center of the field in Kenan Stadium. The scar has healed over for this season.

Saturday Carolina meets State in the opening game of the season.

JOB SERVICE

The University Placement Service is sponsoring a meeting Tuesday, Oct. 14, at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. The purpose will be to help those interested in securing a job after graduation or following military service. An announcement said the meeting "will be beneficial to all, regardless of job or draft status."

VISITING BRITISH EDUCATOR AND WIFE—Sir Philip Morris and Mrs. Morris of the visiting delegation of British educators talk over their experiences at Chapel Hill. Sir Philip is vice chancellor of the University of Bristol, England.

COMPARING NOTES

Britons Visit UNC Campus

By PETE IVEY

Visiting British educators who came to Chapel Hill for three days of sight-seeing and exchange of opinions with faculty and others in the University of North Carolina arrived on the campus at one of the busiest times of the year — just as registration began for the Fall.

The visiting Britishers and their wives have followed a schedule which has included a tour of the campus, side trips to departments and schools in the University of special interest, and social occasions.

Sir Philip Morris, vice chancellor of the University of Bristol, for example, said he wanted to "duck out and see the television station in the University" — the WUNC-TV facility in the Communications Center at Swain Hall. Sir Phillip is an official of the British Broadcasting Company. He is leader and spokesman for the British delegation.

Sir George Paton, vice chancellor of the University of Melbourne, in Australia, is a lawyer and has taught law for 20 years. He lunched with Dean Henry P. Brandis of the UNC Law School.

Dr. E. Davies of the University of Wales was particularly interested in the organizational structure of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, for the University of Wales is in four institutions, geographically separated as the University of North Carolina is in three parts. He compared notes with Dean Alexander Heard, Vice President William Whyburn, and others.

Prof. F. G. Butler is a professor of English and was accordingly interested in the strong program of English and humanities instruction here.

Sir David Campbell, professor of materia medca at the University of Abderdeen, Scotland was taken through the School of Medicine and the N. C. Memorial Hospital.

Professor W. F. K. Wynne-Jones expressed a special desire to look into the science phases of the University and he was escorted to both the new physics acility at Phillips Hall and the Department of Chemistry at Venable.

Twelve of the visiting educators were accompanied by their wives. Mrs. William C. Friday and Mrs. William B. Aycock, wives of the president and the chancellor of the University, entertained at a coffee at the President's house on Wednesday.

During their stay the British were interviewed several times by news reporters and by radio and television people.

They were enttrtained at tea Wednesday evening by Governor and Mrs. Luther Hodges in Raleigh.

Last night they attended a dinner at the Morehead Planetarium, with members of the faculty who were especially concerned with facets of their interests. Afterwards, the British and their wives visited in the homes of several of the faculty members.

The visitors were provided with souveniors of their visit: a map of Chapel Hill and the campus; a booklet of the Research Triangle; a copy of publication, "The Chancellor's Eye View" a copy of the University Report; and a copy of a book written by Dr. Archibald Henderson entitled "The Campus of the First State University." It was published by the University of North Carolina Press.

This morning the visitors go by bus to Duke University.

We Goofed Dept.

The Daily Tar Heel special issue for freshman, published Sept. 10, contained an incorrect statement and an omission about the administration positions.

The issue listed Roy Holsten Jr. as working under Development Director Charles M. Shaffer. Holsten was appointed assistant to the dean of the Business Administration School, effective July 1.

Omitted in the list was Consolidated University Vice President William M. Whyburn.

The paper regrets the errors, according to co-Managing Editor Clarke Jones.

Chapel Hill Not Affected By Bus Strike

A walkout of drivers and terminal employees that has paralyzed bus operations in the northern divisions of the Atlantic Greyhound Corp. has left bus operations in Chapel Hill unaffected.

Head Station Agent H. C. Pearce of the local station, said yesterday that the only change has been in a greater number of persons being routed through Chapel Hill as the Trailways bus service attempted to handle passengers of both lines. Trailways is now running double buses in an attempt to handle the situation.

Pearce said he did not think that University students would have any trouble in either getting to or from home, except perhaps in the Henderson, Selma, Mt. Olive and Creedmoor areas of North Carolina which are served exclusively by Greyhound lines.

Service is being continued to the larger cities, both north and south, via Trailways.

Rosenstengel Books Given To University

UNC's School of Education has been presented with the professional library of the late Dr. W. E. Rosenstengel, a member of the faculty for 16 years.

Housed in a special section of the new Education School Library in Peabody Hall, the collection was presented by Mrs. Freda W. Rosenstengel, his widow.

The collection contains most of the better-know volumes on school administration and several series of bound periodicals along with numerous monographs on particular subjects.

Soon available to students at the University for research in school administration, it will be an aid for work in the areas of school buildings and finance.

Beginning his public school career in the state of Missouri, Dr. Rosenstengel rose to the position of school supervisor in the state of Missouri and later came to the University in 1942.

Two Faculty Pianists To Give Joint Recital

A joint recital by two faculty pianists on Sept. 30 will open the Tuesday Evening Concert Series.

William S. Newman and Wilton Mason will play together in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. The Series is sponsored by the UNC Music Dept.

An announcement from the Music Dept. said "although two-piano recitals are often heard in the music world there has been no major event of this sort in Chapel Hill during at least the past dozen years."

The two artists, therefore, are "making a special point of playing three of the main masterworks originally composed in this form."

SELECTIONS

The program will open with Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Joseph Haydn. "This is a work that Brahms also made a favorite in an orchestral setting, the theme being the familiar Saint Anthony Chorale," the announcement said.

The program's second work will be Mozart's three-movement Sonata in D, "one of that composer's most sparkling works." Last is Rachmaninoff's Suite no. 2, "written about the time and with much of the flavor of his popular Second Piano Concerto," the announcement said.

Professor Newman, nationally known pianist, teacher, and author, has appeared in main centers throughout the country as recitalist and soloist with orchestra. He is chairman of instruction in piano and gives courses in music appreciation and graduate musicology.

Professor Mason, well known as pianist and composer, teaches music history and directs the University Chorus. He has produced numerous operas and musical comedies. He has served frequently as accompanist on tour with front rank singers of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

The next concert will be given Oct. 21 by Dr. Glenn Watkins, who will present an organ recital. Dr. Watkins, recently appointed to the Music Dept., will be making his first public appearance.

There are also fewer three person rooms for coeds. The Lower Quad for men has been reverted to two man rooms.

Speaking of the orientation program, Herman Godwin, chairman of the orientation committee, said, "I think we have had a very successful orientation program. The committee has received outstanding cooperation from both the administration and the new students.

Capt. Tiedeman To Take Over NROTC Unit

Captain Carl Tiedeman, recipient of the Navy Cross and Silver Star Medal, has arrived in Chapel Hill from Pearl Harbor as the new commanding officer of the Naval ROTC at UNC, succeeding Rear Admiral A. M. Patterson who has retired.

A native of Sioux City, Iowa, and graduate of Annapolis in 1933, Captain Tiedeman saw action in the Pacific during the war as commander of the Submarines "Snapper" and "Guavina".

Following the war he became commander of the Naval Preparatory school at Newport, R. I., and latre attended the Naval War College, studying logistics and strategy. In 1955 he became commander of the amphibious cargo ship the U.S.S. Skagit in waters near Japan and devoted his time to training with the U. S. Marines.

On the staff of the Commander in Chief of Naval operation in the Pacific since June of 1956, he was detached in August of this year to come to Chapel Hill.

Captain Tiedeman is married to the former Marcella Larson of Souix City and they have two daughters, Nancy, 18, who is entering Bradley College at Peoria, Ill., and Susan, 14, a freshman at Chapel Hill High School.

Moving soon into their home at 410 E. Franklin St., the Tiedeman's are staying temporarily at the Carolina Inn.

Opening Of Art Center Scheduled On Saturday

ernor Luther H. Hodges, members of the Council of State, University trustees, North Carolina legislators, the Congressional delegation from this state, and others.

Arrangements for the dedication are being managed by a committee headed by Professor Sterling Stoudemire. Others assisting include Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences and Professor Kenneth Ness, acting chairman of the Department of Art.

EXHIBITION

The inaugural exhibition will consist of paintings, prints, etchings, drawing and works of sculpture from collegiate art galleries over the nation, including Williams College, Fogg Museum at Harvard, Princeton University, Stanford, Bryn Mawr, Smith College, Oberlin, Mills College, and the universities of Georgia, Arizona, Minnesota, Illinois, Iowa, Colorado.

Artists whose works will be on display are Cezanne, Charles Burchfield, Ruisdael, Carra, Lembruck, Redon, Beckmann, Dubeffet, Marini, John Piper, Picasso, Yves Tanguy, Heckel, Peckstein, Nolde, Reginald March, I. Rice Perris, Edward Hopper,

Arthur Dove, Mark Tobey, Alfred Maurer, Thomas Eakins, Ralston, Crawford, Maurice Lasansky, Jack Levine, Stuart Davis, Rembrandt, Mary Casatt, John Marin, George Bellows, Whistler, Sargent, Albert Pinkham Ryder, Frederick Remington, Maurice Prendergast, George Innes, Winslow Homer, Eastman Johnson, Robert Henri, Marsden Hartley, Arthur B. Davis, George Caleb Bingham, Charles Demuth, Louis Ellshemius.

The Ackland Art Center is on Columbia St., one block from the Carolina Inn. The center was designed by Eggers and Higgins of New York, the architectural firm which designed the Mellon Art Gallery in Washington, Jefferson Memorial and The Morehead Building in Chapel Hill.

ON THE INSIDE

On the first floor is a small auditorium which seats 88 people, a reading room and library which contains also a rare books section, a graduate study room, a seminar room, faculty offices, a reception room, a main gallery and two smaller galleries, a memorial room in which William Hayes Ackland will be buried.

Another feature of the first floor is the Joseph Palmer Knapp exhibit. The Knapp rooms, the gift of his wife, Margaret Rutlidge Knapp, has antique panelling from England, over 400 years old. The New York apartment of Knapp, with its antique English furnishings, have been moved into the Ackland Center. Knapp was a philanthropist whose bequests have aided the University.

The walls of the entrance rooms are of Italian marble. Display cases are in the hallways, and leather benches are in the reception room. The galleries are air-conditioned.

On the second floor are four studio classrooms and other offices.

The basement will have rooms for sculpture classrooms and studios, both for stone, clay and wood in one section and for ceramics. There will also be library stack and a gallery storage room. The rooms, a photographic dark room, landscaping is incomplete at present.

The landscape architect is Alden Hopkins who is chief architect for the Rockefeller Williamsburg Restoration and for the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. The actual landscape work will be done by Francis J. LeClair.

HISTORY OF WILL

William Hayes Ackland was a Washington, D. C., lawyer who was graduated from Vanderbilt University. In 1936 he made a will leaving his estate to found an art school at Duke University. The will stipulated that if Duke did not accept the terms of the will, the bequest would go to UNC or to Rollins College in Florida.

Later Ackland changed his will to make Duke the sole beneficiary. He died in 1940 at the age of 84.

Subsequently, Duke University trustees rejected the proposed gift. In litigation which began in 1943 and ended in 1949, attorneys for the University finally emerged with the right to the Ackland estate to build an art department and galleries in Chapel Hill.

The late O Max Gardner was the attorney for the University, serving without compensation. After Governor Gardner's death, his law firm carried on the court battle successfully. Members of the Gardner family of Shelby and Fred W. Morrison, Ward E. Lattin and Thomas J. Beddow of the Gardner Law Firm in Washington will attend the dedication.

ACKLAND ENGRAVING FROM PRINCETON UNIVERSITY—"Baachanal With a Wine Press" is the title of the engraving by Andrea Mantegna which has been loaned by the Art Museum of Princeton University for the Inaugural Exhibition of the William Hayes Ackland Art Center September 20. The first exhibition will feature paintings, engravings, etchings, drawings and works of sculpture from American college and university art galleries.

Daily Tar Heel To Be Delivered To Dormitories

The Daily Tar Heel will be delivered to all dorms and to most rooming houses in Chapel Hill every day except Monday.

Stacks of papers will be left in boxes at McCauley St. and Pittsboro Rd., on the road to Glen Lennox, on Franklin Street near Davis Lane and at N. Columbia St. and Airport Rd.

Jim Smalley is in charge of the town route and Bob Walker the campus route.

Houston Is Dead

Graveside services for Noel Houston, former lecturer in UNC's Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, were conducted at 11 a.m. yesterday in the Chapel Hill cemetery by the Rev. Vance Barron, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

A playwright, novelist, short story writer, and teacher in the University, Houston died at 5:20 p.m. Tuesday in Memorial Hospital after an illness of several weeks. He had undergone several stomach operations in the past month.

Studying drama and writing experimental plays at the University, Houston won a Rockefeller Fellowship in playwriting here for 1938, 1939, and 1940. He was one of the 13 American writers whose plays or subjects of their own choosing were recently broadcast by the National Broadcasting Co.

Mental Supt. Succumbs

Dr. James W. Murdoch, a 50-year-old Scot who is credited with much of the rapid progress made by North Carolina's mental hospitals in recent years, died in N. C. Memorial Hospital Tuesday.

General superintendent of the state's vast mental hospitals system since 1955, Dr. Murdoch suffered a severe cerebral hemorrhage while working in his Raleigh office Monday.

After serving in in mental hospitals in Scotland, England, Malaya and Australia, Dr. Murdoch came ot the United States and to North Carolina in 1947. Serving briefly on the staff of the State Hospital in Raleigh, he was later sent to Butner as its first superintendent.

Gov. Hodges described Dr. Murdoch as "a very dedicated public servant" who "rendered outstanding service for many years."

Funeral services were held at noon yesterday at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Family in Chapel Hill where he made his home.

Tar Heels Ranked 10th By AP In Pre-Season Poll

Carolina topped all other teams in the ACC by getting a tenth position rating in the Associated Press pre-season poll.

The sports writers and newscasters who took part in this pre-season poll gave the Ohio State Buckeyes the number one position with 46 first place votes and 839 points. This gave them an impressive 71 points over the second place position which was secured by the Oklahoma Sooners.

Auburn, last year's No. 1 team was rated fifth in this year's poll, but nine of the voters stated, by voting, that the boys from Auburn could repeat the role as top football team in hte country.

Notre Dame, always a top contender, placed third with 702 points and 11 first place votes. Michigan State was fourth, and Auburn was fifth to round off the first five.

The remainder of the first ten are Mississippi, Navy, Texas Christian, Army and North Carolina. Only North Carolina and Army received any first place votes, each receiving one.

The ACC had three other teams in the top 33, Clemson No. 18, Duke No. 28 and Maryland No. 32.

The top 10 in the pre-season poll (first place votes in brackets):

Ohio State (46)	839
Oklahoma (23)	783
Notre Dame (11)	702
Michigan State (4)	605
Auburn (9)	567
Mississippi	223
Navy	195
Texas Christian	185
Army (1)	141
NORTH CAROLINA (1)	140

SECOND TEN

Texas, 121; Oregon State, (2) 116; Iowa, 104; Wisconsin, 100; Mississippi State (1), 94; Miami, 77; Southern Methodist (1), 70; Clemson, 54; Pittsburgh, 41; Texas Aggies 39.

OTHERS RECEIVING VOTES

Colorado, 35; UCLA, 31; Arizona State, 30; West Virginia (2), 28; Georgia Tech, 26; Penn State (1), 23; Duke (1), 22; Tennessee, 21; Michigan, 19; Oregon, 13; Maryland 12.

Frosh Enjoy First Field Day

The First Annual Freshman Orientation field day was held yesterday both at Emerson Field and the outdoor swimming pool. Team relay races took up the morning on Emerson Field, while individuals vied for awards in the afternoon.

The Relay Races championship was won by Orientation group number 5, whose counselor is Craven Brewer. Each member of the team received a Carolina tee shirt.

The individual winners in the afternoon were:

Bob Roth—Golf pitching (24).

Max Toney—Skish (58).

Tam Lefler—Archery (193).

Mickey Nelson—Horseshoe Ringers (2-15).

In Swimming:

25 yard freesytle—James Brownell (9.9).

25 yard backstroke—Bryan Williams (14.4).

The winners of trophys will receive their awards Monday night in room 301-A Woollen Gym.

The event was co-sponsored by the Orientation Council and the Intramurals Department.

Carolina Mourns Death Of George Stirnweiss

"Snuffy" Stirnweiss is dead. To even passive baseball fans, the untimely death of the former American League batting champion came as a great shock. On the campus of the University of North Carolina, however, the tragedy struck with even greater force. Alma mater mourned the passing of one of her greatest athletes.

As a Carolina senior in 1934, "Stirny captained both the football and baseball teams. After leaving the University, he was signed by the New York Yankees. For ten years, he was a standout as their regular second baseman.

Stirsweiss captured the American League batting crown in 1944 with an average of .309. He is also the holder of the American League fielding record, an amazing .933, made during a season in which he committed only six errors.

At his death, Stirnweiss was sandlot baseball director for a New York newspaper. He also maintained an avid interest in the activities of his old school. Skip Clements currently currently number three quarterback for the Tar Heels was sent to Jim Tatum by Stirnweiss.

Businessman George Stirnweiss said good bye to his wife and six children Monday to board a Jersey Central train en route to New York. The next news they received of him was from the crew which recovered his body, as well as thirteen others, from the waters of Newark Bay. The train had blunged into the bay off the end of an open drawbridge.

When a famous personality dies,

GEORGE STIRNWEISS
. . . former UNC great countless words pour forth in well-meaning attempts to endear his memory to the many faithful. "Snuffy" Stirnweiss needs no mountain of vocabulary to sanctify him; his life is his memorial. A fine athlete, a great sportsman, and, above all, a sincere gentleman, "Stirny" never met a man to whom he was not a friend. In the words of UNC Athletic Director, Church Erickson, "I never heard of anyone who didn't like him."

Allen Optimistic About Booters

Coach Marvin Allen is pretty optimistic about his varsity soccer team.

Although cautious in what he says at this stage in the season, Coach Allen admitted during practice Wednesday that he thought the prospects for this year's soccer squad were very good.

Why? The team has depth.

First of all, on offense the team lost only one forward due to graduation, Ted Smith, who held down the left forward position.

Thus, the veteran coach will have an experienced offensive lineup to throw against the foe. Leading the offensive punch will be streamlined Mike Thompson. Thompson, now a junior, led the team in scoring last year from his center forward position.

Returning for this year's campaign are several two-year veterans of varsity competition. They include Rick Grausman at left wing, Tom Rand, right forward, Coleman Barks, right wing, and John Ghanim, who will play one of the forward positions.

Due to the influx of several promising juniors and sophomores, none of the seasoned veterans can feel confident about having a first string post cinched at this stage.

Fleet-footed Charlie Whitfield, along with Curt Champlian, both juniors, will be vieing for first team positions. Leading the pack of promising sophomores will be Joe Perkins, who led last year's freshman team offensively.

On defense, Coach Allen admitted there's work to be done at the fullback positions. Big veteran Dave Corkey will hold down one of the fullback positions. The other two fullback positions remain a question mark at the moment, although Tom Evans, Tom White, Angus Duff, and Bob Quackenbush have shown promise, Allen said.

Tatum Okay

Head Football Coach Jim Tatum was given a good bill of health by his doctor Wednesday night, but was told to be careful about using his voice.

Tatum underwent a biopsy on his vocal chords at Memorial Hospital here Monday following several weeks of unusual hoarseness. He explained it was for his "personal satisfaction."

Dr. Newton Fischer reported "his throat is not normal, but there is nothing serious about his condition. He simply has to be more careful about the use of his voice."

Tatum was still using his voice today in coaching his football squad, but he was still hoarse. His wife, Edna, said she was "relieved and Happy" over the doctor's report.

53,000 Americans were injured in car-bicycle mishaps in 1957.

Co-Captains Blazer And Hathaway Urge Sportsmanship

Curtis Hathaway and Phil Blazer, co-captains of the Carolina football team for 1958, have released the following statement to all Carolina students regarding sportsmanship:

"An attempt is being made throughout the Atlantic Coast Conference to eliminate unsportsmanlike conduct at the various athletic contests that take place during the school year. An award has been established to be presented annually to the school showing the best spirit and sportsmanship. The school is selected by athletes in the Conference schools who play before the different student bodies. Last year Duke won the sportsmanship award."

"Only a small percentage of our student body can participate on the teams that represent our school. But this award makes it possible for our student body to compete as a whole with the student bodies of our rivals."

"As the old saying goes, 'Everyone loves a winner.' It's easy to be a good sport when your team always wins, but the real challenge lies in keeping your temper and showing good sportsmanship when your team meets defeat. The football players are working hard to produce a team that you can be proud of. Each one of us considers it an honor to be a member of the football team, and we believe that every student should take equal pride in being part of a student body that shows excellent school spirit, sportsmanship, and hospitality to its guests.

"We can do our best to eliminate unsportsmanlike conduct on the field, but it is up to the students to show good sportsmanship in the stands and after the games. So let's work together and bring the sportsmanship award to Carolina this year."

Program Sellers Needed

Coach Joe Hilton of the Athletic Department has urged any students interested in selling football programs at home games to report to a meeting in 304 Woollen Gym tonight at 7 o'clock. A 20% commission will be paid for each program sold.

Tatum Chosen State Chairman Of Polio Drive

Jim Tatum, head football coach at Carolina, has been appointed State Chairman for the 1959 March of Dimes, it was announced last Sunday by Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation (originally the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis).

The drive will be held in January.

The polio-fighting organization is expanding into a broad new force that will tackle health problems on a wider front and no longer will confine its activities to a single disease.

"I am confident that the people of North Carolina, who helped make possible victory over polio through their contributions to the March of Dimes over the past 20 years, will give even greater support to hte National Foundation's expanded program in the future," Tatum said.

"We would like to make it clear, as we begin preparations for the 1959 March of Dimes, that the National Foundation will not abandon polio patients," Tatum declared. "We have a moral obligation to the 1501 patients assisted by North Carolina county chapters in 1957 to continue to provide needed care and rehabilitation, and we will fulfill this obligation."

Jim Tatum is a native of McColl, S. C., and graduated from the University of North Carolina in 1935, where he was a star football tackle under Coach Carl Snavely. He later was an assistant to Snavely at Cornell University. He has served as head football coach at the Jacksonville Naval Air Station, while in the Navy; at the University of Oklahoma for one year; and at the University of Marylnad for nine years. He returned to the University at Chapel Hill in 1956.

During his 12 years of football coaching, Tatum has produced three undefeated, untied teams; turned out six bowl teams and won one national championship. In 1953 Tatum was named Coach of the Year. People who are close to Tatum say that he is a prodigious worker and a superb organizer.

Taum is 45 years of age, married to the former Edna Sumrell, and they are the parents of three children. He is a member of the Rotary Club and attends the Methodist Church of Chapel Hill, where he serves on the Board of Stewards.

ABC Election Set For Feb. 3 Here

The Board of County Commissioners, meeting in a special session last Thursday, changed their requested date for the holding of an A. B. C. election in Orange County from February 7 to Tuesday, February 3, next.

The commissioners at their monthly meeting on September 2 had voted to ask the Board of Elections to conduct the county-wide referendum for the establishment of liquor stores on February 7, coinciding with a previously announced decision of the Alamance County commissioners to hold a similar vote on the same day.

The date for the election was moved back to February 3 in order that it might be held prior to the convening of the State legislature on February 4 and possible legislative action to prevent the holding of the election or the application of the state law.

No vote on the establishment of ABC stores has been held in this county since the mid-1930s following the adoption of the local option law in North Carolina.

Members of the board had been advised that opponents of the referendum may have prevailed upon members of the legislature to introduce special local legislation restricting or otherwise interfering with the proposed county-wide expression of sentiment on the question by the electorate.

Indications have been evident for several years that there is strong sentiment in all parts of the county for another vote on the question and the Commissioners, acting on informal petitions, called for the vote.

Public To See Art Museum After Ceremony

The public will get its first look at the William Hayes Ackland Memorial Art Center here tomorrow following formal dedication ceremonies.

On display will be an exhibition of paintings, sculpture and other art loaned by collegiate galleries throughout the country.

Edson B. Olds of Washington, a friend of Ackland and a trustee of his estate, will present the building to the University.

William D. Carmichael Jr., vice president of the Consolidated University, will make the acceptance speech.

S. Lane Faison Jr., director of the Lawrence Art Museum of Williams College at Williamston, Mass., will give the dedication address. Present for the ceremonies will be state officials, legislators, university trustees, leaders of the art world, and other guests.

Ackland will be buried in a memorial room in the Art Center. It also will include galleries and facilities for the university's art department.

Faculty Pay Increase Is Stressed By Friday

The Consolidated University of North Carolina yesterday asked the State Advisory Budget Commission for an increase of $4,460,889 in operational appropriations for the 1959-60 university year.

A. H. Shepard, business officer and treasurer, said the budget also called for a $4,895,175 increase in the 1960-61 budget over 1958-59's figure of $19,015,505.

The Commission was asked to approve salary increases of $4,749,132 for UNC during the next biennium to maintain and strengthen good teaching.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday told the commission, "We have made good progress in our salary program but more must be done if we are to meet the problems before us."

Salary increases are "our first priority throughout the university in the "B" budget," Friday said.

The State Board of Higher Education has recommended salary increases of $2,700,000 for the biennium. This figure, however, did not include academic staff personnel such as librarians, administrators etc.

The president pointed out that the university was among the top 40 in the nation. He added that in order for the university to stay on a high level, the faculty salaries must be increased.

Although President Friday stressed the needed hike in faculty salaries, he briefly discussed research programs, library services and service functions (extension department and adult education).

Friday strongly endorsed "the principle of flexibility in the handling of institutional budgets. We can make a much more efficient and wiser use of our time and of the resources entrusted to us if we have the flexibility to place them where the need appears greatest."

Each of the three universities, Carolina, Woman's College and N. C. State College, spoke on the needs of their individual college.

Shepard said the Advisory Budget Commission earlier asked for a delay in requests for capital improvements. He said this budget would probably be released some time in October.

Textile Study Funds Asked By N. C. State

RALEIGH —(AP)— The Advisory Budget Commission was asked Thursday to approve a new textile research program and a two-year, non-degree technical course in agriculture at North Carolina State College.

The proposed textile research program calls for $159,780 each year of the 1959-61 biennium. The request for the two-year agriculture course is for $24,550 the first year of the biennium and $49,880 the second.

Dr. Carey H. Bostian, State College chancellor, told the commission the new program is basic and pioneering textile research "would reap enormous benefits from the amount involved."

About $500,00 a year is being spent at State College on applied textile research. Bostian pointed out that approximately $2,800,00,000 worth of textile goods are manufactured in North Carolina each year.

The proposed new program would be closely allied with the teaching and graduate education programs of the State College School of Textiles and with the present industry-supported applied research program.

Bostian said the new two-year agricultural course would be taught in separate classes from the 4-year students and by teachers especially qualified for this type of instruction.

In addition to farming, graduates could qualify for work in hatcheries, food service, processing plants, dairy plants, greenhouses, fertilizer plants, farm retail stores, and other farm related busisess.

Open Houses In Dorms Close Orientation Week

By JOAN BROCK

UNC coeds rolled out red carpets at open houses in seven dorms last night to welcome "Carolina Gentlemen" to the campus and formally close orientation week.

Official hostesses for the evening were dormitory hostesses, graduate counselors and women's orientation counselors.

Mrs. J. C. Clamp, Margaret Dunn, and Mary Montgomery greeted guests in Alderman Dorm and invited them to a refreshment table which was covered with a white linen cloth and centered with an arrangement of pastel flowers flanked by crystal candelabra holding lighted white tapers.

Arrangements of gold and yellow marigolds, magnolia blossoms, and pink gladiola were used in the parlors.

Les Sattorius' combo provided music for dancing at McIver Dorm and ballons and multi-colored streamers were used throughout the party rooms. Silver and crystal punch bowls graced tables which were centered with arrangements of red roses, magnolia and greenery. Mrs. Roy Parker, Nola Hatten and Lucy Posgate received guests in the parlors and on the porches.

Japanese lanterns were featured in the square outside Carr Dorm at a lawn party and Hi-Fi music was used for dancing. Mrs. Victor Humphreys, Mariul Shipt and Sue Ballentine assisted in serving punch and cookies from a table covered with a yellow cloth and centered with yellow marigolds and greenery and lighted yellow candles.

A tropical setting prevailed in Smith Dorm with bamboo rugs, tropical flowers and orchid leis. A fish net entwined with sea shells, orchids, and corks draped the ceiling. Mrs. Sedialia Gold, Sue Wetzel and Jo Carpenter greeted guests and Muriel Dang of Hawaii had her parents send the flowers especially for the evening.

Mrs. Robert Jackson, Beatrice Mongeau and Dewey Dance introduced campus gentlemen to coeds in the Nursing Dorm. The refreshment table was covered with a white lace cloth and centered with mixed summer flowers and white candles. A silver punch bowl appointed one end of the table. Dancing to Hi-Fi music was enjoyed in the basement of the dorm.

Red roses and white candles were featured in the parlors of Whitehead Dorm and soft music was played in the background throughout the eve-

Medical School Money To Help In Research

Carolina's School of Medicine has received a $186,000 grant enabling it to establish a new research program for the next five years, Dean W. Reece Berryhill has announced.

School professors' recent discoveries pointing to allergic and infectious processes as factors causing major heart and kidney diseases led to the grant.

The sum was awarded by the Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases of the National Institutes of Health. It will support an expanded program of study in microbiology and the related clinical fields of allergy and infectious disease.

Director of the new research will be Dr. William J. Cromartie, associate professor of medicine and fective efforts to develop ways to bacteriology.

The program will provide postdoctoral fellowships and fulltime residencies for students wishing to specialize in these fields.

"We need many more individuals trained in the basic science of microbiology and the clinical fields of allergy and infectious diseases, Dr. Cromartie said, "if effreat and control these important diseases are to be made."

Participating in the program as teachers and/or researchers in addition to Cromartie are faculty members Dr. D. A. MacPherson, chairman fo the Bacteriology Department; Dr. Edward C. Curnen, chairman of hte Pediatrics Department; and Dr. Charles H. Burnett, chairman of the Department of Medicine; and specialists in seven fields.

$62,700 Grant For Psychology Is Announced

Psychological research at the University has been given a boost by a $62,700 grant from the National Science Foundation, Psychometric Laboratory Director Dr. Lyle V. Jones has announced.

The ward will facilitate research to be conducted during a five year period, Dr. Jones explained. Studied wil be methods for measuring and analyzing simultaneously a number of different psychological traits and characteristics.

The new program constitutes part of a series of recent research projects undertaken by the Psychometric Lab staff members. Among others are (1) the revision of group tests in reading comprehension from the fourth grade to the superior adult level; (2) the recording of test scores in primary mental abilities, reading, arithmetics, and spelling of children age six and later at age nine in order to predict academic success in school;

(3) The study of the pattern of growth and subsequent decline of mental abilities with advancing age; and (4) the analysis of 150 pairs of identical and fraternal twins with a number ofpsy chological tests and physical measurements to make a "twin diagnosis."

OTHER STUDIES

Four other major studies are currently underway at the lab. Two are financed by governmental agencies, one dealing with preference for food combinations and the other with acceptance of certain clothing and equipment items by Army enlisted men.

The other two are concerned with aphasia, the partial or total loss of speech due to brain malfunction.

Lab staff members include Dr. Thomas E. Jeffrey, Dr. R. Darrell Bock and Dr. Emir H. Shuford, assistant professors; Dr. Dorothy C. Adkins, professor and head of the Department of Psychology; and Dr. Thelma G. Thurstone, professor of education.

WC Requests $193,578 For Biennium

RALEIGH — (AP) — Chancellor Gordon W. Blackwell of Woman's College said today $193,578 is needed by the school during the next biennium to restore budget reductions due to receipts deficiencies.

He told the Advisory Budget Commission $90,356 is needed the first year and the $103,222 the second year "to correct for errors in receipts estimates in the past."

Blackwell said that over the past years "they have been projecting receipts of about $30,000 more than they could realize." The receipts, he explained, are from student fees.

The college is affecting a saving this year by not filling staff vacancies, he said.

Burglar Takes Food At Fraternity House

Chapel Hill Police today were looking for a well-fed burglar who got plenty of staple edibles last night at the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity house on South Columbia St.

Fraternity officers reported that the following items were taken from the kitchen at the house: 23 pounds of butter, 10 pounds of cheese, 35 pounds of sugar, nine dozen eggs, a gallon of mayonnaise, a dozen heads of lettuce, and 10 pounds of tomatoes. They valued the stolen goods at $34.50.

New Dorms Free Steele

The addition of 727 new dormitory rooms at Chapel Hill has freed Steel building on the campus for administrative use beginning this year, according to Chancellor William B. Aycock and J. Arthur Branch, business manager.

Formerly housing students, Steele is undergoing minor alterations enabling it to handle accounting, personnel, purchasing and payroll activities. According to university officials, centralization in Steele will effect more efficient and economical operations of facilities formerly scattered throughout the campus.

Built in 1922, Steele has housed 72 students annually for some time. However, plans for relocating the several administrative offices has been under consideration for a number of years and the transformation will bring the plans into being.

Approximately 60 University administrative personnel, together with their equipment nad records are in the process of relocating in the brick building. The office space vacated by these departments will be re-allocated by the Chancellor's committee on space, headed by Dean James L. Godfrey.

The basement of Steele wil continue to be used by the Booketeria,

First Pep Rally In Emerson Tomorrow Nite

A large crowd is expected to be on hand at Emerson Stadum tomorrow night as students show their backing of Coach Jim Tatum's Tar Heels with a "Kickoff" pep rally.

The first pep rally of the year will get underway at 6:30 p.m. and will be led by the UNC cheerleaders, headed by Carter Jones. The event is sponsored by the University Club.

Dave Jones, president of the University Club, has invited all Carolina students to participate in the first rally.

He said there would be band music, majorettes, and a bonfire. Tatum will introduce his team furnish music for the outing. He during the session.

Jones said a combo also would reminded all students that the victory bell is now on the Carolina campus and would sound off at the rally.

STAFF ENLARGED

School Of Education Strengthened To Train More School Teachers

What is the University doing to train more and better teachers for the public school system—in the face of the swelling enrollments?

One answer was provided this week by Dean Arnold Perry of the University's School of Education.

The School of Education is being strengthened. More students are going into teaching. Dean Perry announced today three new additions to the faculty, aside from the appointment of Dr. Ben Fountain of Rocky Mount some weeks ago.

Dean Perry revealed that undergraduate enrollment in the School of Education here has increased 40 per cent since 1955. An additional ten per cent increase is expected with the enrollment here this week.

Also on the rise is the number of part-time students doing graduate work or taking post-baccalaureate work to complete requirements for teaching certificates in North Carolina and other states.

Part-time enrollment has jumped 27 per cent in four years, and another five per cent increase is predicted for 1958-59.

Continued growth for several years is expectel because of the strong demands for teachers, Perry said. "For the past decade the demand for elementary school teachers has been exceedingly high and the State of North Carolina has reached each new school year with a shortage of more than a 1,000 fully qualified teachers.

"During the next six years the most acute shortage will apparently be in the junior and senior high schools as the children born immediately following the close of Worll War II are now of junior high school age," he continued. "Each year for the next six years there will be an increase in the demand for teachers prepared for junior high school work and the variols subject departments in the North Carolina high schools.

NEW STAFFMEMBERS

Joining the UNC staff to help meet the teacher demand are four new staff members: Miss Annie Lee Jones, Neal H. Tracy, James F. Rogers, and Ben E. Fountain Jr.

Miss Jones, a native of Aurora in Beaufort County, has been at Boston University completing her doctoral studies in education. She has held public school teaching and supervisory posts in several eastern N.C. counties. Her new work at UNC will involve elementary school teaching and supervising, including field work with supervisors of instruction.

Fountain replaces Dr. Wilmer M. Jenkins, who is now superintendent of Hickory City Schools, as director of student teaching and placement. He recently completed his doctoral program at the University.

Tracy and Rogers comt to Chapel Hill from North Dakota and Texas, respectively. Tracy will work in the field of educational administration, and in an improvement program for secondary school mathematics teaching. Rogers will assist in the Education School's graduate centers as well as work in the school administrators program.

EMPHASIS

Passage in late August of the National Defense Education Act of 1958 by the National Congress forecasts still greater emphasis upon teacher education in order that the programs in science, mathematics foreign language and guidance may be strengthened in the public schools, Dean Perry noted.

The staff of the School of Education at Carolina has been studying the new Defense Act for the past three weeks and is making plans to take care of increased enrollments number of fellowships and the subthat will be assured by the large stantial stipends to be paid from federal funds for students who are working in various fields covered by the National Defense Education Act.

Special emphasis is being placed upon the graduate offerings in the School of Education. Since the doctoral program in Education was started slightly over 30 years ago, more than 100 students have completed doctoral programs and are now placed in responsible administratvie positions and college teaching positions in some of the best institutions in the United States. A few are holding important administrative positions in international education.

Four years ago the University started a program for the development of graduate centers in Education. One is sow in operation in Charlotte with an average enrollment exceeding 100. A similar graduate center is in operation in Goldsboro and plans are underway for programs of this nature in High Point and Fayetteville.

Under the direction of Prof. Guy B. Phillips, former dean of the School of Education and until 1958 director of the summer school, the field services program is being considerably expanded to include study groups for superintendents, assistant superintendents and supervisors.

Included will be a special program for junior high school principals to meet the need for improved leadership in this rapidly growing part of the North Carolina public school system.

An important part of the work of the School of Education has to do with the training of school administrators. A considerable portion of this work has been financed in recent years by a grant from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation. In this program the School of Education has worked in cooperation with other schools in the southern region through the Kellogg Cooperative Program in Educational Administration.

The Need

The need for a new student union was never better illustrated than during this orientation period.

Every night Graham Memorial was flooded with people looking for healthy recreation. Every night most were unable to obtain such for lack of facilities. Every night, also, there were increasing freshmen on the streets who had partaken of too much of the malt brew sold in Chapel Hill and who were making themselves generally obnoxious to the passers-by.

These people will not come back to Graham Memorial during the year, for they left unsatisfied. They will find pursuits elsewhere. Many will turn to the unwholesome before they return ever to the wholesome, for the opportunities for the wholesome are little, room, the rendezvous room, or any other acti-

No amount of advertising for the pool vity will do any good, for these are already lost.

Every year there is a great deal of outcry from the state about wild fraternity parties, about panty raids, about drinking, and about other activities that would tend to seed a bad light on the University, and every year the legislature appropriates money to many causes without remembering the need for a healthy outlet for the excess energies of the students.

Before these legislators howl about the student conduct, about fraternities, about dormitories, and about carousing, they had better take action to provide an opportunity for healthy recreation.

A new student union is a necessity, but when will the powers that be realize this fact.

Orientation

There is both a plus and a minus side to this year's orientation period,

The plus side was supplied by chairman Herman Godwin whose leadership was in evidence everywhere. Not only was his hard work obvious, but his ability to spur others on to such hard work was equally observable.

Katie Stewart did a capable job of handling the Women's Orientation, Don Furtado made a fine speech, and the new orientation programs for graduate students and foreign students within the same budget added something necessary to the orientation program.

However, what Godwin was working with was an archaic system. He was working with a seven day orientation period that was certain to drive even the most eager freshman to distraction with the repeated reiteration of student participation, student activities, student government, student honor system, student campus code, student study, student life, student social activities, and all the other things that a student is told during the seven day orientation period.

The orientation period must be shortened. It must be filled less, not more activities. It should be a synopsis of student life without the fanfare that accompanies the present system.

It is not necessary to include quizes on various phases of student life, but rather it should be aimed at getting students interested in asking about the various phases of campus life. An answer to a question many times will suffice or be superior to a long lecture.

The purpose of orientation should be to create interest and thought. It should not deaden the thinking process and impede participation.

It is hoped that a shorter, and more concise program can be found for next year's orientation so that next year's chairman can do as capable a job as Herman Godwin did with a better program to work with.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

According to the calendar we are now in that difficult and awkward time of year when the baseball and football seasons overlap. But I hope no one will accuse me of excessive sentimentality when I mention a third season that is on right now—The Crying Season. This is the way it works.

You sit in Graham Memorial watching the news on television. A reporter is talking with some clean and decent colored kids. These kids tell the reporter (and you) that by God they want an education and they're going to get it. Then the kids say so long to the reporter and begin the long walk into a formerly white school. The TV camera follows and you see the kids get struck with rocks, you hear the vicious name-calling from grown men and women who are crazed with hate, and a younger white hoodlum breaks through the police lines to spit upon the face of a colored girl.

The colored kids walk through this verbal and physical barrage with absolute equanimity. How in God's name do they do it? Where on earth they get this kind of courage, this massive dignity, this unbelievable poise? You watch all this on TV and you feel so helpless, so sick, so guilty . . . so proud. And you cry.

With variations of one sort or another, the above scene has been played out in dozens of American localities each September since 1955. It has been well said that the continuing dispute over segregation is "our Algeria," that is, this dispute drains the national substance and reputation in the same way that the continuing war in Algeria drains Franch substance and reputation.

The analogy with Algeria is a good one in another respect too. If there is a solution to the Algerian problem it lies in a fundamental reconstruction of French society. This of course is exactly what De Gaulle is now attempting. And there are American observers who say that our segregation question will finally yield only to a reconstructed American society.

It is clearly in the national interest that segregtaion and discrimination be eliminated. We cannot hope to maintain our position in a largely colored world, carrying this sort of childish barbarism around our neck like a noose. And yet the national interest can be so easily frustrated by bush league demogogues, of whom Faubus is only the latest and most conspicuous example. If the national will can be blocked by a Faubus, you can bet every dollar your Father's got that the glory of America will soon be extinguished, preserved only in textbooks alongside of pictures of the Parthenon and the Acropolis.

And yet—what confuses the equation is the weakling President, that "captive hero," Dwight D. Eisenhower. Suppose the White House were occupied by a ruthless politician of the Truman-Nixon stripe. What then would be Faubus's fate?

There are several military installations in Arkansas. It is easy to imagine a Truman or a Nixon closing these installations as "an economy measure." While Arkansas does not have much industry, what industry it does have leans heavily on government orders. Again, it is easy to imagine a Truman or a Nixon "passing the word" to Pentagon procurement oficers that henceforth Arkansas industry will be denied its slice from Uncle Sam's delicious pie. And then there are the various Federal-State matching fund programs, covering everything from highways to unemployment compensation to school lunches. Do you think a Truman or a Nixon would be tough enough to arbitrarily lock up Arkansas's share of these federal moneys? I think they could, and would, be just that tough Faubus delights in litigation. Let him litigate for 10 years to get 100 million dollars in federal funds.

Supreme Court decisions are not self-enforcing. Massive defiance of the Court can be conquered only by making it more painful not to obey than to obey. And as we have just demonstrated, the federal government cand crush any of the "sovereign states" simply by cutting off the federal moneys. The government of the state of Arkansas has about as much "sovereignity" as the Inter-Dormitory Council. And there are politicians in the North of both parties who are positively itching to show the South just where the power lies.

Southerners forget that the region's unparalleled rise to a rough sort of economic equality has been based largely on huge federal programs like the TVA and the presence of countless federal military installations. What Santa Claus has given, Santa Claus can take away. But this in turn is a painful way to end "The Crying Season."

On Jazz

Virgil Early

In the August issue of Hi-Fi magazine, there are articles by Dimitri Mitropoulos, a conductor of the New York Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera House Orchestra, and Henry Pleasants—jazz critic. Mitropoulos stated that in his opinion jazz was nice and compatible and he enjoyed it. Henry Pleasants asserted that Jazz is THE word and went into detail about the mysterious "beat" of jazz as contrasted with that of classical. The editor's comments—Query for Hippsters—ask the provocative question: With jazz' enslavement to the beat, where can it go from here? what is its future as an art form.

In our opinion, jazz is not THE music of today nor of the future. It is an important music of today, but not the only. Rock 'n roll is THE music if popularity is the criterion. And if expression is the criterion . . . . then it depends on what one wishes to express, what needs to be expressed and how, musically, is the best form of expression. We believe that if there were a "THE music" it would be that form which stated most clearly all ideas and emotions which need to be expressed now and which reached almost everyone. There is no such one form and there never will be. Each music form has its' own worth and forthermore, each must be evaluated within the limitations of its' worth. One cannot justify jazz by comparing it to the classics but by its own merits.

The future of jazz looks bright—both artistically and popularity-wize. The festivals are flourishing, record sales are high and the new stero tapes should create new interest and quality in jazz recordings. Jazz is being employed more as a background for movies, TV shows and even commercials. Jazz and modern choreography are very succesful together. (Robert Prince' score for the new jazz ballet, New York Export: opus Jazz, should be a tremendous smash in New York this fall.

And artistically where does jazz go from here? Well as far as we're concerned, man, it's GONE!!!

The Cost Of Education: The Need For Payment

J. R. Cominsky

We are approaching a showdown in the situation of the American private college and university.

Endowments in most cases will not be enough. Support from foundations and corporations will not be enough. Federal aid will not be enough—if, indeed, there will be any Federal aid at all. Present tuition fees will not be enough.

Thus, at precisely the time when more students demand higher education than ever before, the private colleges and universities are confronted with the gravest problems in their history.

One obvious line of attack for the non-tax-supported school would be to raise tuition costs. Yet it is equally obvious that high tuition costs should not have the effect of reducing college enrollment and depriving large numbers of qualified students of a higher education. In any event, the chairman of the President's Committee on Education Beyond High School, Devereux C. Josephs, has advocated that the student pay a greater share of the cost of his education.

The basic question, therefore, is how to increase tuition without decreasing the educational potential. A new approach is necessary. Such an approach accepts the need for higher tuition fees to meet the cost of education, but it seeks to do this on a long-term basis, with the undergraduate himself participating in the plan.

By way of background for this suggestion, let us review some facts. For some years higher education has been made available at bargain prices. The student could buy for a $1,000 annual tuition fee a course of instruction that necessitated an outlay of at least twice that sum. Result: an annual deficit that had to be made up in various ways. Chief source of meeting the deficit was income from endowments. Contributions from business and, more recently, from the larger foundations were other major deficit-reducing factors.

Endowments, however, are carrying less and less of the load. They no longer can guarantee the solvency of the old schools and they are not going to be plentiful enough to create the necessary new ones. In 1940 income for colleges and universities from endowments was 26 per cent of total income; by 1950 it was 14 per cent, and it is still dropping.

As a result, there has been a tremendous step-up in fund-raising activity among the graduates of all private colleges and universities. Alumni groups are reported to have given their institutions well over $108 million in 1956, compared to about $78 million in 1955.

Along with this, tuition fees have been substantially increased to a point where many middle-income parents with two or more children of college age no longer can finance their continued education. This increase is more than offset by the increase in operating costs and the need to build up a reserve for maintenance and expansion.

Among many proposals for making up the difference is that the business community give 1 per cent of business profits before taxes for higher education. Based on 1954 profit figures, this would provide $350 million for our independent, privately endowed colleges and universities, allowing them to increase salaries by $200 million and to provide for modernization and maintenance of their plants with the remaining $150 million.

However, a significant note of warning appears in the report of the President's committee, which says: "Educational budgets would be very unstable if corporate giving were the principal source of funds. Too many private factors, such as a drop in earnings or changing stockholder attitudes or the competitive situation of particular corporations, could indirectly affect public needs.

An important step has been the establishment of the National Merit Scholarship Corporation, which has offered to devote $8 million to matching, dollar for dollar, gifts by business firms for college scholarships and supplemental gifts to the institutions where the scholarships are used. This is an independent agency, financed initially by gifts of $20 million from the Ford Foundation and $500,000 from the Carnegie Corporation.

Scholarships, however, are only a partial answer. I return, therefore, to the place of the undergraduate himself in matters of keeping our private colleges solvent and in finding a way to equate tuition and actual instruction costs without depriving gifted students of the opportunity for higher education.

For some years I have been advocating that at least ten medium-sized colleges in the United States should get together in order to devise a "study now, pay later" plan. The entire plan would be based on the fact that the tuition could be increased to whatever extent necessary to meet the costs of the instruction. Those students who were not on scholarship and whose parents were unable to meet the tuition fees would be given the option of paying for their education over a long period of years beyond their graduation. Existing scholarships and loan arrangements would be unchanged. In addition, this arrangement envisions a plea to the Federal and state governments to make postgraduation-payments deductible from income taxes.

Will a youngster handicap himself seriously by assuming the large burden of debt involved in paying ultimately for his college education?

We think not. Installment payments need not begin until several years after graduation. Fifty dollars a month may make a dent in a man's income, but people cheerfully make dents at least as large in their income for automobiles, television sets, refrigerators, trips around the world, etc., etc. A college education is at least as important. Moreover, a college education actually provides the increased income that more than pays for itself. Within five years after college the average graduate is making almost 40 per cent more money than the average non-graduate.

Bear in mind, too, that the plan, if it is accepted in its esentials, involves tax deductibility for tuition installment payments.

Most of the students involved in the plan, of course, would not have to carry the full burden of their tuition costs their parents were unable to meet or was unobtainable by other means.

Under present methods of financing, a relatively small percentage of graduates of colleges and universities contribute to their support after graduation in the endless cycle of fund raising among the alumni. Under the deferred payment plan, graduates would receive each year a bill representing a clear and specific financial obligation. It would not be necesary for them to finance costly promotion and sales campaigns to collect such funds.

Since colleges and universities all over America are confronted with many more prospective students than they possibly can accommodate, this would seem the time to plan for such a change in this vital area.

—J. R. Cominsky.

To The Frosh

P. W. Carlton

A few days ago the great exodus occurred all over the country as thousands of young men and women arose and left their homes to descend like a heavy cloud upon America's universities. For a large number, this was the "fledgling's flight," the first time away from home. To these freshmen we shall devote our attention.

Undoubtedly, the American lad preparing to attend college for the first time is one of the most pathetic, maligned creatures on the face of the earth. He is harassed by his mother, coerced by his father, heckled by his grandparents and generally terrorized by relatives in general. Now this is no intentional attack on the boy's well-being; rather it is the unfortunate circumstance derived from a well-meaning group of reminiscant mortals, hell-bent on indoctrinating the lad with respect to the college way of life. Let us dwell briefly on the tactics employed by the chief perpertrators of this crime, Mom and Dad.

Mom's attack is the most insidious, since she doesn't confront you with her advice but sneaks it at you under various advantageous circumstances. First, since junior is completely incompetent in such matters, she insists on preparing his wardrobe personally and then proceeds to stock up on all sorts of items vitally needed by young college men in their first year. To wit: 5 sets of long underwear, 14 hand towels, silk bathrobe, long-handled back scratcher, pink organdy curtains for the room and a wealth of other necessities. (The fate of these valuable articles is often obscure: the long underwear are disseminated variously as flag pole displays, costumes, etc.; the hand towels are used to polish junior's Thunderbird and the bathrobe hangs in lonely grandeur while he parades through the hall wearing shower clogs and a bar of soap.)

Mom also "harasses the troops" by giving little reminders pertaining to living habits and behavior. These wouldn't be so bad if they weren't constantly repeated and interjected into the conversation at odd points.) "Don't forget to wash your feet, don't play poker on Sunday, don't sass your professors, leave the girls alone, etc."

Dad is the real tyrant of the bunch. He is the unmitigated authority on all subjects pertaining to college life and will speak on all topics, adding experiences of his own to elucidate the points in question. His morality lectures are unsurpassed for their appropriateness. He lectures with great zeal on the technique of avoiding the pitfalls of college days. (He fell in all the pits himself, so he's an authority.) For instance:

"Now son, I want you to be thrifty and save your money. Don't throw it away frivolously." (Dad was known as "old Crazymoney" back in the old days. He holds the distinction of having accrued $50 in library fines.)

"Son, I don't want you drinking and carousnig. You must study and stay away from those fraternities." (Dad was a member of Tappa Keg frat and a major stockholder in the ABC store).

"Be circumspect in your driving and always obey the speed laws." (Dad wrecked his Stutz bearcat in a road race from Chapel Hill to Durham. At another time he hit three parked cars while traveling 60 MPH in a 35 MPH zone.)

"Always respect ladies and never break UNC regulations." (Dad was known to the girls as 'the octopus" and was noted for keeping them out all night.)

So goes the lecture. The sad part of it is that no matter how much Dad lectures, junior will go right ahead making the same mistakes Dad made, refusing to profit by his experience and counsel. What a mad world is this, that young men and women are too independent (or too stubborn) to accept counsel of any sort, no matter how wise. Sure, Dad got "likkered up" every weekend and played the fool, but his grades certainly showed it, and He's regretted his foolishness ever since. He wants desperately to help his son to do a creditable job, and in his desperation he becomes downright obnoxious sometimes. So junior shrugs it off chinking, "Boy, is my old man a square," cha-cha's out to his T-bird and roars away to school. Mom's tearful goodbyes forgotten, he hastens to spend his time in riotous living, thus selling those four precious years of education for a roaring good time.

If he's fortunate he'll realize what's happening by the time he's a sophomore and straighten up in time to be a gentleman and a scholar. If not, who knows?

This picture, though possibly exaggerated in detail (he may not have a car at all) is a living reality to many students. In this world of speed and power, where intellect is supreme, the uneducated man is almost as capable of successfully meeting society as is a sardine of eating a whale at a single bite. From these statements it would then seem advantageous to temper our ribald activities with a generous helping of intellectual endeavor. Let's have fun in college, by all means, but let's put academic pursuits first and "party-party" second in our thoughts. In this manner will we be able to turn out the wildest crowd of Phi Betes in the country and uphold the standards of the Carolina gentleman simultaneously.

Dean Elected Senator By Phi Beta Kappa

Dean Ernest Mackie, mathematics professor here, has been named Senator for the Southeastern states for the national scholarship fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa.

Dean Mackie succeeds Prof. James Cannon of Duke University.

The term of Senator is for a six-year period.

Dr. Cannon of Duke succeeded the position following the death of the late Douglas Southall Freeman of Richmond, Va., who had served several terms.

Dean Mackie is dean of Awards and Distinctions here and directs the activities and selection of Phi Beta Kappa at Chapel Hill.

Roth Assigned As UNC Intern By Foundation

The Danforth Foundation has assigned John D. Roth as Seminary Intern to the University of North Carolina for 1958-59.

In this post Roth will work with various religious groups at the University, including the YMCA-YWCA, the Westminster Fellowship and the Wesley Foundation. He will occupy an office on the second floor of the YMCA building and will live at the Wesley Foundation. His supervisor will be Sam Magill, assistant dean of Student Affairs.

Roth did his undergraduate work at Bowling Green State University in Ohio, where he obtained a B. A. degree in history. At Bowling Green he was president of the United Christian Fellowship, a member of Omicron Delta Kappa (honorary leadership society) and Theta Chi social fraternity.

Roth has completed his second year at the Boston University School of Theology and is preparing to enter campus ministry.

The Danforth Seminary Internship Program is designed to provide a learning experience in campus religious work for a selected group of theological students who have completed two years toward their degree.

fairs; Don Furtalo, student body president; and Rudy Edwards, president fo the Inter-Dormitory Council.

Social rooms in Joyner, Winston, Conner, Cobb, Parker, Teague, Avery and Mangum will be open from 12 noon until 1:45 p.m. Saturday and again after the football game until 7.30 p.m.

Furtado said yesterday hosts will be on hand in the social rooms to greet guests.

Furtado urged the residents of these dorms to conduct themselves as Carolina gentlemen because any permanent arrangement for opening the social rooms to guests may hinge upon results of the experiment Saturday.

The two students and two administrative officials agreed that opening the social rooms would be especially desirable, since a large number of students from Woman's College will be here this weekend.

Covering The Campus

HECK LECTURE

The first Heck Lecture for 1958-59 will be given in the UNC Law School today at 7:30 p.m. by Charles S. Rhyne, former president of the American Bar Assn.

Rhyne will speak in Manning Hall Courtroom under sponsorship of the Law Students Assn. The public has been invited to attend.

PROMOTIONS

The promotion of three faculty members of the UNC School of Medicine as been announced by Chancellor William B. Aycock, with the approval of President William C. Friday and the UNC Board of Trustees.

All three promotions were in the Dept. of Surgery. Dr. Gordon S. Dugger and Dr. Kenneth Sugioka were promoted from assistant professors to associate professors. Dr. Erle E. Peacock Jr. was promoted from instructor to assistant professor.

WUNC-TV TELECAST

Church service from the Carrboro Methodist Church will be telecast on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, the University's educational television station, at 11 a.m. Sunday. This will be the first service to be telecast on Channel 4 this fall. The Reverend A. S. Parker will officiate.

Another popular weekly program, "Sunday School" returns to Channel 4 at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday. Former Chancellor Robert B. House will open this year's series with the topic, "Justice and Judgment."

GAME FILMS

WUNC-TV will present a complete play-by-play filmed account of tomorrows opening football game between UNC and N. C. State at 6 p.m. Sunday. This will be the first of several Tar Heel games to be kinescoped in entirety and televised on Channel 4 this season.

SELDEN GREETING

Samuel Selden, chairman of the Dept. of Dramatic Art, will greet old and new friends of theater on the campus tonight at 7:30 in the Playmakers' Theater.

Members of the department will tell of the history of the famous theater, announce the coming season of plays, and generally extend a welcome to those interested in theater.

The program, entitled "Adventures in Playmaking," is an annual event with the drama group and the department invites everyone to attend.

GRAD CLUB

An organizational meeting of the Graduate Club Executive Board will be held Monday night at 6 o'clock ni the upstairs dining room at Lenoir Hall.

Club President Bob Rennick has urged members to bring trays to the dining room for the supper meeting.

Furtado Makes Two Requests For Opener

Student Body President Don Furtado has called on all UNC and State College students to observe two requests at the opening game Saturday:

"1. Do not take part in any acts of vandalism.

"2. If our team happens to be the loser, please stay off of the playing field. It has been agreed that the goalposts are the property of the victors."

Furtado made the statement after a meeting here last week of several student officials from both schools. The group met to "discuss means" of keeping the rivalry "on a healthy and friendly basis."

The two requests, he said, "especially apply to the Carolina student, for under our Campus Code we are obligated to conduct ourselves as gentlemen and ladies at all times."

He said by so doing UNC will win the Atlantic Coast Conference Sportswriters Student Sportsmanship Trophy.

"Duke won last year. We cannot let that happen again," he concluded.

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH

Today begins my fifth year of writing this column, and what an eventful five years it has been! What things have these old eyes not seen! What great discoveries have rocked the world—the anti-proton, for instance, and the anti-neutron, and high-low split, and Brigitte Bardot!

In these five years it has also been discovered that American smokers like two kinds of cigarettes—filter and non-filter. The Philip Morris Company makes both kinds. I mention the Philip Morris Company because they pay me to mention the Philip Morris Company. They sponsor this column. I write it and then they give me money. Then I take the money and pay my grocer, my butcher, my gardener, and my four madrigal singers. In this way full employment is maintained and we avoid a repetition of the Panic of 1873 when bread riots killed over 98 million people in Muncie, Indiana, and millions of others were reduced to ghost-writing Ph. D. theses to keep body and soul together.

But enough of gloom. Let us get back to cheerful subjects, like the products of the Philip Morris Company. For those of you who wish filter cigarettes there is Marlboro, which now, more than ever, gives you a lot to like—a brand new improved filter and a wonderful flavor that comes breezing right through. For those of you who wish non-filter cigarettes, there is Philip Morris, a mild natural blend, flavorful, fresh, and thoroughly agreeable. For those of you who can't decide between filters or non-filters but have an affinity for packages, I should like to point out that both Marlboro and Philip Morris come in both the crushproof Flip-Top Box and the good old-fashioned Soft Pack, and you will surely want several of each for your collection.

Speaking for myself, I smoke both Marlboro and Philip Morris in both packs. What I do is make kind of a fun thing out of it. In my bedroom I have four signs, one on each wall, which say in turn: "PHILIP MORRIS—SOFT PACK", "PHILIP MORRIS—FLIP-TOP," "MARLBORO—SOFT PACK" and "MARLBORO—FLIP-TOP". When I get up in the morning I put on a blindfold and then my faithful cat Rover spins me around six times and then, with many a laugh and cheer, I walk forward with my finger outstretched and the first sign I touch is the cigarette I smoke that day!

This little game has been a great source of merriment...

As you can imagine, this little game has been a great source of merriment to Rover and me, except for one untoward incident one morning. I was stumbling around in my blindfold and fell out the window right on top of a man named Fred R. Timken, a census taker, and broke all his lead pencils. He was cross as a bear, and though I offered him both Philip Morris and Marlboro in both the Flip-Top Box and Soft Pack, he refused to be mollified. In fact, he refused to put my name down in the census, so when you read population figures of the United States, will you please add one?

But I digress. We were speaking of Philip Morris and Marlboro who will bring you this column throughout the school year. In this space I will take up vital aspects of undergraduate life, like high-low split and Brigitte Bardot, and it is my fondest hope that the column will be half as much fun for you as it is for me.

SHOWROOM OF FINE FURNITURE

When Coach Earle Edwards' N. C. State football squad comes to call next Saturday, they will find a grimly determined bunch of Tar Heels waiting in Kenan Stadium. Two years in a row Carolina has been picked to beat State, and two years in a row the Pack has shown utter disregard for the experts by turning the tables on the Tar Heels.

In '56 State spoiled Jim Tatum's return to his alma mater by beating Carolina 26-6. Last year the Wolfpack upset the Heels 7-0, then went on to win the ACC crown. This year, once again, Carolina will no doubt be favored. Can State do it again? Maybe. But they have a tough row to hoe before coming out on top this Saturday. A revenge-minded squad with depth, experience, and proven ability tips the scales for the Tar Heels.

ONLY 3 STARTERS BACK

State returns only three of last year's starters to this year's team. Back are guard Bill Rearick, end Bob Pepe and fullback Don Hafer. The missing men are end John Collar, tackles Mike De-Angelis and Darell Dess (Just released by the Washington Redskins), guard Frank Tokar, center Jim Odo, and quarterback Tom Katich. But the biggest problem and the toughest loss to take will be at the halfbacks. Gone are the touchdown twins, Dick Hunter and Dick Christy. It was Hunter who scored the only touchdown in last seasons game and Christy who set it up.

Carolina's defensive corps face a strong test in this season opener as they must cope with the State multiple offense. The Pack runs from a T, split-T, wing-T, spread, and other formations calculated to keep the defense off balance. But this temporary disadavntage may be overcome by the Carolina shifting defense, which makes blocking assignments more difficult to carry out.

This contest will be the 48th encounter between the two schools. Through the years the Tar Heels have been victorious 34 times, and there have been seven ties. Last year's loss to the Wolfpack was only the sixth time in the long series that Carolina has come out on the short end of the score.

A few early injuries may hamper the Tar Heels some, although a good bench should make up for the losses. Halfback Daley Goff is out indefenitely with a twisted knee. Tackle Don Stallings, the heaviest man on the team at 250, will miss the opener due to a rib fracture. Soph halfback Sonny Folkomer is recovering from an earlier injury and may be ready to go this Saturday.

NON-PLAYING CO-CAPTAIN

Watching from the sidelines this Saturday will be one of the Carolina co-captains, Curtis Hathaway. Curt is through for the season as a result of a fratcured arm sustained in last year's South Carolina contest.

Quarterback Jack Cummings and halfback Daley Goff, two of the teams top backs, were married over the summer. Cummings' game jersey turned out to be a freak, since his regular number 14 appears on the front but for some odd reason the number 13 is on the back.

NEW FACES

A number of hitherto unseen players who are now sophomores eligibility-wise promise to add strength to an already powerful squad. Fred Mueller looks like a starter at guard. John Schroeder is running second unit as an end. Both Rabe Walton, a halfback, Don Klochak, a fullback, and Bill Barker, an end, return to Carolina from the service this season and any one could be the surprise of the year. The last time Klochak wore a Tar Heel uniform, in 1954, he led the team in punting and was third in rushing.

Bishop And Scurlock Lead Strong Cross-Country Team

by BING SOMERS

Bishop and Scurlock.

These two "name" runners, backed up by a bevy of others of lesser fame, will form the core of the 1958 Carolina cross country team which has set determined sights on whisking away its third straight conference title.

In 32 years Coach Dale Ranson has managed to take over half of the conference crowns. They've become almost as regular as Yankee pennants. Though almost all of the ACC teams have improved and "are gunning for us," this season foresees no exception to the Ranson rule.

The big loss from 1957 is Everett Whatley, a wispy, mercurial runner who looked like he just crawled out of a coffin. His absence shouldn't be felt too much, however, for returning for their senior years are Bishop and Scurlock. It is they that cause Coach Ranson to proclaim the sunset and pet small dogs. They could finish one-two in any meet.

The slsender, pitter-patting Wayne Bishop will be the finest runner in the conference provided he has completely shaken an old knee injury. And right begind him will be Carolina's ace track citizen, tall and angular Dave Scurlock. Though a great asset to any cross country team, Scurlock prefers to concentrate most of his running talents on the half mile.

Lurking behind these two is a triumverate of talented runners in lettermen Howard Kahn and Cowles Liipfert and sophomore Worth Sweet. The first two are already top notch performers and Sweet should blossom into one within the year.

Seniors Alex Coffin and Doug Henderson, who have lettered and should repeat, are tabbed for the sixth and seventh spots.

The eighth and last member looks like soph Box Foxworth who might advance higher if he ever gets mad.

The mop up crew currently includes only Fick Arthur and Bing Somers, both of whom might crack the starting team with effort and luck.

The 1958 varsity schedule:

October 4—Clemson	Here
October 10—Virginia	Here
October 18—Mary. & W.F.	Here
October 22—N. C. State	Here
November 1—S. Carolina	Away
November 5—Duke Univ.	Away
November 10—State Champ. Raleigh
November 17—A. C. C. Meet	Here

PROBABLE STARTER—Sonny Folkomer, 187-pound soph halfback from York, Pa., is a likely starter Saturday for Carolina when the Tar Heels battle State's Wolfpack in Kenan Stadium.

Tar Heels To Face Ten Tough Opponents In '58

A ten-game schedule, including games with every member of the ACC and three outsiders, is in store for the Carolina Tar Heels this season.

This Saturday State visits here for the season opener, a repeat from the last few seasons. The Wolfpack will come into the premier with two straight victories over the Tar Heels under their belts.

The next week, Sept. 27, Clemson furnishes the opposition, and probably quite a lot of opposition at that. The experts are all saying that this game should decide the winner of the conference race early in he season. The game will be played in enemy territory, at Clemson, and the Tigers will be seeking to regain their prestige after last year getting thumped 26-0 at Chapel Hill.

A new opponent, Southern California, is on tap for Oct. 3 and the team travels all the way across the continent for this one. Game time is 11:00 p.m.

The Tar Heels return home Oct. 11 to face the speedy South Carolina Gamecocks. Last year the Heels whipped the Birds 28-6 before the home folks.

This season, Oct. 18, Maryland comes to Chapel Hill to try to prove last year's 21-7 upset win over the Tar Heels was no fluke.

Wake Forest, who failed to win a single game last year, will play here on Oct. 25. Coach Paul Amen predicts improvement, but how much improvement will not be clear until later in the season.

The Tennessee Volunteers, who handed Carolina a 35-0 defeat last year (worst of the season), entertain the Heels on Nov. 1 at Knoxville.

Carolina travels to Williamsburg, Va., Nov. 8 to attempt to avenge a 20-13 upset at the hasds of Virginia's Cavaliers last season.

Nov. 15 the Tar Heels go to South Bend for the resumption of an old series with Notre Dame. The Irish have been picked as tops in the nation by many pre-season prognosticators.

The home team returns to Chapel Hill for the season finale against arch-rival Duke. On Nov. 22 of last year Carolina upset the Devils 21-13 at Durham.

Booters Want More Support

This year's varsity soccer team would like nothing better than for Carolina students to come out and root for them during home games.

Captain Jim Rattay, who holds the goalie position, urged students Wednesday to come out and root for the Tar Heel booters in their home games.

Powerful Squad

Rattay said that this year's team, barring bad injuries to key players, will be a power-packed squad, with even more offensive punch than last year's squad.

Increased attendance would give the team members a big boost Rattay said, as team spirit is already high.

"A crowd out there rooting for you gives everybody an extra lift," Rattay said.

Attendance Always Low

Attendance at home soccer games has always been low. Even on perfect days, the crowd that comes to root for the Tar Heels very rarely exceeds 50 or 60 persons.

Poor attendance at soccer games doesn't apply solely for the University of North Carolina, however.

Rhyne Says Law Rule Needed To Maintain Worldwide Peace; Bell Proposals Are Endorsed

By CLARKE JONES

The only way to achieve and maintain peace, says a former president of the American Bar Assn., is by rule of law in a worldwide court system.

"Law plus a court system," said Charles S. Rhyne last night, has done this "domestically in nation after nation.

"Law plus a worldwide judiciary can perform the same function between nations if given a chance.

Rhyne delivered the annual Heck Lecture before the UNC Law Students Assn. in Manning Hall's Courtroom. He spoke on "The Functions of Lawyers Today."

Rhyne also:

1. Approved wholeheartedly of the Bell Committee recommendations for improvement of North Carolina's judicial administration.

2. Said the law profesion was losing many able young men to better-paying fields.

WORLD PEACE

Rhyne said "Because of the great technological achievements of our era, the survival of mankind requires that disputes between nations be resolved in some way other than by the age-old method of ultimate resort to war.

"Everyone agrees," he said, "that nuclear warfare would be so incredibly destructvie as to produce mass extermination."

A community can only remain peaceful as long as law prevails, he said, and people all over the world "understand this function of law in the domestic area."

However, he said, "The regrettable fact is that people do not yet comprehend what law can do for them in the world community.

A "tremendous challenge and a great responsibility" ofr lawyers are contained in this situation, Rhyne said.

He pointed out that there is only one court set up to serve the world community—the International Court of Justice, consisting of 15 justices.

Rthyne called it the "most unknown" court in the world today, and the "most unused instrument for peace that mankind possesses."

He proposed that this court be enlarged into several courts with a trial court branch in each nation, regional intermediate appellate courts.

One situation the International Court could decide, he said, is the trouble in the Formosa Straits over Quemoy and the Matsus.

In calling for the United Nations to refer this situation to the International Court, Rhyne said he did not take this lightly.

"I agree with President Eisenhower that the Chinese Communist regime should not be allowed to extend its authority over Quemoy and Mastu Matsu Islands by naked force. " . . . But force against force," he said, "is a dead end street which leads nowhere but to death and destruction."

In pointing out the need to bring law to the forefront in the UN de-

Tar Heels Open Season Here Today Against State College

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The curtain opens on Carolina football, '58 style, this afternoon when the highly touted Tar Heels take on CU brother N. C. State in Kenan Stadium at 2:00.

Better than 40,000 fans will witness this traditional rivalry, and clear skies with a bright sun are the weather prospects.

Carolina goes into the contest favored by most of the experts. State has two straight wins over the Heels to talk about, both upsets.

Coach Earle Edwards' Wolves should be decidedly weaker than last year's team which beat the Tar Heels 7-0, then went on to the conference championship. Morale, however, is at an all-time high in the State camp.

PACK LOST SEVEN STARTERS

The Pack lost eight of last season's starting eleven. But Edwards freely admits that the Carolina game is the one his boys point to, the one they would like to win more than any other on the schedule.

The Carolina side of the story is one of a revenge-minded squad, featuring depth at every position, experience and ruggedness.

The Probable Starting Lineups:

N. C. State	No.	Pos.	Carolina	No.
Jim Crain	81	LE	Don Kemper	84
Larry Dixon	75	LT	Phil Blazer	70
Joe Rodri	68	LG	Fred Swearingen	51
Bill Hill	50	C	Ronnie Koes	53
Bill Rearick	60	RG	Fred Mueller	61
Kelly Minyard	74	RT	Don Redding	71
Bob Pepe	85	RE	Mac Turlington	86
Frank Cakovic	17	QB	Jack Cummings	14
Ken Trowbridge	24	LHB	Wade Smith	31
Ron Podwika	42	RHB	Sonny Folkhomer	28
Arnold Nelson	32	FB	Don Coker	37

The Tar Heel second unit, rated on a par with the starters by many, is composed of Al Goldstein, 81, and John Schroeder, 88, at ends; Ed Furjanic, 73, and Moose Butler, 75, at tackles; Paul Russell, 62, and Ralph Steele, 65, at guards; Jim Davis, 52, at center; Nelson Lowe, 15, at quarterback; Jim Schuler, 25, and Moe DeCantis, 21, or Danny Droze, 35, at halfbacks; and Ed Lipski, 44, or Don Klochak, 47, at fullback.

State College's starting quarterback, Ernie Driscoll, has been dropped from the lineup in today's game. A conference spokesman announced yesterday afternoon that Driscoll's eligibility expired last July. See story on page 4.

Other Tar Heels likely to see action are: Ends: Detanna, 80, Rice, 82, Greenday, 83, B. Smith, 85, Crist, 87, Hunneycutt, 89. Tackles: McCann, 72, Bardy, 74, Stunda, 77, Joy, 79, R. Smith, 78. Guards: Brennan, 60, Eanes, 63, Riggs, 64, Branson, 66, Kordalski, 68, Massey, 69. Centers: Hardison, 54, Talley, 56, Nead, 57, Hawkins, 58. Quarterbacks: Hollers, 10, Clements, 11, Amos, 16, Ellerbe, 18. Halfbacks: M. Smith, 23, Slusser, 27, Sloop, 29, R. Hawkins, 32, Frederick, 33, Walton, 39. Fullbacks: Wall, 40, Shupin, 45.

STATE SQUAD

Centers: Fitzgerald, 51, Markham, 52, Savage, 55. Guards: Moore, 61, Bushofsky, 62, Marocco, 63, McClain, 64, McKeithan, 65, Jones, 66, Sherron, 67, Singleton, 69. Tackles: Bodziak, 70, Parks, 71, Avent, 72, Gilleskie, 73, Harriger, 76, Lawrence, 77, Reynolds, 78, Nye, 79. Ends: Vollmar, 80, Harden, 82, J. Gill, 83, Johnson, 84, L. Gill, 86, Tapp, 87, Drexler, 88, Reed, 89.

Tackle Don Stallings and halfback Daley Goff will miss the opener for the Tar Heels. Stallings has a fractured rib and Goff has knee trouble. Co-Captain Curtis Hathaway will also be watching from the sidelines, as he is out for the season with recurring arm trouble resulting from an injury in the South Carolina game last year.

Earle Edwards' original choice for starting center, Paul Baloncik, will not play due to a broken ankle.

Carolina's starting line will weigh in at an average of 208. The entire first two teams average better than 200, including backs.

Sorority Rush Week Opens With PanHel Tea

Rush Week began informally for the seven sororities last night when a compulsory meeting was held in Graham Memorial.

The Pan-Hellenic Council tea, to which all co-eds were invited, was the opening part of the many parties and other activities which accompany Rush Week.

All co-eds have been encouraged to participate in the first round of paries as a method of meeting many new people, regardless of their plans for sorority membership.

All parties will be held in the sorority houses with the exception of Kappa Kappa Gamma, whose house is being renovated. Kappa parties will be held at 215 Cameron Avenue, the home of Mrs. Jeanette Alling, house director.

Rush Week officially opens Monday with a round of informal parties, with parties of the same type following on Tuesday. Wednesday will bring a day of rest, followed by a continuation of the informal parties on Thursday and Friday.

On Saturday there will be five more formal parties which will last 45 minutes each. Monday the 29th closes the informal parties, with the final festivities taking the form of progressive dinners where party dresses will be the order of the day. Wednesday, on Tuesday Oct. 1, is the all-important Bid Day.

Each girl must attend parties of all seven sororities on the opening day. Each day she may attend one party less than the day before, until she attends not less than three on the final night of Rush.

Each sorority tapers down the number of invitations accordingly until it entertains only three times the number of its quota on the final night.

Invitations to these parties may be picked up in the Roland Parker Lounge in Graham Memorial on the assigned days. These invitations will be distributed by the Stray Greeks.

The times for picking up the invitations are as follows: Monday, Sept. 22, 9:15-1:15; Wednesday, Sept. 24, 12:30-3:15; Saturday, Sept. 27, 9:15-11:15; Monday, Sept. 29, 9:15-1:00; and Tuesday, Sept. 30, 9:15-1:00.

Signing for bids will take place Wednesday, Oct. 1, in the office of the Dean of Women. This may be done between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

'Oklahoma' Auditions To Be Held Monday

Tryouts for "Oklahoma," the first production of the Carolina Playmakers' season, will be held Monday, Sept. 22, at 4 and 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

No previous experience is necessary.

A number of actors, dancers and singers are needed for the show, which is scheduled for production in Memorial Hall, Oct. 24-26.

Tommy Rezutto, of the Department of Dramatic Art, will direct the show, with choreography by Foster Fitz-Simons and music directed by Gene Strassler.

Rezutto has stressed the importance of the chorus and has said that chorus members will fill in many of the smaller speaking roles. Singers do not need to audition from the "Oklahoma" score. They may bring their own music. An accompanist will be provided.

Libretti for "Oklahoma" are available in the reserve reading room of the University Library, but reading the play before tryouts is not essential.

Homecoming Date Tickets Are Half Price

Date tickets for the homecoming game with Maryland on Oct. 18, have been reduced to half price, according to Student Body President Don Furtado.

One thousand tickets are available for sale at this rate.

Reduction of price in tickets has only been scheduled for the homecoming game, but Furtado said yesterday he would meet with the Athletic Council next week to try to have reduced tickets for one or two more games.

Furtado said the reason reduced tickets aren't offered more often is that other teams, Carolina plays won't agree to a similar reduction.

Any further word of date tickets will be announced at a later date, he said.

Rearranged Library Is Confusing, Even To Veteran UNC Scholars

Returning students will find that freshmen are not the only ones who need an orientation tour of Wilson Library.

The uses and designation of four rooms were changed during the summer. The Reserve Reading Room was refurbished and new equipment has been installed.

Smoking is no longer permitted in the Reserve Reading Room but is still allowed in the Group Study Room, which was formerly the General College Library.

This area no longer contains books. The General College reserve books will now be found in the Undergraduate Library, the space which formerly housed Business Administration and economics books.

These volumes will now be found in the Social Science Division room in the old Current Affairs Reading Room on the second floor. Other books of the social science division are also located here.

The former Reference Room now houses the Humanities Division. Journals of the division will be found in the center aisles of the room.

"The Undergraduate Library is building up a complete collection of the best and latest of books. The goal is that the room will have a complete college library in it," said Jerrold Orne, University Librarian.

The library will have its own card catalog. He explained this step is towards creating a separate library for the undergraduates.

During the winter the Undergraduate library will be arranged on the same system of the Reserve Reading Room — alcoves formed by shelves of books.

Other changes contemplated include getting some lounge type furniture for the Graduate Seminar Room on the fifth floor of the stacks.

The stacks also had to be arranged during the summer because two departmental libraries — sociolgy and psychology — were closed and consolidated with Wilson Library. However, the Dewey Decimal system has not been changed.

"Most of the changes carried out in the course of the summer followed recommendations initiating with the student library committee

Seven Recitals Are Scheduled By Music Dept.

Seven programs sponsored by the University of North Carolina Music Department are scheduled for the current Tuesday Evening Series. There will be no charge for these performances.

The first program on Tuesday, Sept. 30, will be a two piano recital gvien by Dr. William S. Newman, chairman of UNC piano instruction, and Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor of music and director of the University Chorus.

All programs will be presented at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. The final musical event of the fall semester will be a presentation of "Carmen" b the University Chorus Jan. 13 in Memorial Hall. Dr. Mason will be in charge.

Dr. Glenn Watkins will make his first public appearance following his recent appointment to the University's Music Department. He will give an organ recital on Oct. 21.

A sonata recital by Arthur Loesser and Joseph Knitzer is planned for Nov. 4. The second program of the month will be held Nov. 13, and will feature members of the University String Quartet. They are Edgar Alden, Jean Heard, Dorothy Alden, and Mary Gray Clarke.

Earl Slocum will direct the University Symphony Orchestra on Dec. 2. The annual Christmas concert, Dec. 16, will be presented by the Chapel Hill Choral Club under Joel Carter's direction.

Other higlights on the fall calendar include events sponsored by the Carolina Playmakers, Graham Memorial Activities Board and other clubs and organizations on the UNC campus.

Staff Meeting At WUNC-FM Planned Mon.

WUNC, the University radio station, will hold a "get acquainted" meeting for prospective staff members in Studio A, Swain Hall, on Monday, September 22, at 4 p.m. Anyone interested in working at WUNC as been urged to attend.

Department heads will be on hand to discus the various phases of WUNC's operation. Auditions and interviews for staff positions will also be hell at the Monday meeting.

At the moment, there are vacancies in all departments of WUNC's staff. Previous experience in radio will be useful, but not essential, to the prospective WUNC staff member. All positions will be granted on the basis of interest and ability. Persons with an interest in announcing, writing, electronics, production and promotion are especially urged to attend the meeting.

Those interested in trying out for WUNC staff positions but unable to meet at the proposed time have been asked to call 9472 or stop by WUNC studios in Swain Hall.

UNC Trustees Invite Students To Speak Out

The Visiting Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees will be here the afternoon of October 10 and the morning of October 11, Chancellor William B. Aycock has announced.

Committee Chairman William B. Saunders said the group will be glad to hear from any faculty member, staff member of or student who wishes to make a statement about any matter concerning the University.

Aycock urged those interested in appearing before the committee to let him know or get in touch directly with Saunders not later than Oct. 6.

Saunders is director of the State Dept. of Conservation and Development in Raleigh.

"Students may make arrangements through the Office of the Dean of Student Affairs," Aycock said.

"A definite appointment will be made for anyone desiring to appear," he said.

SAY TEN FRESHMEN

Orientation Necessary, But Waiting Is Tedious

By JAMIE HOLMES

Orientation, by one new student's definition, is a week of slothful inactivity punctuated by meetings which either talk about the Honor System or attempt to "place" him in the proper percentile.

However, not all new freshmen reacted in quite the above matter when the following questions were put to them:

1. What did you get out of Orientation? and

2. How do you think it could be improved?

Of those interviewed, all considered an orientation period an absolute necessity, although some though the meetings and waiting, waiting, waiting in between a trifle edious.

For the you-were-there-viewpoint, he following ten Carolina gentlemen were typical in their remarks:

Evan Wood: "I couldn't have done without it."

Roger Smith: "It was really great . . . . I had so many activities time didn't drag at all!"

Bob Roth: "Though worthwhile, the whole thing could have been done in four days. I was getting a little bored."

Billy King: "I'd be lost now without it. I don't see how it could be improved."

Rick McCall: "I especially enjoyed the group meetings."

Joel Summer: "The meetings were quite good but they sure could cut out some things like the Field Day and picnic in order to make it better. A week's too long."

Gus Hickok: "It was very beneficial . . . . didn't drag at all."

Humberto Rodriguez, Cuba: "long with the help of the Cosmopolitan Club it helped every one in my group feel quite at home on the campus."

Jim Anderson: "I couldn't have done without it although I think some of the meetings were a little too long and dry with too much time in between."

And finally, there was that student who refused to give his name but, after long tortuous tought, said it could be improved by cutting out the walking.

These may be some of the impressions freshmen ave about Orientation, but upper-classmen, with a hollow laugh, would assure them now that school has started it's fun and joy, that orientation (realistic brand) has begun in earnes.

Visiting

Congratulations are in order for Don Furtado, Rudy Edwards, Dean Katherine Carmichael and assistant Dean Sam Magill for consumating a temporary agreement to allow coeds into the social rooms of some men's dormitories during this first football weekend.

It is hoped that this practice will continue during future football weekends, and that perhaps a permanent agreement can be arranged for the entire year.

This marks a concrete step towards some centralized campus planning for healthy coeducational recreation.

There are very few outlets in Chapel Hill for such recreation. There are fewer common meeting grounds for a boy and girl outside of a parked car or a loud party. With this lack of facilities and outlets, it behooves student government and the university administration to work hand in hand in providing these outlets.

The agreement for today was a step. If followed by many more towards a concrete program of healthy social activity, a more wholesome social atmosphere on this campus may develop. It is hoped that all parties who formulated this temporary agreement will look to the future for permanent, far-reaching coeducational programming.

Sportsmanship

Every year prior to football season the question of student conduct has come into focus. During the past several years the problem has been more acute.

It seems that schools in the Atlantic Coast Conference seem to be racing each other to see which one can perpitrate the most ingenious act of vandalism. This kind of a contest is never won, for actually there is no prize nor any object to the contest. Indeed, destruction is the only end, and that is not a worthy one.

This spirit of competition breeds more animosity to carry to the playing field, but it surely does not breed the type of healthy athletic rivalry that is so much more important part of the game.

It can be hoped this year that students from all ACC colleges will acknowledge the rights of others. It can be wished for that damage to public property can be avoided. It can be asked that a riot will not occur nor that police coercion be necessary.

If students can leave their fighting spirits in their hip flask, if students can vent their enthusiasm through their vocal cords, and if the students can be satisfied with showing their disappointment of glee to their dates and friends, maybe, just maybe, a spirit of healthy competition can be developed, and the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters can conscientiously give their sportsmanship prize more than once in five years. This is a situation to be hoped for.

According to the latest statistics published by the Census Bureau, the number of marriageable women in the United States is far greater than the number of eligible males. This astounding fact has lead hundreds of these charming ladies to a very bitter life of loneliness, frustration, and eventually to an early death.

Therefore, I recommend that American society should change from a monotonous society in a polygamous society. Let every man marry as many women as he can afford to support. This would save our American girls from wasting away as old maids and permit men to have at least two wives.

To accomplish this we do not have to change the laws of the land. All that is necessary is to merely overlook the existing ones Polygamy should be governed by the traditional customs of the people and not by legislation. And since 80 per cent of our married males partake in extra-curricula motel sports anyway, why not make it legal and allow them to marry as many girls as they want?

If this plan is incorporated, it would keep most of the homes in America from breaking up, it would eliminate prostitution, and it would do away with illegitimate births. Are not these three of the biggest social cancers of our society? We must think of the children if nothing else.

In order to put this system into operation and to preserve definite laws of authority, primogeniture, and wifely duties, we recommend that the "Three-way System" of polygamy be adopted. This is the three wives per husband plan. Number one girl should be the first and principal wife. Number two would be the secondary wife, and number three would be the concubine. The third wife is not necessary to the system, but she would make life much easier for numbers one and two.

Number one will be the commander-in-chief of the family. She alone is responsible for the complete household. She will also be the mother of the family. Regardless of which woman bears the child, the children always refer to number one as mother. Number two would be aunt and number three would be sister.

When the family takes in social functions the wife number one always should stand side by side with her husband. Number two has to stand behind them with the children and be sub-servant to both their husband and wife number one. Wife number three stays home

The one thing that will allow wife number's one and two to be compatible while sharing the same husband and household is that wife one must be given the authority to choose wife two. By doing this, the distiny of wife two lies not in the hands of the husband, but in the hands of wife one.

Wife one may, at any time, chase wife two or three from the house, may beat them for misbehavior, and she has complete control over all of the children. In case wife one dies, wife two is never promoted to be wife one. This would lead to too many murders. Instead wife two must always remain where she is, as wife two, or she may leave the husband and marry someone else to become his wife one.

Wife three, the concubine, will have the lowest position in the family. She is usually from the lower economic class anyway, so she will be accustomed to her station in life. The concubine has to be subservient to everyone in the family, including the children. She must do all of the menial tasks of the household, in addition to bearing the brunt of her husband's beastly passion and brutality.

Under this system the children will have ample love, the wife one will not have any household chores to do and she can devote all of her time to being a companion and a better wife to her husband.

More important, however, is the fact that if this idea is adopted there will no longer be any lonely women in this country, men will no longer have reason to get drunk and cheat on their wives, the crime rate will be lowered, and a wholesome atmosphere will prevail as the proper environment for the development of the children.

Columnists

The editor of The Daily Tar Heel invites as many students as want to, to write columns for the paper.

Subject matter is not limited, and every columnist is allowed almost complete freedom within the law of libel.

The sole criterion for a column's worth is its quality and this will be established on a competitive basis throughout the year.

Columns may be submitted at any time to the editor's office in Graham Memorial.

THE ATLAS: WILL MAN CONTROL HIMSELF IN NEW AGE?

Scientific Progress: Reason's Challenge

Glenn Olds

Revolutions in man's conquest of space come swiftly, but they are long in preparation. Behind dramatic discovery lies patient and painful preparation which is the process of education. The genius in man lies in his ability to grasp swiftly the import of every new venture into space and to change accordingly. In a few short months since Sputnik man's mind has leaped from missiles to men, and already the imaginative draw blueprints from missile drive-ins to the moon.

Man's problem lies in the deeper preparation, in the slower domestication of the complex dimensions of the space of his life. Even before Euclid men knew there were at least two sides to space. Indeed, they linked in myth and ritual outer and inner space, stellar space that bound earth and star into a universe, and inner human space that bound man and man into community. The laws of the former they knew to be mathematical, the latter, moral. Both were awful, and the fate of man turned on mastering them simultaneously. Education was designed to keep these two domains of space together and complementary.

The temptation of our Sputnik-minded space age, and indeed our education, to support it, is to dismiss this ancient wisdom as primitive superstition, to drive an even deeper wedge between the mathematical and the moral, the scientific mastery of outer space and the moral failure to span the inner distance between man and man and nation and nation in a responsible human community, one in his right mind would advocate surrender of scientific successes in conquering outer space, but who shall attend to its moral complement? The Copernican Revolution which broke with the ego-centric Ptolemaic view that sun and stars revolved around the earth was long in preparation, but it came. Our conquest of outer space reaps the harvest of this shift in perspective. But where is the Copernican Revolution in morality? Where is the break with the ego-centric Ptolemaic mentality in human affairs? Must this inner space continue to be peopled with imaginative dragons of strange olor and dropping off places that confine the moral venture to the shallow water of one5s own mainland or adjacent islands of narrow self-interest? Must the haunting emptiness of inner space isolating man from man and nation from nation continue to be the dominant theme of poet, prophet, and philosopher in our time?

Preparation for the healing of this breach in man's mastery of outer and inner space is a primary task of our time and central mission of education. It may lack the drama of the launching of a new satellite, but it is just as risky and even more essential to human survival. Present plans for undergirding the sciences, mathematics, and languages, important as they are, do not insure even a minimal morality essential to human community. For this, a radical orientation to other dimensions of education is required.

Orientation of education toward the conquest of inner space essential to complement our present mastery of outer space would mean emphasis on the meaning of persons in their unique inner space comparable to that now given to the measuring of common objects in outer space. It would mean as much radical research in the motivation and meaning of morality as we now give to the mastery and possession of materials. It would mean the weaning of the mind from its hypnotic fascination with bigness and masses born of preoccupation with outer space, and the cultivation of a new regard for the spacious interior integrity of the smallest domain of personal responsibility. It would mean creating a new climate of moral adventure and daring in human affairs to match the excitement of missions to the moon. It would mean the same discipline of discovery, the same openness to public review, the same confidence in the vitality of truht in the moral sphere as we now give the mathematical. It would mean the same patience with the slow and secret unfolding of moral selfhood, the same delicate care in the launching of life, as we now give the launching of a missile. It would mean cultivating the sense of mingled desperation and hope in every effort to link man with man and nation with nation that now qualifies every effort to link earth with outer space. It would mean finally, courage to put our money where our mouth is, to begin to pay for what we preach.

We speak glibly of the values we prize, but what preparation do we provide? By now, we should know there can be no significant human life, liberty, or the pursuit of happiness without the conquest of inner space. Yet, shifts, here too, come swiftly even if they are long in preparation. The Copernican Revolution in the disposition of the mind and heart and the conduct of human affairs is long overdue. It remains to be seen whether there are enough moral certainties, or better, certainties about morality, left in education to bring it about. But, of this we may be sure, education has no higher calling in our time than this, whether or not Congress appropriates accordingly. It may not be long before we have a missile circling the moon. How much longer can we afford to wait for human community to circle the earth?—From The Saturday Review

"Gee, If Only We Could Have Closed The Courts"

School Starts At Goettingen Unlike At UNC

Dave Davis

The beginning of a new semester, always exciting, especially for new students who are entering Carolina for the first time this year. But their experience will be quite different from mine about one year ago when I entered the University of Goettingen in Germany. There was no Orientation, and no actual date for the first day of classes. Each professor simply posted a list of the lectures and seminars which he planned to give, and a date on which the lectures would probably begin. The class buildings were spread about the city (pop. 80,000), and an afternoon bicycle tour helped me familiarize myself with the campus, a word which can hardly be used here.

The first three weeks were spent shopping around for classes. One attends all lectures which sound as if they might be interesting, and from visiting around, selects those which he thinks he would like to continue with for the rest of the term. Some students attend as many as 40 hours per week. As there are no specific home work assignments, this is not as overpowering as it sounds. The students complete a large amount of their reading and studying during the two vacations between semesters, one lasting two months, the other three months. This freedom of choice of the students extends even further. There are no special patterns of courses to be followed in order to obtain a degree. When a student is examined for his degree, he is responsible for everything in his field. Therefore he need not be told which courses he must take.

The opening of the school year was also a festive occasion. Old friends met at the old tavern to drinks beer with former friends, and the new students spent several weeks visiting these taverns, in order to find the ones best suited to their tastes. The old Rathskellar with the German band and singing fraternity boys was my favorite. About this time too, the fraternity members were shining up their dueling swords and getting ready for rush. The competition for places is not nearly so coveted as here, and by far the majority of the students prefer to remain independent.

Gradually things begin to settle down at the German universities, and the students settle down to a long cold winter of hard work and warm beer.

LETTERS

The Daily Tar Heel invites letters from readers both in the realm of praise and in the realm of criticism. The only stipulation placed on letters is that they must be signed by the author.

The editor will print all letters unless there are so many on one issue so that only a proportionate number pro and con may be printed.

That's What The Book Said

Professor of Latin, UNC
Walter Allen, Jr.

Tarquinius, the early king of Rome, was annoyed by the augur Attus Navius, who said that nothing new should be undertaken without first observing the flights of birds. Tarquinius said, "Then, as a test, tell me if the birds will permit what I now have in mind." Attus Navius went through his ritual and replied, "Yes." Tarquinius continued, "What I had in mind was that you should cleave a whetstone in half with a razor." Attus Navius took the razor and cut the whetstone in half.

Inquiry

Sam Frazier

The outburst of military action between Formosa and China has released a flood of comment. However, in all the things that have been said, very little constructive matter seems to have been produced. Most of the comments can be allocated to one of two prevailing ideas. First, it is assumed by some that the malady is a political one, i.e., it is the conflict of communism and democracy, and it is a territorial question (the pro and con of the idea that the proximity of the offshore islands and even Formosa to the mainland of China is natural proof that they should belong to Communist China). Second, it is assumed by some that the malady is a "bad thing indeed" and that Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations in order that the presure of world opinion might be directed to either one of the parties in question.

Ambling through the small amount of constructive actions which fortunately have been made, every individual is immediately (or should be immediately) made aware of their half-heartedness. The patroling of the area by the United States, the current Warsaw conferences, and the requests that Communist China be admitted to the United Nations are probably the most favorable actions which have been committed in attempts to heal the "malady." For the moment, possibly ,these are the only steps which may be wisely made, half-hearted as they are.

These steps are half-hearted in the sense that they represent the steps of a near-sighted person who in the near future will have to walk along a perilous path, and who neglects to supplement his vision with permanent corrective measures so that the path ahead may be safetly trod. Already in the corrective measures which have been taken, there should be an undercurrent of movement toward a permanent corrected situation. And there is such an undercurrent under way. However, it is not as prevailing as it should be, or for that matter, could be.

First, Nationalist China and Communist China should be viewed as two separate countries. Any visions of an eventual invasion of the Chinese mainland by the Nationalists on Formosa, or conversely an invasion of Formosa by the Chinese Communists, must be blotted out. In a sense, warped as some people may feel it is, the Chinese Communists chose their form of government as did the Chinese Nationalists. This is an age in which political self-determination by an area is the accepted fact, so for this reason the two different choices made by the Chinese must be respected.

However, in today's world, peace has to be respected and maintained by all nations, even when areas such as the two in question feel that they have some private business to "discuss" which is no one else's business.

Second, Communist China should be admitted to the United Nations on the grounds that it is a large area of the world and represents a large per cent of the world's population. With membership in the United Nations, more firm contacts may be made with the people of Communist China, and the influence of the United Nations in that area may be developed.

Thus, in light of current facts, these two steps are fundamental to any permanent solution. It is necessary that any nation or nations interested in establishing a permanent solution constantly cultivate these two ideas.

A PLUG FOR THE PLAYMAKERS

The Carolina playmakers are rarely the subject of much student discussion. In a way, this silence is rather strange, as the Playmakers is one of the University's oldest and most notable continuing institutions; but, on the other hand, the lack of student interest is not so surprising in the context of the fashionable and more or less general reverse-snobbism which infects a large portion of the campus population. This attitude applies not only to the Playmakers, but also to any campus activity which has a tinge of intellectual stimulation connected with it.

In the case of most intellectual pastimes, however, mass participation is not strictly necessary. In all but the exceptional case, a good book is as good as a good lecture, and a recorded concert will suffice for all but the most exacting afficionados, who demand the "living" experience of the concert hall. But there is no substitute for playgoing—for the unique experience of being a part of an audience imaginatively participating in the play being presented for its entertainment.

Also, as is true of any art, good theatre is very rare—particularly outside the large cities—and so the nearly consistent competence of the Playmakers should be all the more appreciated.

Despite the easy availability to University students of such a rare and exciting experience, the Playmaker front office reports that only six season tickets out of a total of one thousand have been sold to UNC students. This is a statistic of which most of us have a right to be pretty ashamed.

Perhaps it can be safely assumed that this column will have no influence: certainly no student should be expected to spend his money without investigation. So all that is asked here—and it isn't much, considering the possible gain—is that every student attend one of the fall Playmaker productions, just as an experiment. Fortunately, this season offers a choice of "Oklahoma," the greatest musical of all time, and "Look Homeward Angel," the dramatization of Tom Wolfe's novel and a current Broadway hit. Take your pick—light musical comedy, or heavy drama. Just go.

Rhyne Accepts Bell Committee Proposals

liberations and decisions, Rhyne said the best way to do this is for the UN "to make constant use of the International Court of Justice, a body which it now largely ignores."

Rhyne told the law sutdents here that what is needed for the world is the same type of unified and adequate court system recommended by the Bell Committee in this state.

BELL COMMITTEE

This committee's recommendations, if adopted, would be the greatest forward tsep in the field of improving judicial administration in the history of North Carolina," he said.

The Bell Committee — headed by State Senator J. Spencer Bell of Charlotte — proposed sweeping changes las summer for the state's court system.

The heart of the committee's proposals is recommendation for a unified court system of three divisions, with the supreme court vested with overall authority. These divisions are:

1. Appellate division composed of the supreme court;
2. General trial division, composed of present superior courts;
3. District trial division, which would abolish justice of the peace courts and r e c o r d e r's and magistrate's courts in the new district court role

Other, more detailed proposals were also made.

Rhyne said "I wholeheartedly approve of its recommendations. This modernization of the judicial system of North Carolina is long overdue."

The current system can only be corrected "by revitalizing the entire system" with the changes of the group.

He said the "spotlight of national attention is now focused upon North Carolina to see what it does with these very outstanding recommendations . . ."

Here, Rhyne said, is where lawyers fit into the picture — "not just a few lawyers but all the lawyers of North Carolina."

The state's lawyers need to make an "aggressive, firm stand" in support of the proposals.

"The lawyers of North Carolina have a great challenge and a great opportunity to perform a tremendous public service by supporting the Bell Committee's recommendations. I feel certain they will," he said.

In talking about the increasing loss of able young lawyers to better-paying fields, Rhyne reported that a Committee on Law Practice Economics, appointed by the American Bar Assn., studied the causes of the decline of economic status.

"It has now compiled data indicating that the economic plight of lawyers is due largely to our failure to utilize modern methods and procedures, both in our own law offices and in the courts.

"In this jet and atomic age, law business is still conducted too frequently through horse-and-buggy methods."

CU DAY

Woman's College Students Arriving On 22 Big Buses

nees from each N. C. State and Woman's College in further competition this morning.

The three, chosen from a group of 22 lovely Carolina coeds, are Betty Finley, representing Manly Dorm; Diana Johnson, sponsored by Alpha Delta Pi sorority; and Ann Robinson, the Delta Delta Delta sorority entrant.

22 busloads of girls from WC will arrive at 1:15 p.m. today to help kick off the initial event of CU day—the football game with State at 2 p.m. UNC males are invited to the Bell Tower parking lot to give the WC girls a friendly welcome.

Half-time activities at the game will include the presentation to visitors of Tom Long, president of the CU delegation; Don Furtado, president of UNC; Peggy Duncan, president of WC; Jimmy Hunt, president of State, and the nine finalists in the beauty contest.

After the game a reception will be held on the lawn in front of Graham Memorial, or, in case of rain, in the Tin Can.

Music for the reception will be furnished by the combo of Curtis Fields and Nick Kearns.

Social rooms in eight UNC men's dorms will be open to all guests from 12 noon until 1:45 p.m. today and again after the football game until 7:30 p.m. The dorms participating are Joyner, Winston, Conner, Cobb, Parker, Teague, Avery and Mangum.

The CU Queen will be crowned at a dance sponsored by the Order of the Holy Grail tonight from 8-11 p.m. in Woollen Gym.

The Embers Combo with Kack Anthony, vocalist, will furnish music for the coat and tie affair. All girls from Carolina, WC and State will be admitted free. A one dollar admission for men will be charged.

Other contestants and their sponsors from UNC were as follows. Eugenia Allen, Nurses' Dorm; Judith Bunn, Delta Kappa Epsilon; Mary Cabell Carlan, AFROTC; Carol Carothers, Delta Kappa Epsilon;

Katharine Fullenwiden, Phi Gamma Delta; Claire Hanner, Alderman; Happy Hurst, Delta Sigma Pi; Patsy McCaulley, Pi Beta Phi, Cecile Martin, Delta Kappa Epsilon; Sophia Martin, NROTC; Marilyn Maki, Graham;

Gail Minnich, Delta Kappa Epsilon; Frances Morrow, Alpha Gamma Delta; Charlotte Pope, Kappa Kappa Gamma; Sally Pullen, Kappa Sigma; Marjorie Reid, Alexander; Judy Rock, Mangum; Sally Wade, Pi Kappa Alpha; and Pat Wilson, Carr.

Judges for the contest are Jim Carse, acting chairman, and Howard Henry, both of UNC, along with a judge from State and WC.

A business meeting of the CU council will be held this morning at 10 o'clock in Roland Parker lounges. The agenda for the meeting has not been disclosed.

Baptist Church To Be Opened

A new Baptist Church will open tomorrow in the Conner Ridge development near Highway 15-501 bypass.

Forty members of a study group, headed by J. W. Moffit, will form the new Olin T. Binkley Memorial Baptist Church. These people have been meeting regularly for several months. The organizational meeting will be held in Hill Hall at 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

The Rev. John Terrill Wayland, of Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary at Wake Forest and for whom the new church is named, will be present at the organization and will deliver the sermon.

Teh Rev. John Terrill Wayland, professor of religious education in the Southeastern Seminary, will offer the prayer of dedication and will serve as interim pastor.

Dr. Binkley, a native of Harmony, N. C., holds degrees from Wake Forest, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Yale Divinity School and Yale University. He is a former pastor of the University Baptist Church in Chapel Hill and a former head of the Department of Religion at Wake Forest.

He was professor of ethics and sociology in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary before becoming professor of Christian Sociology and Ethics in the Southeastern Seminary, where he is also dean.

Dr. Wayland, a native of Missouri, is a graduate of William Jewell College, the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Yale Divinty School and Yale University. His previous parishes include the First Baptist Church of Monroe, N. C.; Temple Baptist Church, Durham; Pamlico Baptist Church, Baltimore, Md.; and the First Baptist Church, North Wildesboro, N. C.

Cooperative Living Cuts Costs In Co-op

By ANN FRYE

Low expenses is only one attractive feature of a relatively new and unique organization, known as the "International Cooperative Society."

The four members of the co-op society are currently looking for around 10 other men who would be interested in living in their rented house, eating meals and enjoying the companionship of persons of other nationalities.

Residents at the house pay the same rent as is charged by University dormitories. The economy comes with money saved on meals eaten at the house. Members of the co-op society work together cleaning the house and take turns fixing the meals. But this is just one measure of the "cooperative" effort.

Besides the economic aspect, an other reason for the co-op society with United States citizens.

All live together in the co-op house and, through elected officers, is to bring together foreign students control the budget of the entire operation of the house.

The co-op society is not a fraternity-type organization. The main difference between the society and a social fraternity is that anyone interested may become apart of the co-operative society.

The society here was formed nearly four years ago. The plan itself was not novel because similar groups had been operating successfully on other campuses throughout the country.

Since first formed here, the co-op society has had members from India, Formosa, Germany, Hawaii and Japan.

In addition to serving its own members, the society often entertains visitors, such as the Russian students who were here during the summer.

The co-op house is virtually independent of the University administration except that a special advisory board to the society rules on purchases of $300 or more.

To operate effectively, John Hodgkins, acting house manager, said yesterday the society needs at least 10 occupants.

A meeting for interested students will be called sometime soon, Hodgkins said. In the meantime, Hodgkins can be reached at the house on 208 West Franklin. The telephone number of the co-op house is 9-2471.

Watch Out For Passbooks

The athletic office yesterday requested that any students who have found athletic passbooks lost by others be returned to the athletic offices in Woollen Gymnasium or to Mrs. G. E. Shepard, registration office, Hanes Hall.

It was pointed out that these passbooks are not transferable and can, under no conditions, be used by anyone except their rightful owners. If lost books are not returned, the owners will be deprived of their use and they will be of no value to anyone else.

Covering The Campus

PLACEMENT SERVICE

The University Placement Service will sponsor a meeting Oct. 4 to acquaint seniors and graduate students with its operation in helping them find jobs after graduation.

The meeting will begin at 7:30 p.m. in Gerrard Hall Tuesday, Oct. 4.

GRADUATE CLUB

An organizational meeting of the Graduate Club Executive Board will be held Monday at 6 p.m. in the upstairs dining room at Lenoir Hall.

Club President Bob Rennick has asked members to bring trays to the dining room for the supper meeting.

FOURTH SEASON

WUNC-TV To Start Tomorrow

By JAMIE HOLMES

The fourth season of telecasting via Channel 4 from the campus studios of WUNC-TV begins tomorrow.

This station is one of three educational television stations in the country that operates on maximum allowable power, 100,000 watts. Some programs are also carried by as many as six commercial stations.

Headed by Director Earl Wynn, WUNC-TV broadcasts from 9 a.m.-1:30 p.m., then resumes telecasting from 6-10:15 p.m.

Anyone with a TV set can tune in on these programs as easily as they do on the commercial shows, Production Manager John Hawes said.

Although some of the work is correlated with Chapel Hill's pioneering Radio, TV and Motion Picture Department, Hawes emphasized the station's primary concern is to serve the campus, area and state in presenting programs of an educational or cultural nature.

WUNC-TV's ace in the hand is its mobile telecasting unit. Through its facilities all Tar Heel football games, as well as man other campus events, are filmed. Every Sunday morning the mobile unit travels to a Chapel Hill or surrounding area church to make a live telecast of the service.

From the local radio and auxiliary units at Woman's College and State College, WUNC-TV produces and telecasts four programs which are viewed daily by North Carolina High school students. At Chapel Hill, two programs in United States History and world history originate, with an official daily waching audience of 10,000 which, Hawes said, doesn't include the hundreds who watch without being officially counted.

By presenting these public service programs, WUNC-TV receives funds from the North Carolina-In School TV Budget, an extension of the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education.

The University Budget allots the rest of this station's operating funds of around $40,000.

School Of Dentistry

Dr. Ludwig G. Scott of Burlington has been appointed clinical assistant professor at the UNC School of Dentistry.

He will sepnd a day a week at the School of Dentistry where he will teach crown and bridge prosthodontics and instruct in technical courses.

Dr. Scott is an alumnus of the University and was a member of the first class to be graduated from the UNC School of Dentistry.

OPEN SATURDAY NIGHT 'TIL ? ? ?

Carolina has been made a solid favorite for today's big game against State, with the spread ranging anywhere from a touchdown to 13 points. Both Jim Tatum and Earle Edwards disagree with the experts and rightly so. Both know the tradition and fivalry involved in the contest, and both have seen favored teams defeated many times. This is not to say that Carolina should not be favored to win, or even that they shouldn't be a 13-point favorite. It is to say that today—anything can happen, and probably will.

The banter between Tatum and Edwards has filled the pages of state papers for days. Edwards says he is satisfied to be the underdog, which he has been for the past two years. Tatum feels that since State is defending champion and has beaten Carolina two straight years perhaps the experts were a little too liberal with points. Who is right? We'll know this afternoon about 5:00.

Wooden Goal Posts Erected

Temporary goalposts have been erected in Kenan Stadium so the victor can take the spoils without damaging anything of real value. Last year a minor riot resulted when State students attempted to take down the steel goal posts. A wise move by the student leaders of the two campuses, who voted in the proposal.

The new rules passed last winter by the NCAA go into effect today at Carolina, as well as all over the nation. One change calls for more liberal substitutions, and both coaches here are expected to platoon their first and second units. Another change states that a lineman may block on offense with only one arm.

But these pale into insignificance compared to the big change, the point after touchdown. Two points if by pass or run, one if by kick, and the line of scrimmage begins on the three yard line instead of the two. Odd sounding scores will be coming in from around the country, such as 15-8, 23-16, and so on. Now the coaches and quarterbacks have an added headache . . . gamble for two, or go for an almost sure one.

Predictions

This corner will now add its two bits to the prediction chart. Here's how they line up as we see it:

Carolina 22, State 13
Clemson 37, Virginia 6
Maryland 21, Wake Forest 8
South Carolina 15, Duke 13

The last pick is not a misprint. We believe the Gamecocks will upset the Devils tonight in Columbia.

An addition to the many facts about today's big battle: An Earle Edwards-coached team has never lost to a Jim Tatum-coached team. Maybe a different story this afternoon. . . .

State this this year will bea different typo ball club than came to Kenan last season. Without the two Richards, Christy and Hunter, the Pack will stop going for the "home run," the long scoring play. This go-round they will feature short, consistent (they hope) gains and long sustained drives downfield.

Carolina's offense should be explosive and exciting. With Cummings or Lowe calling signals, they can fill the air with passes. Breakaway backs like Folckomer, Smith, DeCantis, and Schuler can go the distance on any given plays. And power-runners Coker, Klochak, and Lipski furnish the needed strong-arm punch through the line.

Murals Meetings Set

The Intramural Department has announced that a joint managers meeting will be held in room 301-A Woollen Gym Monday night, Sept. 22.

All managers, both frat and dorm, are urged by the department to attend. Managers are also asked to remember that entries for tag

Three tag football officials meetings will be held next week at 4:30. Meetings will be held Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday afternoons and all those interested in officiating are urged to attend as the departmnt still has many positions open.

Drum & Bugle Corps To Play At Game

CHAPEL HILL—The USAF Drum & Bugle Corps, to appear in Kenan Stadium Saturday, is the only one of its kind in the world and is completely different from the usual conception of a Drum & Bugle Corps. It not only takes up "where other groups have left off," but the departure is so absolute that it constitutes a revelation in Drum & Bugle Corps artistry.

Placing equal emphasis on musicianship and perfect marching precision, the USAF Drum & Bugle Corps is not only the acme in parade skill but is also one of the most musicianly ever heard. The intricate formations that it faultlessly executes have been acclaimed the most exact ever designed.

Its repertoire is composed entirely of special arrangements and runs the gamut of musical selections ranging from extracts of the "New World Symphony" to "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" and from the Latin American "Mambo Jambo" to Dixieland Jazz. Lilting waltzes and spirited overtures are standard fare.

The instrumentation employed by the USAF Drum 1 Bugle Corps is novel and unique since in addition to utilizing the customary Scotch bass, tenor and snare drums plus the soprano, tenor, French horn and baritone bugles, it has added a fifth voice, bass bugles. The Corps has the distinction of being the first musical group to employ these custom-built instruments.

They were designed especially for the Corps and give it a tonal quality that cannot otherwise be duplicated. To complete the departure from the instrumentation of the conventional or standard-type Drum & Bugle Corps that incorporates a bagpipe band.

"The most spectacular Drum & Bugle Corps in the world." Such was the opinion of the Boston Daily Record after witnessing a pre-game performance by the USAF Drum & Bugle Corps at a Boston Red Sox-New York Yankees Baseball game at Fenway Park. Two thousand miles to the south, the newspaper, El Mundo, of San Juan, Puerto Rico, claimed the group to be "the most versatile organization in the world." Across the Atlantic, Edinburgh's staid publication, The Scotsman, took in a performance at Edinburgh Castle and forthwith commented, without mincing words or wasting space, "Amazing."

These are typical of the reviews which have greeted the USAF Drum continents. Performing in a total & Bugle Corps performances on four of fifteen countries, the colorful spectacular exhibition put on by its sixty-one perfectionists has won the admiration of millions. As a result of these appearances and as a further attestation to the excellence of the group, the following adiitional excerpts from musical reviews are listed:

"They played some of the most spirited music ever to fall on local ears." Savannah Morning News.

"The finest in the world." Manassas Sun.

"Mesmerized onlookers." Wilmington Star News.

"Spectacular, stirring, inspiring." Minneapolis Star.

"A star corps. A first-class military formation with a wealth of musical harmony and impeccable parade presentation." Center Eclair (France).

"A marvelous music corps. How the men do it is unbelieveable." Darmstadt Tageblatt

"The music and performance were superb. The spectators were enraptured by the show . . . Exact marching and exact music." Neue Ruhr Zeitung.

The USAF Drum & Bugle Corps is one of the world's most traveled musical organizations. Organized in December 1949, under the supervision of Colonel George S. Howard, Chief of Bands and Music, USAF, the group is an integral part of the internationally acclaimed United States Air Force Band but operates as a separate unit.

One of the most popular groups of the United States Air Force Band organization, it has become world renowned in a relatively short period of time. From a modest beginning, in which its performances were confined to its home station, Bolling Air Force Base in Washington, D. C., the USAF Drum & Bugle Corps has achieved a position of international eminence in which it has become the most sought after group of its kind.

It has displayed its undeuplicated skill on four continents, North America, Europe, Africa and Asia. Travelling in excess of one million miles, the Corps has appeared extensively in the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico, Bermuda, England, Scotland, France, Germany, Libya, Morocco, Hawaii, Japan, Korea, Okinawa, and the Azores. Its performances are viewed and heard by a minimum of one million people yearly.

State QB Ernie Driscoll Is Declared Ineligible

RALEIGH (AP)—Geared to defend its Atlaitic Coast Conference football championship, North Carolina State College was stunned yesterday by the loss of first string quarterback Ernie Driscoll.

ACC Commissioner James H. Weaver reported the senior from Pittsburgh, Pa., had exhausted his eligibility as of last July.

Weaver said he made the discovery in a check of eligibility blanks submitted by players and received by his office this morning.

"There was no attempt to falsify records or to mislead anyone," Weaver explained. "An honest mistake was made and we are deeply sorry that the announcement had to be made at this time."

Driscoll and N. C. State athletic officials had been under the impression that he had one more year to play under the conference's five-year eligibilityr ule.

Coach Earle Edwards, who will send his Wolfpack against arch rival Carolina Saturday in the season opener, said the loss was a jolt to his team. "We will miss him more than anyone else can imagine," he added.

Driscoll, a 6-2, 196-pounder and an excellent passer, had been tabbed to start against Carolnia. Edwards said he would be replaced by Frank Cackovic, a senior from Steelton, Pa. Sophomores Gerry Mancini and Ron Wojcicki will run the Wolfpack's second and third units.

The news of Driscoll's loss cast a pall of gloom over the N. C. State campus, where students prepared a big pep rally to send the Wolfpack off to defend the ACC football crown it won last season.

"This whole thing has come as a terrible shock to us, especially to Driscoll," said Coach Edwards. "He has been stunned by the news that he won't be able to play this year."

A year when Driscoll dropped out of school appeared responsible for the mixup.

Driscoll had enrolled at Indiana State Teachers College in September, 1951, and played one year of football. He remained out of school in 1952, before entering the Army in August, 1953. He was discharged in June, 1955.

Driscoll enrolled at N. C. State in the fall of 1955, but was held out of football. He saw action last year for the first time.

Weaver explained that Driscoll had six years and 10 months to complete his eligibility—five years under the conference rule and 22 months for his time in service.

Figuring the period from this enrollment at Indiana State Teachers College, Weaver continued, "his eligibility expired in July of 1958."

Edwards said he had discussed eligibility with Driscoll on several occasions, and both thought the quarterback had another year to play. "It was my belief that Driscoll entered the Army immediately after dropping out of school in 1952. I did not know that he laid out a year," the coach said.

Edwards said the loss of Driscoll would be great. "In addition to his offensive duties, which he did unusually well, he called defensive backfield signals and was one of the most valuable men on the team in that department," he added.

WAA Holds Annual Picnic

The Women's Athletic Association's annual orientation picnic was held Wednesday from 12:00 to 3:00 by Kessing Pool.

Sandwiches, potato chips, cake and cokes were served by this year's officers: Jo Carpenter, president, May Wilkerson, vice-president, Ginny Pearce, awards chairman, Lucy Peacock, treasurer, Kay Smith, secretary, and Jackie Womble, publicityc hairman.

After the 400 girls present had eaten, the WAA council presented a skit entitled take-offs on TV shows. "The Big Payoff," "It Could Be You," and "Queen For A Day" followed. Bess Myerson (Ginny Pearce) and Randy Merriman (May Wilkerson) chose Murial Dang as Queen for a Day. The Queen was then shown many lovely fashions such as a low trimmed tank suit, a flowered sweat suit, a bussed up baseball ensemble fit for a queen, and a Mademoiselle hockey outfit.

Following the skits the group went swimming until 3:00. The outing was considered a huge success and "we all" at the gym wish "you all" would come down and join us.

Fall Baseball Starts

Coach Walter Rabb announced today that he would like to kick off the fall baseball practice with a meeting on Tuesday, September 23 at 8 o'clock in Woollen Gymnasium. He urges all students on campus who are interested in either varsity or freshman baseball to attend this meeting.

Only Two Sophs Start

Messrs. Sonny Folckomer and Fred Mueller may consider themselves nideed fortunate. They are the only sophomores who will be in the starting lineup for today's game with State.

The line, with the exception of Mueller, is solidly senior. From end to end, from Kemper to Turlington all are last year men.

The backfield, with the exception of Folckomer is composed of all juniors. The firm of Cummings, Smith, & Goff is strictly third year men.

All in all, there are only three sophs on the first two units. The other man is end John Schroeder.

State Defeats Carolina 21-14 On Fumbles

TAR HEELS SCORE—Nelson Lowe goes over the line for Carolina's first tally in the fourth period. However N. C. State won 21-14.

Early Lead Holds After Late Rally Falls Short

By RUSTY HAMMOND

State College's Wolfpack, playing tough, aggresive football, took advantage of the breaks and made them pay off in a 21-14 win over arch-rival Carolina yesterday in Kenan Stadium. The win marked State's 3rd straight upset win over the Heels.

The Tar Heels had a bad case of fumbilitis all afternoon. All of the Pack's three TDs came after recovered fumbles.

The statistics were almost equally divided, except in the fumble and intercepted pass department. State recovered 5 Heel fumbles and picked off 2 passes.

The first half it was all State. The Wolves ran up a 14-0 lead by intermission, the only real Carolina threat being halted at the State 8-yard line.

State's first score came when center Bill Hill fell on a Tar Heel fumble on the enemy 27. Four plays later halfback Bob Trowbridge circled right end for 15 yards and paydirt. Larry Dixon converted to put State ahead 7-0.

Then, with only 6:33 remaining in the half, Keily Minyard racked up Jack Cummings and Hill again recovered the fumble when Cummings dropped it.

From the 20, Trowbridge again set out around right end, outran four players, and crossed the double stripes for State's second marker. Dixon again split the uprights and State led 14-0. Carolina fell short within the Wolfpack 10, and left the field behind 14-0.

It took the boys from Raleigh only 4 minutes after intermission to post their third score of the day. The Pack kicked off, then recovered another Tar Heel bobble at the Carolina 30. After grinding to the 1 for a first and goal, Frank Cakovic sent Ron Podwika off left tackle into the end zone. Dixon was accurate once again and it was 21-0, State.

Carolina took the kick and drove to the State three, where they were stopped short. But after a Trowbridge kick went only to the State 31, Nelson Lowe sneaked intot he end zone for Carolina's first tally. Jim Schuler ran over with the point after try for two points and a 21-8 margin. The score came just after the beginning of the final quarter.

After the Tar Heels kicked, Ron Koes plunged into the backfield causing the first State fumble which Don Redding covered. But the Heels lost a chance when they fumbled still again and State regained possession on their own 41.

With only 4:39 left in the ballgame, Carolina launched a sustained rive from their twenty, (after a missed field goal attempt by State), for their second and last touchdown. The whole 80 yards took only 1 minute, 15 seconds, and four plays. Jack Cummings completed four straight passes for the distance. Al Goldstein caught the first two, running to the State 48. John Schroeder grabbed the next and advanced to the Pack 38. Then Cummings hit Jim Schuler on a down-and-out pass to the left, and Schuler crossed the goal line. Car-

Ackland Art Center Formally Opened

Art educators joined state officials Saturday to dedicate formally a million dollar art center at UNC.

The center, named for a wealthy lawyer, William Hayes Ackland, contains, in addition to galleries, classroom and office space for the University Art Dept.

Dr. S. Lane Faison Jr., former Tar Heel and present head of the art department of Williams College in Masachusetts, gave the principal dedicatory address.

He compared the study of art in the United States with that of Europe.

"Paradoxical as it may seem, the relative lack of great monuments from our own past is a major cause of the development and widespread popularity of the study of art-history in the United States," he said.

Faison continued, "Europeans grow up with the great past around them and the formal study of it is generally reserved for specialists in the universities. In the United States, a less specialized foundation for such study has gradually become accepted as part of the general program in liberal education.

"While Americans take pride in their own cultural heritage, its very brevity leads naturally to an interest in the cultures of other parts of the world.

"European students in American universities are often impressed, therefore, by the breadth and impartiality of our study of culture other than american."

INTRODUCTION

Faison was introduced by Dr. Joseph C. Sloan who will take over as head of both the University's art department and the art center on Feb. 1. He currently is with Bryn Mawr College.

William D. Carmichael Jr., vice president of the Consolidated University, accepted the building from Edson B. Olds of Washington, a friend of Ackland.

College galleries loaned the University paintings and other art objects which will be on display until Oct. 20.

Meany Scores Right-To-Work Legislation

WASHINGTON — (AP) — AFL-CIO President George Meany said today right-to-work laws create strife and bitterness and destroy sound labor management-relations.

"The shoddy proposition mislabelled 'the right to work' conveys neither rights nor work," Meany said. "It will not create one new job.

"It will not restore one worker now unemployed to a payroll. It will not save tre job of a single person who now faces an impending layoff."

On the contrary, Meany said, the right-to-work law holds only the promise of weaker unions, and, he added:

"Weaker unions can only mean lower wages and living standards, lower purchasing power, shrunken markets, depressed communities, and fewer job and profit opportunities, to the mutual detriment of all."

Meany made his attack on the right-to-work laws in the foreword of a 133-page book issued by the AFL-CIO. The book details arguments against such propositions to be voted on this fall in referenda in six states—California, Ohio, Colorado, Kansas, Washington and Idaho.

UNC PIANISTS TO PLAY

WUNC-TV To Televise Art Museum Programs

RALEIGH — (AP) — The fall program at the North Carolina museum of art will begin Wednesday with the opening of a series of television programs over WUNC-TV.

Charles W. Stanford, museum curator of education, will open the TV series with a discussion of "the school of American painting."

The series, entitled "History of Art," will be aimed primarily at high school students. The presentations will be at 2:30 p.m. every Wednesday for 16 weeks.

Beginning Saturday, Oct. 4, at 3 p.m. and each Saturday thereafter, there will be a gallery tour for museum visiors.

On Sunday, Sept. 28, a duo-pianist concert will inaugurate the museum's Sunday series.

The duo-pianists are Dr. William Newman and Dr. Wilton Mason, both of the University of North Carolina faculty.

Other scheduled Sunday events:

Oct. 5 — Lecture by Robert Lee Humber of Greenville, president of the North Carolina State Art Society, on "The North Carolina Museum of Art." Oct. 12—Excerpts from "Don Giovanni," by the Grassroots Opera Co.

Oct. 19 — A lecture by Stanford on "John Singleton Copley, 18th century American painter." Oct. 26—A Belgian film "Peter Paul Rubens and his school."

Nov. 9 — Concert by William Klentz, cellist. Nov. 16—Lecture by Stanford on "the early English school," featuring Marcus Gheeraerts. Nov. 30—A film on "the English school of portraiture."

Dec. 14—Concert by Ethel Casey, soprano, and Walter Golde, pianist. Dec. 21 — Lecture by Stanford on Pathir's "Flight into Egypt."

Jan. 18 — Concert by the Alden string quartet. Jan. 25—Lecture by Stanford on "The French school," and a film, "French Tapestries Visit America."

October 10 Is Deadline For Student Insurance

October 10 has been set as the deadline for student insurance.

The cost of the policy is $9.00 a year. According to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, the premium's cost has dropped since last year.

Insured students will be covered for up to $1000 for loss of life and for up to $200 for surgical benefits.

Jefferies said, "I think this insurance plan paid off for us last year." He pointed out that the insurance will only cost 75 cents a month.

The insurance coverage is for a 12-month period, Sept. 1, 1958 Sept. 1, 1959, including the periods when students are traveling to and from Chapel Hill, during vacations, and the summer breaks. Jefferies said last year there were not many claims during the school year but the company paid off many times during the summer.

The policy is made available through the Pilot Life Insurance Company, Raleigh.

For the married student, there is a Blue Cross and Blue Shield program at a special group rate. This program offers an excellent opportunity to the married student to provide coverage for himself, his wife and all unmarried dependent children under 19 years of age. The cost of the program will be 17.50 per quarter.

An information booth will be set up during registration. Applications for either insurance policy will be available at the information booth, the Y and at Graham Memorial.

Jefferies reminded students who already hold policies and are eligible to receive payments for claims must file claims with the company. Blanks are available at his office and the Infirmary, he said.

Evans Receives Alumni Position

Durham Mayor E. J. Evans was elected chairman of alumni giving at UNC Saturday.

Evans was named by the council which controls annual gifts by alumni for unrestricted purposes. He succeeds James W. Poole of Greensboro who headed a $70,000 campaign last year.

Atty. Fred W. Morrison of Washington, D. C., and Prof. J Charles Morrow of the University's Chemistry Dept. were also elected to the council.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

William John Schmidt, Steven Carlton Lowder, Harvey Lake Harris, John Leonard Henderson Jr., and Misses Julia Ayres and Mary Blackmon Roberts.

Robert Pollard Named As Library Assistant

Robert Pollard has been named as the principal library assistant in the Catalog Department of Wilson Library. This position was formerly held by Maurice Feldman. Pollard assumed duties September 10.

Mrs. Martha Goff has joined the staff to replace Pollard as library assistant in the department. Mrs. Goff was graduated from Saint Mary's Junior College and the University of North Crolina with a major in English education.

Mrs. Elizabeth Degree is the new senior library assistant in the Acquisitions Department.

CUSC Plans Many Topics For Next Meet

The Consolidated University Student Council met yesterday to implement the first Consolidated University Day and to plan several resolutions to be brought up at their October meeting.

Revision of the constitution of the organization is planned for the executive committee when it meets either at the end of this month or the beginning of October. Suggestions for revision of the constitution will be put before the body as a whole in the October meeting.

Also to be discussed during the executive committee meeting will be the finances of the organization in order to decide whether the individual CU Days wil be paid for by the host school or whether a proportional arrangement can be made.

The Council plans to discuss in its October meeting resolution to aid the State Legislature in providing adequately for higher education in North Carolina. Specific emphasis will be placed on the needs of the three member schools.

Proposals were also made for improving town and campus relationships, bringing cultural events to the three schools, coordinating and publicizing the activities of the schools, and for fraternity expansion.

Noel Houston Foundation To Be Directed By Wynn

The "Noel Houston Foundation for Writers" has been established at Chapel Hill to encourage and finance development of talent in student writers.

The foundation, a memorial to Noel Houston, author, playwright and teacher, who died early this month, will be directed by Earl Wynn, head of the UNC communications center.

Ike Accused Of Resisting Integration

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Americans for Democratic Action today accused President Eisenhower of passive resistance to the Supreme Court's antisegregation desisions.

The organization also said congress had staged a "bipartisan sitdown strike on school integration."

The ADA national board issued a statement saying there is only one way out of the existing "constitutional crisis and moral morass, and that is for the American people to insist on action from the president and the congress they elected."

The ADA, which describes itself as a nonpartisan organization fighting for liberal principles, called on Eisenhower specifically to use his emergency funds to "assist schools that have been closed by illegal state laws."

It also said the Justice Department could seek, through contempt citations, to "demonstrate the illegality of School closings to frustrate integration."

Some public schools have been closed in Arkansas and Virginia after court orders to open their classrooms to both whites and negroes.

The ADA board called on congres to enact laws backing up the Supreme Court's desegregation decisions.

In charging Eisenhower with passive resistance to the high court's rulings, the ADA criticized his statement about favoring a slower pace on integration. The ADA said this made him "Faubus' unwilling fellow-traveler and Almond's unwitting accomplice."

The reference was to Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. of Virginia.

Carmen To Be Performed By University Chorus

The University Chorus, under the direction of Wilton Mason of the UNC Music Dept., will hold its first rehearsal Tuesday at 4: p.m. in 108 Hill Hall.

All former members will be welcomed at that time and any student wishing to try out for membership may also attend, Mason said.

The feature presentation this year, he said, will be a concert version of Bizet's Carmen, starring Clarmae Turner, leading American contralto, along with local artists and the University Symphony Orchestra, Mason said.

Rev. King Stabbed In Harlem

NEW YORK— (AP) —The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., leader of the successful Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott, was stabbed and critically wounded in a Harlem store Saturday.

Police said King was stabbed by a Negro woman, apparently mentally deranged, and that the attack did not appear to have anything to do with racial issues.

The noted Negro minister was stabbed in the left chest while he was autographing copies of his new book, "Stride Toward Freedom," for a crowd in the Blumstein Department store in Harlem.

He was rushed to Harlem Hospital with the knife still in his chest, and later was reported in critical condition.

Gov. Averell Harriman, learning of the attack, hurried to King's hospital bedside.

A patrolman at the scene of the stabbing arrested Mrs. Izola Ware Curry, 42, immediately after the attack.

Detectives later described her as an apparent mental case. They said she also had a fully-loaded pistol concealed in her dress.

The book King had been autographing tells the story of the year-long boycott by which Montgomery Negroes, refusing to de-segregated buses, finally brought about integration on the buses through court action.

Although homes and churches were bombed and other violence occurred during the boycott, King came unscathed through that period.

He was arrested for disorderly conduct early this month because he allegedly refused to obey a policeman's order to move away from the city hall steps in Montgomery, but was released when the police commissioner paid his fine.

The 29-year-old King had come to New York for the start of a lecture tour in connection with publication of his book last Wednesday.

The principle theme of the book is that Negroes must use non-violent resistance in their fight against segregation.

Algeria

The regime set up in Cairo for Algeria is the beginning of what will be a series of steps to make a United Arab Republic which stretches from Algeria to Afghanistan. This may be a heart rending defeat for American Foreign policy, but it is surely a victory for the Arabs who long have suffered from the colonialistic domination of European powers.

Shortly the new regime will be recognized by Red China and Russia, and it will again precipitate a worald war in order to wrest the country away from the new regime. A plebescite will be demanded – this time from the Russians – and the result will show that the Algerians want independence where a dominion status could have been established several years ago.

Then, the United States if it pursues it present policy of power politics will be again further isolated..

It is high time that the United States woke up to the realities of the situation and realized that Arab nationalism is the most overiding force in the Middle East. Then the U.S. could wage an economic offensive for the Middle East which would undercut the Russian's effort in the area.

They could do this by simply recognizing and encouraging the spirit that is predominant. They must recognize that not only the United States, but more important the people of the area have a stake in the economic future of the Middle East.

They must agree upon aid without strings attatched, and then maybe, only maybe, the United States may win back the support of what is called the "uncommitted" peoples.

The United States would be true to the principles upon which it was founded, and would follow the only course left open at the present time short of destruction.

The only unfortunate thing to come out of the new exile government of Algeria is that the constitutional reforms of General Charles DeGaulle will probably not be passed, for he will have fallen in disfavor.

This price is a high one to pay, but it is better than a losing war or peace with dishonor.

Labor

A part of the future of a free labor movement rests in part on what the Teamsters Union does about one James Hoffa.

Back in the late 19th century it was recognized that some method of worker organization was necessary for the workers to free themselves from low wages, intolerable conditions, and paternalistic management policies.

Since then unions have grown, and the economic interests of many have received an outlet. Many non-laborers have led the movement in order to see that American democracy is truly a democracy and not just a spokesman for the vested interests. The guarantee of equal opportunity seems to be intimately bound up in the democratic labor union movement.

However, other non-laborers have joined the movement. They have joined because they saw that they might either control the country through the labor force or that they could make a huge financial profit from unionism.

Such a man is James Hoffa. Nobody can truthfully say of James Hoffa that he does not deliver his workers the best contracts, nor can they deny that operating conditions have been improved since Hoffa took charge, after an equally corrupt reign of Dave Beck. However, it is not the fact of delivery of contracts and working conditions that counts, it is the how he does this that counts.

The end may indeed be noble, but corrupt means never did justify a good end. Moreover, the end cannot be called exactly noble either, for Hoffa profits by the kick-backs, Hoffa profits by th dues, and Hoffa gives very little.

A person like Hoffa is operating on a philosophy that if you give the people enough food, comfort, and occasional luxury, the people are satisfied and are not worried about having a say in larger more far reaching affairs that may at the present time affect them only indirectly, but in the future affect them directly. In short, he is saying that these people do not want a voice – that they want James Hoffa to serve as their mouthpiece. He is saying that people are no damn good, and that is reflected in the type of leadership the union has.

A contrast between the Teamsters Union and the United Auto Workers is like the contrast between night and day. This summer on the University campus, the UAW sponsered an educational camp, in which members of the union discussed not only right to work laws, but the conflict in the Middle East, the Kennedy-Ive Bill, and the United Nations. Corruption has not been an issue with this union.

A good labor movement is necessary. It must respect each members individuality, and must let each member have a say in the ultimate policy. It must strive to educate as well as strive for the economic betterment of its members. It must be designed so that end product will be an American democracy in which all the people are represented all of the time, rather than some of the people all of the time.

A democratic labor movement is a step in that direction. A movement such as that of James Hoffa's Teamsters takes a step in the opposite direction. The labor movement is resting on a tenuous foundations as long as men like James Hoffa have the ultimate say in policy matters, for it wil not be too long to the day when the public will be sick of hearing about corruption in labor and institute right-to-work laws in every state. This would be a calamity to democracy, but labor must be the first to take a step.

A strong, representative, democracy where equality of opportunity is the rule rather than the exception hangs in the balance.

The Functions Of Lawyers

Charles S. Rhyne

(The following is the first part of former American Bar Association President Charles S. Rhyne's talk, part of the Law School's Heck Lecture Series. The remainder of the speech will be reprinted in subsequent issues of The Daily Tar Heel.)

You who today begin your career in the study of the law will undoubtedly study the history of law and the legal profession. You will learn that the legal profession grew up as a substitute for armed knights and soldiers. The knights and soldiers were hired to settle disputes by force. As civilization developed, men came to recognize the inequity of decision by force. Lawyers were hired to settle disputes by substituting reason and justice for violence as the criteria for determining the rights of man. This reason proceeded from and was based upon basic principles known as the rule of law. The beginnings of the rule of law are largely unknown but its principles have remained the same throughout the recorded history of man.

Tonight I wanted to review for you the functions of lawyers in the world of today. I would classify the lawyer's functions as follows: (1) Counseling and advising; (2) advocacy in the courts and before other forums; (3) public service; (4) improving the legal profession; (5) improving the administration of justice; (6) improving law; and (7) leadership on public issues of the day.

COUNSELING AND ADVISING

Most lawyers spend their time principally as counselors advising men and women on present or future problems or courses of action. As our society has grown more complex almost every person has need of a lawyer at one time or another. Every person is affected by the existing maze of Federal, state and local statutes and regulations. The lawyer is called upon for advice more often than the members of any other profession and the advice often covers personal and business matters which extend far beyond strictly legal problems. He must therefore have a deep understanding of human nature and of modern society. The able lawyer must have a comprehensiveness of view, a composite of information in many fields of learning. Counseling and advising require not only a thorough knowledge of the general principles of law but a constant and continuing knowledge of the many changes in statutes, regulations and orders, and court interpretations thereof. In planning for the future the lawyer must be able to forecast governmental action as well as changes in law.

While more and more people have learned that it is better to plan for the future rather than meet problems on a crisis basis, still most of the people who come into a lawyer's office are already in some real or imaginary trouble and have not come to see the lawyer until that trouble arose. The annual legal check-up sponsored by the Michigan State Bar Association and other bar associations is a new development in the area of prevention of legal difficulties. The chief reason people do not go to law offices in greater numbers is lack of knowledge as to legal fees. The Michigan check-up plan gets over this roadblock by advertising in all media a 30-minute conference on any legal problem for a fee of $10.00. If more legal work is required the usual rates apply. Those rates vary widely but an hourly charge has become the usual standard.

Even the greatest and busiest trial lawyers spend much of their time counseling and advising. Equipping yourself to perform this function well is essential to success in the law.

THE ART OF ADVOCACY

The most common picture of a lawyer in the public mind is that of advocacy. Lawyers are trained in the art of prosecuting and defending the legal rights of man. They are trained analysts of words, motives, and character. This art of advocacy is brought to bear in disputes of man v. man or man v. government in law offices and in court, in hearings before government in law offices and in court, in hearings before government agencies or in hearings and discussions before other forums or bodies. Lawyers are recognized experts in collecting facts and in presenting them in adversary proceedings.

The most intensive work which you will do as a lawyer is trial work. It is also the hardest and most difficult work of the lawyer. Proficiency in the art of advocacy is something that is acquired hrough years of great effort and experience. Few indeed are the lawyers who really master this most difficult function of our profession. The ability to knife through mountains of facts and present a client's position in a clear and logical, yet concise, manner is the hallmark of the great lawyer.

Lawyers no longer have the two or three days, or week or more, for the argument of a case as they did in the days of Webster or Choate. So in advocacy we lawyers of our day labor under different rules and under much greater pressure. We also face the complications of our more developed economic and social machinery and the problems thereby created. The ability to select and go quickly to the heart of decisive issues marks the great advocate in our appellate courts today. Records are long and voluminous, so the selection of material and preparation for argument is an essential and back-breaking chore which the advocate must perform.

Our complex society has resulted in the administrative regulatory agency—a new forum which commands a new type of advocacy. Many involved cases go on there for months and years. Here a different type of trial work is required but it is in many ways just as demanding as trial work in court. Again, the ability to condense and evaluate great masses of material is the hallmark of the great lawyer.

Nearly every young lawyer envisions himself as another Clarence Darrow. But the trouble is that with the changing character of our society the great lawyers of our day are no longer giants of the courtroom but legal advisors to large business, large labor or large government. There is still need for the trial lawyer but he no longer dominates the legal profession. I say this most regretfully, as one who has done much trial work, but it is nonetheless an accurate report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

Law and participation in public affairs go hand in hand. No group or profession devotes more time to public service than lawyers. The head of nearly every community, state or national activity is a lawyer. Approximately two-thirds of the members of Congress are lawyers. Twenty-three of the presidents of the United States have been lawyers. More than a majority of the governors of states and the mayors of cities are lawyers. The legal profession is, therefore, the great incubator of the public leaders of our Nation.

Nearly every lawyers at one time or another will be in the public servcie on a full-time or a part-time basis. Public service is most definitely one of the primary functions of our profession.

Quemoy & Matsu

The United States is presently in a bind in the Far East where any step it may take is a disaster. What is more the ugly spectre of a World War where nuclear weapons may be used hangs over the heads of the world.

The mistake is not in present action, for any present action or inaction is wrong. The mistake lies in history. It lies in a policy of non-recognition for a government which is definitely de facto and is most certainly de jure, unless the United States no longer recognizes the right of revolution upon which this nation was founded. It lies in putting the weight of the United States behind a person as ambitious and untrustworthy as Chiang Kai-Shek. It lies in unleashing Chiang in 1953 to put a hefty percentage of his military force into the islands so near to the mainland as to be dangerous to the security interests of the Chinese Communists.

What is worse, Quemoy and Matsu have never been asked whom they would like to ally themselves with. They have been as forceably controlled by Chiang as Hungary was by Russia. The U. S. is in a fairly ironic predicament at the present time, for it is helping the Chinese protect Quemoy and Matsu from the Chinese.

The predicament the United States is in at the present time is serious, for as long as the United States maintains its present policy of backing Chiang in maintaining Nationalist control of the two islands, war is immiment. From the recent exchange of notes between Moscow and Washington and the recent exchange of fire between the mainland and the islands, the war is more than possible, it is probable. The only victory the United States could gain at that time is a holding action in which American lives would be lost, but world war averted. With the recently announced policy of letting American flyers follow attacking Chinese planes back into the mainland, even world war will probably not be avoided.

The other alternative is to back down from the announced policy of defending the islands, and to tell Chiang publically that the U. S. will let the mainland Chinese take over Quemoy and Matsu. This would lead to great loss of face on the eyes of the allies who look to the U. S., with trust and expect the U. S. to back up its promises with constructive and concrete action.

The United States is in a position which it cannot easily get out of short of war. At least one avenue, however, suggests itself. This avenue is the immediate recognition of Red China and dealing with them through regular diplomatic channels which would in all probability avert war. Secondly, the United States could suggest a cease fire, a further agreement should be made that Chian's forces leave the islands, and finally that a U.N. plebescite be held on the islands to determine their disposition as to whether they wish to be autonomous, controlled by Chiang or by Mao Tse-Tung.

With regard to Chiang, the United States should make it clear to the Nationalist leader that it will not back any return to the mainland unless the Chinese people vote in a supervised plebescite to return Chiang to power. This last is doubtful, for the Chinese people are far better off today than they were under Chiang. They at least can hope for a strong nation, not one to be overrun by the Japanese. If any truism came out of Owen Lattimore, it was that revolution which brought the Communists to power was a popular one, for the people near Mongolia could just look over the border to see better economic conditions.

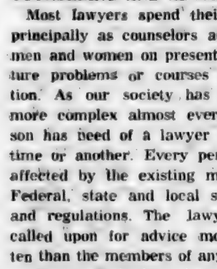
It maybe too late for the United States to salvage what it could have gained from recognition not too many years ago – a China independent of Russia once that China became internally strong, but at least it can be hoped that a war can be averted, and that the United States has neither compromised its principles nor its allies

They Made The News

Davis B. Young

Swinging through the 26 letters of ye old alpha bet, it becomes apparent that over 2100 persons figured in the news this week on the UNC campus.

These were the new students, coming from Charlotte, New York, Honolulu and all points east and west, who officially became members of the Carolina Family this week.



HERMAN GODWIN

Starting a week ago Thursday, en masse, this large group toured, listened and dated their way through six days of a great Orientation program. Lead by Herman Godwin and Katie Stewart, two of the best, a fine and profitable time was had by one and all.

The highlight of this year's Orientation Week was the Sunday night address to new students by UNC's progressive Student Body Prexy, Don Furtado. Skipping the usual nostalgic "welcome to Carolina" routine, Furtado turned his attentions to the lack of direction currently being shown by American college students and made a tremendously moving plea for leadership. Other outstanding speeches during the week were delivered by Dr. G. V. Taylor, Dean Fred Weaver, Women's Honor Council Chairman Nancy Adams and Hugh Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council.

Special mention and commendation should also go out to Jim Jordan and the entire staff of the YM-YWCA for an outstanding Freshmen Camp.

Elsewhere on the Chapel Hill scene, Carolina's colorful football mentor, Sunny Jim Tatum was reported to be feeling better this week. Tatum has been the unfortunate victim of a painful and consistent throat ailment which has caused much speculation in local circles.

Still hoarse and obviously not up to par, Tatum was apparently in good spirits after a series of tests at the hospital.

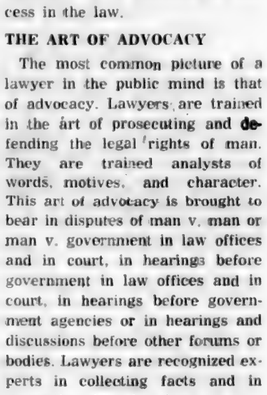
Looking to his team, supposedly one of the best in the nation according to pigskin speculators, we see a veteran and talented eleven led by Captain Phil Blazer, veterans Fred Swearingen, Jack Cummings, Don Kemper, Mac Turlington and Emil DeCantis. Up from last year and seeing their first action are such highly rated newcomers as Russ Hollers, Sonny Folckomer and Rip Hawkins.

On the national front, colorful, reactionary and do or die segregationists Orval Faubus and J. Lindsay Almond this week closed schools in Arkansas and Virginia in a last ditch effort to avoid mixing Negro and White students.

Backed by home state voters shouting "no niggers in our schools," these two continued their disgraceful demonstration as their long fight with the NAACP raged on.

With this great problem confronting not only the South, but also the entire nation, it became obvious that President Eisenhower was more interested in his golf game than a peaceful solution to racial turmoil. It is sincerely hoped in this corner that Ike will at least be able to break 80 in the next few weeks, before the cold weather forces him off of the course. This will probably be the most significant achievement of his "administration?".

In the Far East, trouble continued to brew as Communist China kept up a steady battery of shells on Taiwan and Quemoy. Chiang Kai-Shek, head of the tottering Nationalist government and now on Formosa persisted again and again that he was still the chief of state for the entire country of China.



CHIANG KAI-SHEK

The U. S., under pressure from Chiang continued this week to pour in aid in what is probably a futile attempt to save two worthless islands. With our foreign policy hell bent for disaster in this pivotal area, speculation ran high in America this week that we might be on the verge of finally recognizing the Communist regime in China.

The Biritish have long believed in this program. After a number of years at the helm, it is becomnig quite obvious that the Communists are in China to stay. Chiang will never again see the mainland, and the U. S. might do considerably better by sending less aid to Formosa and reaching a settlement with Communist China. It is doubtful that we can continue to be bled by Chiang in his long bout with Peking, without sooner or later realizing the futility of his goals.

States Rights Forgotten In Integration Uproar

Nick Bagdasarian

With today's crisis over segregation in the South still foremost in the mind of the people, it seems to me, oddly enough, the real issue has been overlooked.

One might ask: "What is the real issue?" In this writer's opinion, it is the conflict between the state and federal governments.

Under the influence and possible misguidance of several organizations, the federal government has taken over state functions and with the backing of the populus of the United States, has relegated the individual states to mere social clubs, where one decides whether a new street lamp is to be put on such-and-such a street.

Getting back to the segregation issue (and more particularly the Arkansas issue) neither side has as yet given in. But whether Faubus or Eisenhower will give in first is not a difficult question. With today's governmental system, no state, even with justification, can successfully stand up to the federal government.

Although there may be madness in his method, it must be admitted that Faubus has shown extreme courage and calmness through-out his states' right campaign; but other Southern governors have only timidly entered "segregationist water," and the only forseeable answer to his future is that he too will fall by the wayside.

Only one more question need be answered and that is — "what will be the results of integration." Of course, the usual race disturbances will occur, with federal forces gallantly upholding justice; and perhaps, after a few years (or decades) integration will succeed.

But what is the South to do in the meantime?

Merchants Association Welcomes New Students

Dear Students:

The Merchants Association welcomes you to the University of North Carolina and to Chapel Hill.

This past year the Merchants Association approved a promotion to have an appointed student of the University of North Carolina as an associate member of our Board of Directors.

We look forward to a very pleasant relationshilp with you this coming year.

Very sincerely,
C. Whid Powell
President

Reds' Blockade Broken By Nationalist Convoy

TAIPEI, Formosa — (AP) — A Nationalist convoy ran the Communist blockade of Quemoy Saturday for the seventh straight day and unloaded supplies under heavy Red gunfire.

Nationalist military headquarters here refused to say how many landing ships made it to the shell raked beach of the offshore island. But headquarters said Red shore batteries had pumped 2,435 shells onto Quemoy up to midafternoon.

Nationalist fighter planes flying protective cover for the supply convoy were challenged by a formation of Communist MIG17s. The Nationalist fighters broke off contact without firing, they reported.

In another development, Adm. Harry D. Felt, Commander in Chief of U. S. Forces in the Pacific, arrived for a five-day round of talks with President Chiang Kai-Shek and other Nationalist leaders and American commanders.

Felt said on his arrival a great deal of progress had been made in running supplies to besieged Quemoy.

Felt termed the Formosa Strait situation serious but added, "I am not discouraged." He described the heavily reinforced American forces in the area as very strong and quite adequate to deal with the situation.

Felt is on his first visit to Formosa since he became top American commander in the Pacific two months ago. He is scheduled to leave for his Pearl Harbor headquarters Wednesday.

First Meeting For Glee Club To Be Monday

Hill Hall will echo with the voices of the Men's Glee Club Monday at 4:30 when the University's only traveling choral group meets for the first time.

Director Joel Carter announced yesterday that 25 new students have been accepted into the organization since classes began and these will join the old members Monday in inaugurating a new year for the Glee Club.

"Prospects point to the addition of several more voices. The potential for expert choral work on the UNC campus is very great," Carter said.

Under the direction of Dr. Carter, last year the Glee Club gave over 40 performances during the school year and traveled close to 1300 miles in its two tours of the Southeastern states.

Nursing School Adds Nine On Faculty Staff

Nine new faculty members have been added to the UNC School of Nursing as the fall semester opens, Nursing Dean Elizabeth Kemble has announced.

Mrs. Pauline Wayne McCaskill has been named assistant professor in the area of medical-surgical nursing. Her appointment was announced earlier by the chancellor.

Six instructors announced by Dean Kemble are Mis Em Olivia Bevins, Miss Janis Hazelton David, Mrs. Diane Guy Fogleman, Mrs. Barbara Suwo Kegley, Mrs. Jacqueline Leardi Rhame and Miss Lois Torgeson.

Miss Margaret Elizabeth Haynes and Mrs. Gracia Somerville McCabe have been added as supervisor and part-time instructor, respectively.

Mrs. McCaskill received her diploma in nursing from the Catawba Sanitarium, a baccalaureate degree from Duke University and a master's degree from Teachers College, Columbia University. She was medical clinical instructor at Duke University School of Nursing, 1954-57.

Miss Bevis, who was named instructor in medical-surgical nursing, is a graduate of the Emory University School of Nursing, received the M. A. in nursing education from the University of Chicago.

Covering The Campus

ART LEAGUE

The University Art League, now beginning its second year, is already slating activities for the coming year. The first meeting will be held Tuesday night in the Lecture Hall at the Ackland Building at 7:30 p.m.

New students and any old students who may wish to participate in the League's program have been urged to be present to hear about plans and make suggestions. Membership is open to any University student whether an art major or not, according to an announcement.

Included among this year's projects are a series of one man shows of the paintings of former UNC art students and of faculty members of other North Carolina college art departments; art movies and lectures; the annual Sidewalk Art Show; and varied social get togethers.

The League is planned especially for those students who are not art majors but have an inclination toward artistic creativity or an interest in the subject, the announcement said.

STUDENTS WIVES

The Student Wives' Club will hold its first meeting of the year Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the Victory Village Nursery. The program will include a panel discussion of particular interest to Chapel Hill newcomers, said President Pat Scarborough. All student wives have been invited to attend the semi-monthly meetings.

GRADUATE CLUB

An organizational meeting of the Graduate Club Executive Board will be held tomorrow at 6 p.m. in the Lenoir Hall upstairs dining room. President Bob Rennick has asked all members to bring trays to the dining room for the supper meeting.

CANTERBURY CLUB

The Canterbury Club will meet today at 6 p.m. in te Parish House of the Episcopal Church. The program will be "The Theology of Jazz" with Ed Crow and his combo. Supper will be served, according to an announcement.

'OKLAHOMA' AUDITIONS

Tryouts for "Oklahoma," the first production of the Carolina Playmakers, will be held Monday at 4 and 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. A number of actors, dancers and singers are needed for the show, scheduled to be performed in Memorial Hall Oct. 24-26. No previous experience is necessary, according to an announcement.

GLEE CLUB

There will be an executive meeting of the Men's Glee Club in the Glee Club office Monday at 4 p.m. All officers have been urged to attend.

Claude George Assistant Dean Of BA School

Dr. Claude S. George Jr. has been named assistant dean of the School of Business Administration.

Dean Maurice W. Lee appointed George to succeed Dr. Harold Langenderfer. Langenderfer resigned the post to return to full-time teaching.

Dr. George is an associate professor of industrial management and teaches time and motion study. Before coming to the University he taught at the State University of Iowa and the Universiy of Texas.

Dr. George holds he B. S. and M. S. degrees from the University of North Carolina and the Ph. D. from State University of Iowa. His honorary socities include Phi Beta Kappa, the Order of Artus, economices society; and Sigma Iota Epsilon, management society.

The Academy of Management, the Society for Advancement of Management and the American Institute of Management are other organizations to which Dr. George belongs.

Problem Of Event Conflicts Is Being Relieved By Magill

The problem of several major events scheduled for the same evening is being relieved by the office of student affairs.

This university office will keep a calendar of major speakers on campus and will try to avoid the competition of two such speakers on the same evening.

Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Sam Magill said yesterday the calendar is being kept for the convenience of the students.

THE WORLD AND THE SUN—Dr. Everett D. Palmatier, left, chairman of the UNC Physics Dept., explains the movement of the earth and the position of the other planets and the sun to Mrs. Mae Bell of Rocky Mount who is director of the Children's Museum at Rocky Hount. Standing at right is George Wyatt, amateur astronomer, who did the wiring in Rocky Mount's Spitz Planetarium, located in the Children's Museum.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY

'Most Popular' Shows Slated For Planetarium

The schedule of programs for the tenth anniversary year, beginning September 30, at the Morehead Planetarium on the University of North Carolina campus here has been announced by Manager A. F. Jenzano.

"We have included in the schedule the most popular programs presented since the Planetarium opened in May, 1949," Jenzano said, "and have continued our policy of presenting timely programs coinciding with world events and phenomena in the skies."

PERENNIAL FAVORITES

Expanded and up-dated over the years, the 1958-59 programs will include the perennial favorites "Star of Bethlehem," which will open November 25; "Easter, the Awakening," which will start February 24; and the customary summer trip show to outer space, this time "A Trip to the Moon," to take off next June 30.

At the conclusion of "Land, Sea and Sky," the new-running tribute to the International Geophysical Year, two timley programs will launch the Tenth Anniversary schedule.

OPENING SHOWS

They will be "Autumn Constellations," beginning September 30, followed by "Mysteries of Mars," starting October 21. Another will be "In the Beginning," which will start next May 12. It will be a nostalgic demonstration akin to the initial Planetarium program in 1949 entitled "Let There Be Light."

Other scheduled offerings will include "Scouting the Skies," January 6-February 23, in cooperation with the Boy Scouts of America national study theme. Complementing it will be a basic astronomy program directed to children in primary grades, entitled "Sun, Moon, Earth." It will begin January 11. "Color in the Sky" will open on April 7.

Another permanent exhibit will be unveiled during the year. Tentatively scheduled for November, it will be a 15' x 34' authentic HO-scale model railroad, complete with landscaping, and will be demonstrated at appointed hours.

From Dec. 2 through March 4, a model of the Vanguard Rocket will be on public display in addition to the regular art and science exhibits.

All of the public programs, which will be given every evening and at weekend matinees, will be presented in appropriate form to school childrn with reservations in the mornings and afternoons during the scholastic year.

MATINEE INCREASE

During sessions of the General Assembly, the number of week day matinees will be increased to accommodate the large number of children who biennially visit Raleigh and the University campus.

In addition and on request, the Planetarium will arrange for high school groups to make conducted tours of University departments. They include the Air Force ROTC, Botany, Chemistry, Classics, Geology and Geography, Music, Naval Science, Pharmacy, Physical Education and Athletics, and Television.

Simultaneous with today's announcement of the list of programs, more than 10,000 schedules were put into the mails for school officials, clergymen and regular patrons. Copies of the programs will be sent to anyone on request, Jenzano said.

Physics Dept. Astronomers Aid Rocky Mt.

By PETE IVEY

Directors of the Rocky Mount Children's Museum have good ideas for developing the Spitz Planetarium in this age of outer space, and the UNC Dept. of Physics is lending trained astronomers to help.

Four Rocky Mount enthusiasts—all amateur astronomers — came to Chapel Hill last week and talked with Professor Everett D. Palmatier, Lecturer and expert in cosmic rays. Dr. Palmatier is chairman of the Dept. of Physics and director of the University's Division of Natural Sciences.

With the aid of Harvey Daniell, astronomer and lecturer in the Dept. of Physics, Palmatier showed the Rocky Mount people how they can best arrange programs that will be attractive and instructive to a large number of children who come to the Children's Museum on the banks of the Tar River.

The Spitz Planetarium is one of many small planetaria operated over the country.

The Rocky Mount group expects to arrange also for parties of youngsters to come to Chapel Hill for shows at the large Morehead Planetarium here.

Daniell helped the Rocky Mount group plan programs from September to February, 1959.

The delegation from Rocky Mount included Miss Mae Bell, director of the Children's Museum; William Joyner, a representative of the Rocky Mount Kiwanis Club, which gave the Spitz Planetarium; Harold Minges, a director of the museum; and George Wyatt, amateur astronomer who wired the planetarium and helps arrange technical phases of the operation.

Garland Kincheloe is president of the Rocky Mount Museum Assn.

Edwards Calls Victory Most Satisfying Ever

By STEWART PHINIZY

"This may not have been one of our greatest victories but it was certainly one of our most satisfying," said North Carolina State's Earl Edwards.

Lightning struck at Kenan Stadium yesterday for the third time since big Jim Tatum returned to his old alma mater, Carolina, as it's head coach. Earle Edwards' Wolfpack was the first State football regime to have whipped Carolina three times in a row.

Edwards said, "It's real hard to sigle out any one individual. I thought the whole squad played well but if I had to single out any boys I guess it would be Hill (Bill) Trowbridge, (Ken) and Cackovic (Frank)."

"We missed Driscoll but Cacovic showed that he has real poise. We had expected him to do real well, the boy's a senior and is an experienced ballplayer. He called almost every offensive play and I was real real proud of that boy," said Edwards.

"Trowbridge showed us good speed on his two touchdowns and Hill, although only a sophomore, really came through for us."

Hill recovered two Carolina fumbles and plugged up the middle as linebacker. He got the starting call after starter Paul Baloncik broke his ankle last week.

This was a noisy State dressing room and the players were in no hurry to take off their sweaty red jerseys. They just sat there patting each other on the back, obviously a group of boys who knew that today they had beaten a tough Carolina team.

Edwards was asked if they had planned to run the extra point. "We never considered doing anything else but kicking that ball after our third touchdown. Late in the game like it was, we figured this would put us home should the extra point be made."

Was he surprised that Carolina didn't thrown more than they did? It was late in the third quarter before the Carolina passing attack went to work. Edwards replied," I was concious of the fact that they had not been throwing too much but we knew that they were going to throw."

"Neither team has an air tight defense, but I thought our defense handed their running game well," said Edwards.

State last year was picked as the darkhouse in the Atlantic conference and they came through with all the marbles emerging as conference champions. Edwards was a little relutant to comment on this year's squad. I'm not ready to make any estimate on the team as yet," said Edwards," my sophomores got only a little bath today."

As the players began to get dressed and start filling out, Edwards concluded with this remark: "Carolina played well, THEY'LL BE ALL RIGHT."

Wake Beats Maryland

WINSTON-SALEM — (AP) — Norman Snead, a rangy, nervy sophomore quarterback threw three touchdowns passes today as Wake Forest mauled favored Maryland 34-0 to snap a 12-game losing streak.

Snead's performance tied an Atlantic Coast conference record for touchdown passes in a single game and his substitute, Charlie Parker, uncorked a fourth scoring pass to enable the Deacons to equal the conference team record for a single game.

Wake Forest scored in every period, putting over two touchdowns in the third quarter. Maryland, meanwhile, was held thoroughly in check and was unable to advance beyond Wake Forest's six-yard line.

The most serious Maryland threat evaporated late in second period when a fourth down field goal attempt by End Vince Scott failed. The Terps had moved the ball from their three-yard line to the Wake Forest 26 before they were stopped.

Snead, a 6-4, 175-pounder from Warwick, Va., engineered the first four touchdowns and then second and third unit players took over the rest of the way.

Wake Forest's first and second period touchdowns came on 80-yard drives.

Fullback Neil Maclean lammed over from the four-yard line with less than two minutes to play in the first period after Snead's passing had set up the play. Thirty seconds before the end of the half Snead and Halfback Jim Dalrymple got together on a 32-yard touchdown pass.

In the opening minutes of the third period, end Pete Manning scored on a 22-yard pass play, again from Snead. Snead completed his work late in the third period with another scoring strike to Dalrymple, this one covering 11 yards.

Clemson Tops Va.

By DEL BOOTH

CLEMSON, S. C. — (AP) — Quarterbacks Harvey White and Lowndes Shingler passed and ran Clemson to a 20-15 Atlantic Coast Conference football victory over Virginia here today.

Clemson had to come from behind twice as the rebuilding Virginians under new coach Dick Voris scored early, then held Clemson repeatedly.

Clemson's second unit bore the brunt of the burden, scoring twice before a band day crowd of 20,000 in Clemson's newly-enlarged 35,000-seat stadium.

Player of the game unquestionably was Virginia quarterback Reece Whitley, who twice had Clemson on the ropes with his standout passing and running.

Two Clemson end zone interceptions of Whitley passes were all that put Virginia on the loser's end of the score.

Whitley's 46-yard pass to halfback Ulmo Randle set up the opening five-yard scoring plunge by Fullback John Barger. Virginia place-kicked for one point.

When Clemson moved right back on a long drive, with Halfback George Usry breaking through center to score from eight yards out, it elected to try for two. But receivers were covered and White was smothered and Virginia led 7-6 at the end of he first period.

Shingler plunged one yard for a third period score that put Clemson ahead. The reserve quarterback, like all-ACC White, a product of Greenwood, S. C., High School, then ran over for the two-point conversion.

Virginia, although looking weary, snapped back in the final period. Whitley passed to Randle for 22 yards down the middle for a touchdown. Whitley passed again to Randle for the two-point conversion.

This gave Virginia a one-point lead.

It didn't last long. Clemson's second unit moved 65 yards to score, sending Halfback Bill Mathis smashing over from four yards out. Clemson tried to play it safe with a place kick but Virginia guard Frank Call blocked it.

Virginia showed unexpected speed on both offense and defense. Its coverage of Clemson receivers restricted Clemson's vaunted passing attack. For its own part, Virginia was able to get receivers into position frequently for Whitley's pinpoint passing.

Clemson out-rushed Virginia three-to-one while Virginia had the best of the passing by a lot margin.

Kemper Breaks Hand

Tatum: "Too Many Mistakes;" Praises Koes And Blazer

By ELLIOT COOPER

"You just can't make that many mistakes and expect to win a ball game." That was the sentiment expressed by Carolina coach Jim Tatum after yesterday's 21-14 loss to State College.

For Tatum it was his third straight defeat at the hands of Earle Edwards. The Tar Heel coach has yet to beat Edwards since his return to Chapel Hill.

"I just hope that makes them the favorite next year," said Tatum, "my teams have never done well against State, and it was the same story when I was a player."

Tatum was quick to compare the State win to Carolina's 21-13 victory over Duke last season. "It was just like our team playing Duke, we had everything to gain and nothisg to lose and could afford to take lots of chances."

Tatum High On Koes And Blazer

Speaking of the game itself Tatum was high in his praise of the efforts of his team with the notable exception of its ability to handle the ball cleanly. "Ronnie Koes and Phil Blazer both played better than I have ever seen them do before. Outside of handling the ball every boy we had played better football than he did last year."

The dejected coach left little doubt that the presence of pass protection was missing. "By the time we discovered what method they were using to rush our passer we were already in the hole."

State Has Veteran Squad

Tatum emphasized that the State players had a great psychological advantage over the Tar Heels. "They were an underdog football team with a veteran lineup and that made a big difference. Their team has an average age of over twenty-two while our's is not quite twenty-one."

"I don't think our boys were overconfident," he said, "in fact, I don't think they were confident enough." The head coach did admit, however, that he thought the players were too tight.

When asked about the big play of the game, Tatum was quick to reply that in his opinion it occured when State shifted into the single wing and drew his Tar Heels off side on the third play of the contest. Instead of third and ten it became third and five, and State went on to get two first downs before setting the Tar Heels deep in their own territory with a quick kick.

Kemper Breaks Hand

The game's only injury was sustained by senior end Don Kemper who broke his hand.

Tatum summed up the afternoon's activity by saying," State College is no longer a doormat for anyone. I just guess we'll have to get another coach when we play them."

State Defeats Carolina

olina attempted to run the extra point again, but Schuler was stopped shy of the goal line. With 3:15 left to play the score stood State 21, Carolina14.

State took the kick and made a first down, which forestalled any Tar Heel chances of winning. The Wolfpack ended the game in posession of the ball, and the goalposts came down.

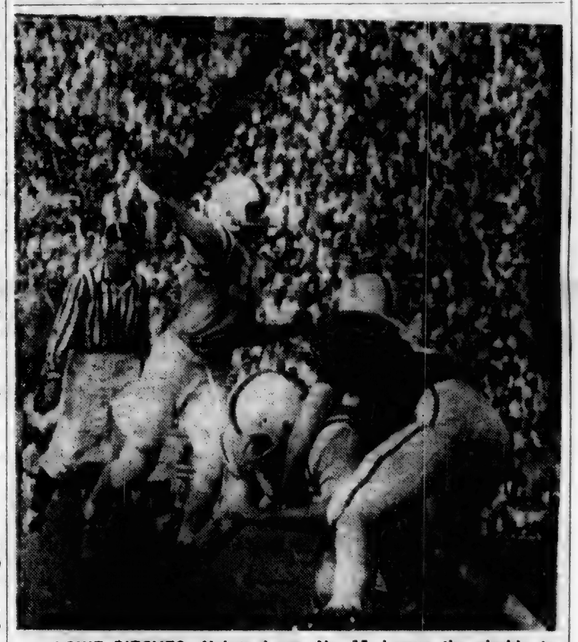
State used its multiple offense to good advantage all day, running mostly from an unbalanced line. While they were unable to go up the mdidle or in the air, they did most of their damage around the ends.

Guard Bill Rearick spent most of the day in the Tar Heel backfield and Frank Cakovic did a great job in replacing the ineligible Ernie Driscoll at quarterback.

Carolina played a good ballgame, but could not hold on to the pigskin. When the Tar Heels finally started moving they struck hard and fast. Cummings was accurate in the second half, as was Lowe. Several times both were smeared in the backfield for considerable losses on attempted passes.

Soph Rip Hawkins made more than his share of tackles, and Al Goldstein tied a conference record for most passes caught. Captain Phil Blazer showed up well on defense, along with line-backer Ronnie Koes.

Carolina ran from a wing-T much of the day, also using a flanker. Over 41,000 fans saw the contest.



LOWE PITCHES—Nelson Lowe, No. 15, heaves the pigskin to a waiting teammate. An unidentified Tar Heel gives protection.

ALGERIA FILM

The Dept. of Romance Languages will present on Tuesday, at 3:30 p.m. in Murphy 215 a moving picture, with commentary in French, on Algeria. The program will also include a set of color slides illustrating the French Revolution.

Edwards Didn't Play

A humorous incident occured yesterday when one of the many State followers came by to congratulate the State College coach. He introduced himself to Edwards (Earle) and said "You played a great game today, coach."

"Thank you," Edwards replied, "but I didn't play."

Adams Is Out; Ike Accepts Sadly

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Sherman Adams resigned under fire Monday night as President Eisenhower's top assistant. Eisenhower accepted "with sadness."

VILIFICATION

The former New Hampshire governor said he has been beseiged by "a campaign of vilification" by those seeking to remove him from public life and it is clear these efforts "have been intended to destroy me and in so doing to embarrass the administration and the President of the United States."

Adams announced his decision to get out of the second highest job in the White House in a dramatic nationwide television-radio appearance. He said his action is "final and unqualified. It is not open to reconsideration."

SURPRISE CONFERENCE

Adams had flown to Newport, R. I., Monday morning for a surprise conference with Eisenhower at the latter's vacation headquarters, then hurried back to Washington and completed arrangements for the broadcast.

Back of the resignation is the disclosure last June that he accepted costly gifts and favors from wealthy Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine while Goldfine was in difficulty with two federal agencies.

Adams acknowledged accepting the favors, but said he got no favored treatment for Goldfine from any federal agency.

The clamor for Adams to quit rose loudly at the time, died down a bit, then thundered out again after the Republicans took a stunning licking in the Sept. 8 Maine election — in which the Goldfine case was a factor.

HARD DECISION

Adams said that in making his decision to resign—he did so within the past few days — one factor he considered was whether staying on in his high position "might possibly diminish the chances which my party has of regaining control of the Congress in the November elections."

He said it was a difficult decision to make.

Adams said he had tendered the resignation in Monday's conference with Eisenhower at Newport and the President had accepted it, to become effective as soon as an orderly transition can be arranged for the transfer of his duties and responsibilities.

Speaking slowly, deliberately and solemnly, Adams read a thousand-word text.

"I am now about to retire, after nearly six years, from the position in which I have served with pride and which I have given my best efforts to hold with honor," he said

'DONE NO WRONG'

The chief executive's right hand man said "I have done no wrong." He said too, that it had never been his nature to run in the face of adversity.

"Against my distaste for giving any grounds whatever to the charge of retreating under fire," Adams continued, "Against my desire to complete my duty during the remaining two years of the term for which President Eisenhower was elected, I must give full consideration to the effect of my continuing presence on the public scene.

"Under the circumstances and in light of the events of the past three months in which I have been made to be directly concerned, I must ask myself whether my retention in office might conceivably delay or retard, even in small degree, the achievement of those goals of President Eisenhower which yet lie ahead."

Musical Work By Psychologist To Be Feature

A musical work by a University psychologist will be one of the features of the coming University Symphony season, Earl A. Slocum, director, announced Monday.

The work, Passacaglia, by Dr. Ralph Dunlap, will be included on a program in December.

Mr. Slocum revealed the programming of Dr. Dunlap's work while announcing that the Symphony will begin rehearsals tonight. He noted that a few chairs in the string sections of the orchestra are still open and invited interested persons to inquire.

The 60-piece orchestra will practice each Monday at 7:15 at Hill Hall, Mr. Slocum said. Also scheduled for December performance are Schubert's Fifth Symphony in B-flat, and Tschaikovsky's 1812 Overture.

It will not be the premier performance of Dr. Dunlap's work. Written in 1941, it was first performed by the Dayton, O., Symphony. He has also written two string quarters, some pieces for concert band, and other chamber music.

Dr. Dunlap studied music at the State University of Iowa before World War II, but, upon returning from service began study in the field of psychology at Antioch College, O.

Formosa Strait Crisis Now In Second Month

TAIPEI, Formosa — (AP) — The blazing crisis in Formosa Strait moved into its second month Monday with the Nationalists pushing through the Red artillery blockade once more with supplies for the Quemoys.

News of a supply run to Big Quemoy by ship and Little Quemoy by air came shortly after it was learned here that the Nationalists had carried out their first known air drop to Big Quemoy Sunday. Half a ton of badly needed medical supplies was dropped by parachute.

HUDDLES

Meanwhile, top U. S. and Nationalist military chiefs wound up strategy huddles and the ranking American officer, Adm. Harry D. Felt, scheduled a meeting with Nationalist Leader Chiang Kai-Shek Monday.

What the military men discussed was not disclosed but it is believed one of the major topics was getting supplies flowing steadily to the Quemoys off the Red mainland.

Despite the fact the Nationalists have run the Red blockade nine days in a row, the supply needs of the battered offshore islands were still serious. Badly needed are medical supplies. Doctors report that the mortality rate among the Quemoy wounded is high because there is no refrigeration for drugs or a blood bank. Anesthetics are being rationed.

LIGHT SHELLING

Red shelling as the crisis became a month old was relatively light. Up to nightfall Monday, the Quemoys took 3,615 shells, the Nationalist defense ministry reported. That was the lightest bombardment in nine days.

Since Aug. 23 the Reds — by Nationalist count — have battered the Quemoy complex with 325,000 shells. It is estimated the Nationalists fired back nearly 11,000 rounds. The Nationlists have claimed victories in three air battles and six naval clashes.

NATIONALIST SCORE

The Nationalists tallied up this score:

In the air — 14 Red Migs shot down, and at least three probable kills.

On the sea — seven Red gunboats, 11 torpedo boats and eight motorized junks sunk. Eight other gunboats damaged.

On the ground — 45 Red guns, 44 gun emplacements, four ammunition depots and five trucks destroyed by Nationalis artillery fire.

The nationalists have listed only 280 military casualties among the estimated 100,000 men manning Quemoy garrisons, but presumably there are more.

The official Central News Agency here reported that 63 civilians on the islands have been killed and 159 wounded, 66 seriously. It also said 1,918 civilian homes have been destroyed and 1,801 damaged. Livestock losses also were high, the agency said.

NO PLANES LOST

The Nationalists claim they have lost no planes in their encounters with Red jets. It did have naval losses: one LST (landing ship, tank) sunk and two damaged; one LSM (landing ship, medium blasted out of the water as it unloaded ammunition at Quemoy; another LST damaged and knocked out of commission as it unloaded supplies.

Here in Taipei, officials expressed concern over the lack of public response to appeals for non-essential residents to move to safer areas as a precaution against air raids.

Debate Squad

The UNC Debate Squad will organize its forces at an organizational meeting this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Roland Parker II.

Squad President Clay Simpson said yesterday that debating experience is not necessary for membership. Simpson urged all students interested are asked to attend this afternoon's meeting.

Activities of the squad include sending debating teams to both the varsity and novice divisions of various tournaments. Traveling expenses for delegates will be provided from money appropriated to the Forensic Council.

One of the topics to be debated extensively at tournaments will be the national topic, Resolved: That the further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement.

Campus Cars Are Checked For Stickers

All automobiles around campus are being checked this week for display of registration stickers by the Student Traffic Council.

License numbers of cars without the stickers will be checked. Failure to register motor vehicles with the dean of student affairs' office is a violation of student traffic regulations and an honor code offense, the council said.

Gov. Faubus May Reopen Ark. Schools

LEXINGTON, Ky. — (AP) — Gov. Orval Faubus said Monday he expects to reopen high schools in Little Rock next Monday, or possibly later in the week, after a vote on the question of admitting Negroes.

The Arkansas Governor made the statement at the southern Governors conference.

He has proposed a plan for operating the schools as private institutions.

NO DIFFICULTY

"We don't anticipate any legal difficulty," said Faubus, "but there could be litigation brought by the federal government. If they want to tie everything up and keep the schools closed further, that will be their responsibility."

Florida's Gov. Leroy Collins brought the integration controversy squarely before the governors earlier today in a speech suggesting that it become "the first order of business" of Congress next January.

'NATIONAL CATASTROPHE'

As things are going, Collins said, the dispute could lead to a "National catastrophe." He did not elaborate on the nature of such a calamity.

Faubus closed four Little Rock schools when the U. S. Supreme Court refused to grant a 30-month delay for integrating them.

The referndum, required under state law, will be held Saturday to determine whether Little Rock citizens prefer to reopen the schools on a private, segregated basis.

Faubus said the question of who will operate the schools will depend on how the vote comes out.

LITTLE HOPE

"Tragically I see little hope for pulling out of this crisis — short of national catastrophe — if we continue to follow the present pattern of events," Collins said at the opening business session.

Publication Is Scored By Dr. George Taylor

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Rumors that a move was underway for the Administration to take over the Carolina Handbook were scotched yesterday by Chancellor W. B. Aycock.

The Chancellor revealed that he had received a letter from a faculty member. The professor was concerned about some of the statements the handbook made about scholarships and the effect they would have on parents.

One observation dealt with one of the statements in the Handbook which says "Maybe to you the Carolina way of life will be Y-Court Coffee at 7:59 in the morning to prepare you for the eight o'clock class that you will sleep through anyway."

TAYLOR

The author of the letter is Associate Prof. George V. Taylor of the History Dept. He did not comment on the letter.

Susan Campbell, editor of the Handbook, said there would be a meeting concerning the handbook. The matter came up about a month ago, she stated.

Jim Carse of the YMCA staff explained the professor would be invited to the meeting as well as other people concerned with the handbook. No date has yet been set.

Harold O'Toeul, chairman of the publication board, said he was unaware of the letter. He explained that student government provided funds for the handbook. Staff members are supplied by the YM-YWCA. Other expenses are defrayed by advertising.

Chancellor Aycock also revealed that the administration was exploring the possilbility of changing the catalog. He said members of the Carolina Handbook staff would probably be consulted.

CAMPBELL

The movement to change the catalog had nothing to do with the criticism of the Handbook, he asserted.

Bailey Resigns; 3 Appointed To Replace Him

Three new supervisors are at work in Graham Memorial, replacing Rand Bailey, former maintenance supervisor now working in Durham.

Graham Memorial Director Howard Henry said yesterday that instead of one man (Bailey), three students are both in charge of smaller areas and working within these areas.

When Bailey resigned last week, Fred Van Horn, Ron Young and Guy Ellis were appointed as working supervisors. Van Horn is in charge of the floaters who periodically check rooms in the building. Supervising activities in the pool room is Young. And in charge of arrangments and rentals, such CU receptions and vending machines, is Ellis.

Mrs. Parker Hostess In McIver Dormitory

A instructor's wife twelve years ago in Chapel Hill, Mrs. J. Roy Parker Sr. has returned here as a hostess in McIver Dormitory. She replaces Mrs. Charles Seward, who is now hostess in the Pi Beta Phi house.

Mrs. Parker has been away from Chapel Hill since 1946 when her husband, the late J. Roy Parker Sr., taught in the School of Journalism. After leaving UNC, Parker served in the North Carolina General Assembly and as president of Parker Brothers, Inc. Their son Roy Parker Jr. is a candidate for the General Assembly from Hertford County.

Mrs. Parker comes to the UNC campus from Ahoskie, where she is in the Roanoke-Chowan Historical Society and a member of the board of directors of the Roanoke-Chowan Foundation and the N. C. Tuberculosis Sanitorium System.

Politically, Mrs. Parker is vice chairman of several local Democratic Party committees and is a member of the Congressional Campaign committee.

A graduate of East Carolina College, Mrs. Parker has taught school in Ahoskie. She is also active in the N. C. Cancer Society.

Are You Lost?

Kappa Kappa Gamma President Jan Cobbs reported that many girls couldn't find the Kappa Kappa Gamma reception last night. For the benefit of the rushees, the house is located at 215 Cameron Ave., next to the Congregational Christian Church.

OFFICIAL'S CLINIC

The Intramural Dept. is currently holding a clinic for all those interested in officiating tag football this fall. Anyone who would like to officiate should come to room 301-A in Woollen Gym this afternoon or contact Tommy Johnson at the Intramural Office.

IN GRAHAM MEMORIAL TONIGHT

Sorority Rush Parties Will End First Round

Sorority rush parties continue tonight from 6:30 through 9:45 to complete the first round of the 1958 rush schedule.

Over 350 girls attended the Panhellenic tea Friday night in Graham Memorial's main lounge. This was the compulsory party for all girls interested in joining a sorority.

FIRST ROUND

The first round of parties started last night with four scheduled parties and ends tonight with three parties.

Bids for second round parties will be handed out Wednesday from 12:30 to 3:15 p.m. in Roland Parkes Lounge by members of the Stray Greek organization.

Three parties from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. on Thursday and Friday will be attended by girls in the second round of rush.

THIRD ROUND

During Saturday afternoon from 1:30 to 5:15, the third round of parties will be held at the sorority houses. Bids for these parties will be handed out in Roland Parker Lounge Saturday morning from 9:15 to 11:15.

Bids for the fourth round of rush parties will be handed out Monday from 9:15 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge. The parties start at 6:15 p.m. and continue through 10 p.m.

FINAL ROUND

The fifth and final round of parties are scheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 30. Bids for these parties will be available Tuesday morning from 9:15 until 1 o'clock that afternoon. The progressive parties will start with an appetizer party from 5:40 to 6:40 p.m. and continue with a dinner party from 7 to 8:15 p.m., ending with a dessert party from 8:35 to 9::40 p.m.

Signing bid preference cards will take place Wednesday, Oct. 1, in the Dean of Women's office between 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. The actual bids will be delivered between 7 and 8 p.m. under the girls' doors.

An announcement of the new sororities will be made Thursday, Oct. 2.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled for Graham Memorial today include:

Student Government, 4-5 p.m. Grail Room; Women's Residence Council, 7-9 p.m., Grail Room; Young Republican's Club, 7:30 p.m., Roland Parker I; Debate Squad, 4-5:30 p.m., Roland Parker II; Inter-Dormitory Council, 4:30-5:30 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; University Club, 7-8:30 p.m., Woodhouse Cafeteria Conference Room.

UNC Frosh Footballers Lose Cash, Clothing

Members of the University's varsity football team were not the only losers last week. Five freshman team members also wound up on the debit side.

Chapel Hill Police reported that someone broke into a locker while the frosh team was at practice one day last week and took $23 in cash, three billfolds and a pair of shoes from Don Amos, Marshall Clements, Jud Spainhour, Jim LeCompte, and Giles Gaca.

RELAXING IN AUTUMN — Autumn came yesterday with no apparent change in temperature. However, it brought out a pretty coed, Merri Evans of Nashville, Tenn., to do her studying in the Arboretum. Miss Evans is a senior education major.

Self-Service Laundromat Opens Here

Students can wash and dry their clothes for a total of 30 cents in Chapel Hill's first self-service, 24-hour laundromat.

Located in the Ogburn Furniture building across from the bus station on Franklin St., the laundry is operated entirely by customers. There are no attendants to supervise the work.

Known as the Half Hour Laundry, the place remains open all the time for the convenience of both students and Chapel Hill residents. The costs for using washers and dryers are: 20 cents for washing and 10 cents for drying.

W. C. Ogburn, of the Ogburn Furniture Company and operator of the laundry, said that several students have even been studying at the laundry, which is open all night.

Although his new business has been open for use nearly two months, Ogburn will hold a special opening for benefit of the students in the near future.

Westinghouse appliances are used in the Half Hour Laundry.

Phi To Debate Far East Policy

By STAN BLACK

Is President Eisenhower's policy toward Communist China over Quemoy and the Matsus right?

The Philanthropic Literary Society will be debating this question Tuesday night.

A bill drawn up supports the use of force in the defense of Quemoy and the Matsus by the United States in the event of attack by the Chinese Communists.

GUEST CRITICS

Dr. Kenan C. Frazier, professor of political science in the field of international law and relations will be the guest critic.

It is expected that debate will be hot on this controversial subject, with the United States apparently committed to defense of the Quemoy group with only a handful of allies.

The situation is becoming more dangerous by the hour, and diplomatic exchanges between Eisenhow and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev have been increasingly unfriendly. Although the Nationalists have succeeded in supplying both Big and Little Quemoy the last few days, it seems likely that the Communists will be in a position to attack within a relatively short time.

RUSSIAN PLEDGE

Soviet Russia has already pledged that any action on our part against the Chinese Reds will be taken as a threat to Russia itself. The United States, on the other hand, is committeed to retaliation against the Reds if an attack is made. On top of this come leaks from Warsaw that talks with the Chinese have almost broken down.

Against this background the Phi will be debating on the soundness of Eisenhower's stand behind Chiang and the advisability of supporting it.

All student and particularly new students, have been invited by the Phi to come and participate or listen to tonight's debate.

The meeting will be on the fourth floor of New East in Phi Hall at 8 p.m. An outstanding speaker award will be made after the debate and vote on the bill is over.

Dr. Frazier will criticize the debate and comment on late developments.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

Linda Llewellyn Clark, Julia Sue Dyars, Judee Dale Doherty, Helen Beatrice Hunger, Margaret Ann Adkins, Edward Filmore Swann Jr., Freddie Donald Hickman, Benjamin Lee Rogers, Josef Henry Perry Harvey Lake Harris, Mary Blackman Roberts and John Leonard Henderson Jr.

New Dormitories

There are three new dormitories that grace the UNC campus now. They are built in the traditional style of architecture that has prevailed on this campus for so long, but they contain a few innovations that make dormitory life somewhat easier.

They contain outdoor entrances to replace long noisy corridors, which will doubtless be a benefit to the student. They are built so that there are only a few rooms to the corridor, thus again cutting down on noise. They also possess an ample parking lo' which will do something to alleviate the parking situation on the campus.

They have some disadvantages also, however. With all rooms entering on what is more or less the outdoors, an open door in the winter may provide for quite a few colds, unless the student is quite careful. Recreation space is still at a minimum, and study space except in the single room is almost nil. Finally, the dormitories are far off from the mainstream of campus life and it may well take a revised estimate of time between classes to let somebody go from one of the new dorms to Phillips Hall or Peabody.

Moreover, the further the dormitories leave the central part of campus, the closer the University comes to losing a good measure of the college atmosphere that still remains and which is quite healthy for student in eraction and maintenance of the individual identity in a big school setting.

Sometime soon, the problem of growth has to be dealt with as well as the problem of dormitory construction. Growth must be met with the maximum respect for the individual's identity on the campus, and the housing problem needs to be once met with the student's needs in mind.

In the realm of future construction, the planners had better look closely to the need of every student for study space, separate and apart from sleeping space, for sleep is difficult with a light on or a typewriter going. Soundproofed two-room suites would be the best answer to the problem, and although they may not be the most economical to build, they may be the most advantageous to building the academic atmosphere of the community. Small hall units should be looked into with the end in mind of preserving quiet in the residence halls.

Recreation space is a must. This recreation space should include lounge space, room for social activities, refreshments of a limited sort, and some games. This should be divided between two sets of residence units or used for one set of residence units in order to provide the maximum chance for students to vent their excess energy in a healhty manner. Again this may be costly, but it is a lot more worthwhile than the screaming headlines about drunken brawls and wild parties.

Finally in order to provide that UNC does not fall into the dilemma of Duke which has a bus system from East Campus to West Campus, the University and the State legislature had better consider the room it has available around the central campus and build accordingly even if it means a break with the traditional style of architecture. The campus can still look beautiful and the interests of the students and the University can best be served, if the architectural tradition is forgotten in favor of looking toward present and future needs. This may mean different shaped, and perhaps taller buildings, but the net product will be well worth. And even more modern architecutre can look beautiful.

Two additions should be made- space for a resident counselor who can be there for students to come to and be aware of student needs and problems, and parking space so that the congestion problem does not multiply with student body growth.

The plan for the future can be ominous and provide for the destruction of Chapel Hill uniqueness, a liberal arts college atmosphere in a University setting, or it can be bright with the preservation of individual identity and the increasing of an academic atmosphere. The choice is up to those who do the financing of the University of North Carolina.

"Only In America" by Harry Golden; World; 317pp.; $4.00

Harry Golden is a man well known around Chapel Hill, and in the state of North Carolina, for from his home in Charlotte he publishes a unique and more-or-less monthly personal journal known as "The Carolina Israelite."

In this neck oft he woods, then, Harry Golden is something of a beloved phenomenon—a Jew from New York's lower east side who migrated to Charlotte and made good in the almost extinct field of personal journalism. Mr. Golden's newspaper runs to sixteen pages a month, all of it written by Mr. Golden. It contains no news of any kind; rather, it is strictly and self-consciously confined to the opinions of its editor.

"The Carolina Israelite" has a circulation of about fourteen thousand, and its readers include many great people around America and the world. But fourteen thousand people is not very many really, and so it may be safely assumed that until recently Mr. Golden and his journal were by and large unknown. What has come out recently to spread the fame of both is the publication of "Only In America", a selection from the columns of "The Carolina Isrealite." Mr. Golden is now a man of much wider renown—"Only In America" is now on the top of the New York Times' listing of non-fiction best sellers.

The book is a good one, there's no doubt about it. Unfortunately for what reason it is hard to sell, it has been seized upn by many critics as something more than it is: Mr. Golden seems to have achieved the status of homely philosopher, sage, and general all-around great man.. The book doesn't prove him to be any of these although it seems cruel to say so as "Only In America" is good reading, occasionally informative and stimulating, and only less occasionally objectionable.

But, just for the sake of an accurate perspective, it should be said that Mr. Golden has his faults, or at least the book does. For one thing, the quality of his editorials is somewhat uneven. Most of the short pieces—the least important ones—are quite to-the-point and they tell a good story well. The longer ones are sometimes less smooth. They wander here and there, as though Mr. Golden had written down whatever thoughts came into his head, and never bothered to edit himself—which may well be the case. (It can probably be assumed that Mr. Golden does not employ an editor; and it should be noted that it is very difficult to edit one's own work).

Another irksome thing about the book is the recurrent "I"—three hundred and seventeen pages of "I ... I ... I ... I ..." This personal touch is no doubt part of the charm of Mr. Golden's particular style of journalism, but in book form it may try the patience of some readers.

A more serious fault is the author's rather shoddy use of facts (i. e. "The Jews 'invented' psychiatry and . . . it is no coincidence therefore that psychiatry took this East Side 'lunch'—the dialect word for the traditional chaise lounge in Jewish homes—and made it into the symbol of their profession . . ."). Mr. Golden dabbles in the fields of psychology and sociology with similar disregard for accuracy. He doesn't do it often, but when he does he is either wide of the mark or hitting the nail on the side of the head (choose your own cliche.)

There are, of course, good things to say about "Only In America" —all the critical acclaim is by no means entirely unwarranted. Mr. Golden has, most notably, a rich memory, and his recollections and anecdotes about life on the Lower East Side are marvelous. It is in these sections, in which he talks about his family and the Jews among whom he grew up, that Mr. Golden's book is most engaging.

The author is also justly noted for his sharp critical sense and his willingness to speak his own mind—although it might well be noted that it is easier to speak ones own mind from where Mr. Golden sits than from most other points of vantage. Nevertheless, his "Golden Baby Plan" from "Vertical Integration Plan" are classics by now, and to come across them in the book is to re-experience a pleasure. Throughout, when he is dealing with the general question of man's love for man, Mr. Golden is both perceptive and witty.

"Only In America" is a good book. It is, for the most part, very light and easy reading. It's main drawback is the publicity it has gotten as the utterances of a great and homespun soul. Mr. Golden may well be a great and homespun soul, but in writing he doesn't compare to, say, Will Rodgers or H. L. Mencken.

The Most Dangerous Job

Frank Jennings

Teaching is the most dangerous profession. It deals with our children, the most precious of our natural resources. It refines them into brave and wonderful adults or it grossly degrades them into dull, over-aged adolescents. Its results color, mold, and determine the shape of our nation and the character of our people.

IF our teachers lack luster, fewer of their charges will be as bright as they might have been. IF our teachers are cowards, they will teach their cowardice.

IF teachers are not responsible citizens, they will produce political idiots. IF teachers become the tools of any pressure group, rather than the prime artisans a creative society, then we will all shrink into a nation of domesticated, two-legged cattle, capable of nothing but ignorant brutality toward each other and cud-chewing obedience to the loudest shouters and the best feeders.

IF teachers do not earn and keep the status and the respect which their profession requires, their role will be captured by the practical, committed, dedicated members of the industrial and commercial communities, who can train people very well, but who cannot affort the expense of the humane adventure.

Thus, teaching must forever live in creative danger, but teachers must hold onto the protective warnings of these terrifying IFs, lest these warnings become irremovable realities.

It is our great good fortune that in most of the schools in this country many pupils are met by a person for whom the magic of real respect and true love can quickly develop. This is so whether that teacher faces a kindergarden of five-year-olds or a seminar of graduate students. Yet sometimes this magic dies because that teacher is beset by fears and half-understood anxieties that come from the half-empty pocketbok or a half-shattered self-esteem.

The great teacher possesses a personality strong enough to free himself from these pressures. And it is this free teacher who is truly an artist in human relations. (This is something that must not be confused with some teacher's college workshop courses bearing the same name.)

Pupil and teacher begin their relationship by studying and learning each other. They learn by their common experience to value and to use each other's words and acts and ideas. A group of human beings so learning is the closest to Eden we can ever be. For the interests of young people can encompass the whole world. All kinds of experience press in upon them. The teacher has to know when and how to teach them to begin to be selective about these experiences.

There is great danger here! What happens if our young people are denied the ability to make and to know that they are making significant choices? George Orwell's Big Brother will come and do it for them. To prevent Big Brother from taking over, the teacher has to know and be able to show all the kinds of choices there are. To do this he must have an unquenchable thirst for delight, an insatiable appetite for wonder, and the talent to transmit these qualities to the children.

This is asking more than is ordinarily possible to anyone. But our society must ask this of its teachers. For there is this warning: the teacher who does not love poetry does a rather poor job of arranging a love-affair between words and the child. A teacher for whom all painting beyond the merely pictorial is nonsense cannot follow the child in to the ranforest of color and shapes that is the possible world of that child. A teacher who can think only on one level of understanding at a time cannot keep his bearings amidst the busy questions of thirty thirsty minds. A teacher who does not enjoy readily teaches this lack of enjoyment far more successfully than he can ever teach the rudimentary reading skills a young child requires.

The child learns many things quickly and permanently. Throughout childhood he is learning to be at home in this world, learning its firm, unshifting names and the voltile, shifting symbold, learning to listen and to know and to understand, learning to act less on impulse and more with purpose. And of course it is true that he begins to learn all this at home.

Whatever the quality of these home-experiences may be, we ask the schools to take up these beginnings and carry them on toward those necessary goals we have set for education. The good teacher must be a person with a profound love of a subject, born of the fulnes of familiarity. He must have an excellent operational understanding of basic educational principles, not the mere word-shadows of professional jargon. The teacher must have a love of people in general, and of children in particular, must have the ability to awaken and to maintain the interest of students and to direct those interests toward successful experiences. Above all, the teacher must be able to foster wonder.

This is the kind of teacher our society needs. The kind of teaching that teacher is capable of is an acquired skill. Such teachers are born in classrooms. The skill they must have can be learned by anyone with adequate intelligence who is willing to accept the hazards and the dangers of acting upon clearly accepted responsibilities.

Let the cowards and the dullards find safety in the tenure trap! The true teacher joyfully accepts the call of strange tomorrows, finds security and immortality in the healthy, happy, and intelligent citizens he has helped to shape.

Inquiry

Sam Frazier

The Defense Department's decision to allow U. S. planes attacked by Communist Chinese planes to pursue those planes "all the way into China" is one of the most serious blunders that the United States has committed since the Suez Canal invasion. The consequences of this action could be the most terrible in the history of mankind.

Since President Truman's decision not to pursue the Korean War into Manchuria, it has become increasingly clear that his strategy in limiting the boundaries of the war area is a basic premise of any planning to maintain global balance. In the few years since the Korean War, the importance of this premise has increased ten fold. Now in one action the government of the United States has opened wide the door to World War III. It is difficult to see how the military leaders could make such a decision when they themselves have made such loud noises over the necessity of "restrictive" warfare and have even gone to great lengths in reorganizing strategy and organization for action in a restrictive war.

The Defense Department is seriously contradicting itself. The question that every inquiring citizen should ask is, "Why?" If the Defense Department contradicts one of its major policies, it is evident that something is lacking. Actually, this contradiction is not the manifestation of a major flaw in the DD. Instead, it is probably a result of the point of view of the DD. Evidently the DD approached the job of defending U.S. planes by eliminating all factors except the plane and its enemy.

The first qualification is that the U. S. will only fight defensively. Then set up a situation in which the plane is attacked by the enemy. The total defense of the plane includes the destruction of its attacker However, it is immediately evident that the total defense of the plane conflicts with the larger aspect of the situation—total defense of world balance The old addage "What's good for me isn't necessarily good for everybody else" fits very well here. The total defense of the individual plane has to be limited to a partial defense, thus dissolving any threat to world balance.

If the Defense Department's blunder is the result of a strictly personalized military viewpoint, then it must be rectified immediately. Let us hope that the Defense Department knows how.

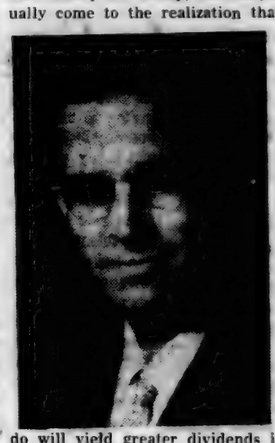
Functions Of Lawyers

Charles S. Rhyne

4. IMPROVING THE LEGAL PROFESSION

Theodore Roosevelt said: "Every man owes some part of his time to the upbuilding of the profession to which he belongs." And Arthur T. Vanderbilt said: "This obligation is one of the great things which distinguishes a profession from a business." Despite these admonitions, we lawyers have done too little in the past to uphold and upbuild our profession.

Lawyers are the great in dividualists of our Nation. Slowly but surely, however, lawyers have gradually come to the realization that they must work together on those things which they have in common and where they should work together. We lawyers do this chiefly through local, state and national bar associations. You students will do it through the American Law Student Association. I urge that you devote yourselves wholeheartedly to bar association work. Nothing you can do will yield greater dividends in friendships and in learning how to be a successful lawyer.



Continuing legal education has been made a major effort of the organized bar over the past few years. Through workshops and institutes at Regional Meetings of the American Bar Association, and through similar programs put on by state and local bar associations and law schools, lawyers have been brought up to date on the many new developments in various fields of law. In our day, when the velocity of change is so rapid, participaiton in such programs is essential to success in the practice of the law.

That success in law practice comes only to the hard worker has always been true, but in recent years there have been developments which seem to cast doubts upon the future of our profession regardless of effort. Here too the organized bar has began to awaken to the seriousness of a real threat to our profession. This is a threat which indirectly threatens the rights of our people, for a weak legal profession can never protect the great constitutional rights which are the basic reasons for our greatness at a nation. Nor can a weak legal profession protect the free enterprise system, which gives our nation its economic vitality.

When in London for the American Bar Association many of us were shocked to learn that only a handful of the barristers of England now earn sufficient income from the practice of their profession to pay their living expenses. This brought into sharp focus the findings of some recent studies of the economic standing of the legal profession in America, in comparison with that of other professions. Fortune Magazine has published findings that from 1929 to 1951 the income of medical doctors increased 157 per cent, the income of other wage earners 144 per cent, but that of lawyers only 58 per cent. Fortune's findings were confirmed by other studies, and the concern of our profession which had begun to develop before the London Convention crystallized into a demand that something be done before our very bad situation grows worse. The loss in economic status of lawyers is bad enough but anther fact showed up in our studies: That the profession of law is losing many of the ablest young men to engineering, medicine, and other professions simply because more money can be made there

The American Bar Association decided to create a Committee on Law Practice Economics to study the causes of the economic decline of lawyer incomes and to make suggestions as to way and means to end that decline It has now compiled data that the economic plight of lawyers is due largely to our failure to utilize modern methods and procedures, both in our own law offices and in the courts. In this jet and atomic age, law business is still conducted too frequently through horse-and-buggy methods. Many suggestions as to the modernizing of law office operations have now been published by this Committee. We believe they will help recapture the economic standing and status of lawyers.

Lawyers have been the advocates for everyone else, but have sadly neglected their own profession. Self-interest and a regard for the public interests served by our profession should cause lawyers to cease their bashfulness in this essential area. In this era of change we must change. And the place where the greatest change is needed is in the way we do out work, in our professional methods and procedures, and in the way our courts do their work. This modernization is long overdue but I am happy to report that it is on its way.

IMPROVING JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION

The Bell Committee here in North Carolina is an illustration of the performance of a major function of lawyers—a function where we have been derelict in our responsibility for too long, i.e., improving the administration of justice. I think that the Committee on Expediting nad Improving the Administration of Justice in North Carolina has done a tremendous public service. I wholeheartedly approve of its recommendations. This modernization of the judicial system of North Carolina is long overdue. The antiquated existing system can only be corrected by revitalizing the entire system through the unified court system with administrative power in the chief justice, new methods of selecting and qualifying juries, and the other salutary proposals so carefully prepared by the able members of this Committee. Adoption of the Bell Committee recommendations would be the greatest forward step in the field of improving judicial administration in the history of North Carolina.

The spotlight of national attention is now focused upon North Carolina to see what it does with these very outstanding recommendations of the Bell Committee. And here is where I believe lawyers come into this picture—not just a few lawyers but all the lawyers of North Carolina. In addition to the Committee for Improved Courts recently appointed by the Governor, the lawyers of this State must assume leadership and sell this program to the people of North Carolina. An aggressive, firm stand in support of this efficient, modern system for the administration of justice is essential.

STEEL PRICES

When the expected steel price rise comes, steel consumers will absorb more of it than they ever have before, according to Steel magazine. The trade publication reported that a survey of steel users showed that a majority of them believe that price-competition is the major consideration and that added costs could be relayed to customers only at the expense of sales. However, some users said they would pass along the entire increase to customers.

Al Goldsmith Chosen Athlete Of The Week

(Editor's Note: Athlete of the Week is a new feature starting this week in the Tar Heel. It will be run every Tuesday, and athletes from all sports will be eligible.)

Al Goldstein, a junior end from Brooklyn, N.Y., is DTH Athlete of the Week number 1.

Goldstein, a second-unit flanker, tied an ACC record for number of passes caught in one contest Saturday in Carolina's loss to State.

The six foot, 193 pounder hauled in seven aerials for a grand total of 101 yards. Two of the grabs came in Carolina's second touchdown drive which took only four plays.

Goldstein was a reserve most of last season, catching 2 passes for 47 yards. He played freshman ball for Carolina in 1954, then spent two years in the army before returning.

Al shone in the Blue-White game last spring when he grabbed three tosses for two touchdowns.

In the State game Goldstein was the target of quarterbacks Nelson Lowe and Jack Cummings, and also of halfback Jim Schuler. He even took the kick-off, after State's third touchdown, and ran it back to the Carolina 33.

Old Rancher Speakin'

Well, sir, I went down to Chapel Hill the other day to git me some shoes, two of 'em. I was standin' on the corner by the post office when this dude says to me: "You can't go around barefooted." We got to talkin' and when I said I was hungry and ready to go back out to the ranch house, he said why don't you take a taxicab? I said I'd tried to but it was somebody settin' back of the wheel of ever-last one of 'em and wouldn't let me. He hollered at one goin' by and it stopped. I said I wanted to go back out to the ranch house and the driver called me down on my pernounciation of ranch and I said I didn't know it was but one way to pernounce ranch. Then he stopped and said this was it, but it wasn't my ranch house, it was THE RANCH HOUSE and they had some real good vittles do why don't you all try it? It's right on the Airport Road, Chapel Hill. By the way, them shoes got here all right. Everything fine but the color. They takened yeller paint real good.

Yours truly
The Old Rancher

Kemper Unknown; Stallings Ok

Word has not been received as yet as to whether Don Kemper, who broke his hand in the State game, will be ready for the Clemson game. It is known, however, that 250-pound tackle Don Stallings will be ready to go this Saturday. Stallings apparently has recovered from a cracked rib received in practice.

UN Shelves Red China By Slimmest Margin

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—The United States succeeded yesterday in again getting the United Nations to sidetrack the question of Red China's membership. But the margin of victory was the lowest on record.

By a vote of 44 to 28 the 81-nation General Assembly approved a U. S. proposal to postpone the issue for another year. Nine nations abstained.

Last year the vote was 48 for, 27 against and 6 abstentions.

In approving the U. S. proposal the assembly rejected India's request that the assembly open full-scale debate on Red China's representation. It also decided against considering any proposals for excluding the Chinese Nationalists or to seat the representatives of Peiping.

By its vote the assembly endorsed the action of its powerful steering committee. It approved the U. S. proposal by a 12-7 vote last Friday.

This time the United States had the support of slightly over 54 per cent of the U.N. members on the postponement move.

It compared with 71.6 per cent in 1954, 70 per cent in 1955, and a little over 59 per cent in 1956 and 1957. The drop in 1956 and 1957 was due to the increase in the U.N. membership by 21 nations, including four Soviet bloc and six Asian nations.

Perhaps one of the most significant developments in the assembly debate this year was the fact the United States fought almost single-handedly for its proposal.

Federal Court Again Rebuffs Virginia Plan

RICHMOND, Va., — (AP) — Another federal court rebuff yesterday brought Virginia to the point on no-return in its plans to seize and keep closed Norfolk's six white secondary schools.

Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals removed any question of the state's next step when he turned down a request for a year's stay of a U. S. Court order directing admission of 17 Negroes to three high schools and three junior high schools.

The decision at Baltimore came as no surprise to Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and Atty. Gen. A. S. Harrison Jr. They felt the result of the request had been telegraphed in advance by Sobeloff's refusal to stay similar cases involving Warren County and Charlottesville schools.

Almond told a news conference the state law that closes schools rather than permit racially mixed classrooms would probably be invoked in the Norfolk case today. He said he thought he should confer first with Norfolk Schol Officials as a matter of courtesy.

State shuttering of the Norfolk schools will affect an additional 10,000 pupils, more than treble the number already idled by closure of Warren County's only high school — at Front Royal, Va. — and the two schools at Charlottesville. And it will provide a far broader testing of sentiment on whether no public schools is preferable to public schools with a degree of integration.

Watchman Is Guilty Of Assault On Coed

Campus night watchman John P. Carson has been found guilty of assaulting a young lady earlier this month in Chapel Hill.

Carson was ordered to pay court costs at his hearing in Orange County Recorder's Court this week.

The name of the girl involved was not available. The Warrant for Carson's arrest was sworn out by C. L. Edmonds, the girl's companion on the night of the assault, police said.

J. S. Bennett, director of the University office of operations, said Carson has been temporarily suspended from his job as night watchman, a position he had held for nearly four years.

The assault charge against Carson was a misdemeanor offense, not a felony.

The warrant said Carson on Sept. 18, "while acting as an officer of the law, (did) assault a female by taking her into custody and compelling her to walk with him for some distance without having her charged with a violation of criminal law;

"And while in his custody, did place his hands upon her and orally make such advance or propositions of such nature as to place the said female in fear and great embarrassment."

Section B, North-South, Dana Dixon and Bill Caison, second place, Dan Duke and Malcolm Clark, third place. East-West, Phil Straus and Mike Atheneos, first place; Mike Alexander and Frank Carlisle, second place; and Jim Drautman and John Rives, both of Duke, third place.

PLANNING DRAMATIC SKETCHES OF AMERICA—Planning for presentation of 30 minute dramatic sketches titled "American Ideas of the 20th Century" are, left to right, Paul Green, Gerald Johnson and Elmer Oettinger. Playwright Green is a consultant for the project and will write one of the plays. Author Johnson has written a play "Principle of Limits" which he also moderates. Oettinger who is a teacher in the University of North Carolina Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, is director of the project. They are seated at luncheon in the dining room of the Carolina Inn at Chapel Hill.

Nine Authors Secured For Project Of Radio, TV, Motion Pictures

Nine distinguished American authors have been secured for a series of national network broadcasts to originate in Chapel Hill entitled "American Ideas in the 20th Century."

The broadcasts will start in October.

The programs will be broadcast over 75 network stations affiliated with NBC.

Elmer Oettinger, director of the NBC-financed project, said thirty-minute dramatic sketches will be written by such authors as Pearl Buck, Paul Green, Richard Adler, Frances Gray Patton, Bernice Kelly Harris, Harry Golden, Kermit Hunter, Betty Smith and Gerald Johnson.

Johnson is a Tar Heel native who was an editorial writer for the Baltimore Evening Sun and has lately been an autobiographer and writer of magazine articles. Johnson came to Chapel Hill this past week and has acted as narrator and moderator for his play "Principle of Limits."

The main point of Johnson's sketch is that "no matter how popular a President of the United States might be, there is a limit beyond which he cannot push his popularity."

Dr. Clark At Meeting In Princeton, N. J.

Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr., administrator of the UNC Division of Health Affairs, will attend a meeting of university medical administrators at Princeton, N. J. this weekend.

The UNC Division of Health Affairs is composed of the Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy, Public Health and N. C. Memorial Hospital.

Student Parking Rules Clarified By Jefferies

One new parking regulation has been put into effect this fall, according to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

Sophomores who are in the General College and have a C average may keep cars, but their cars must be parked in the Bell Tower Parking lot between the hours of 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.

During this time the cars may not be parked on the campus or on any of the streets adjacent to the campus.

Specifically, cars with Bell Tower Parking stickers can not park on or within an area bounded by the following streets: Rosemary Street to Boundary Street, Boundary Street to Country Club Road. Country Club Road to Ridge Road, Ridge Road to Manning Drive. Manning Drive to Pittsboro Street, Pittsboro Street to Cameron Avenue, Cameron Avenue to Mallette Street, Mallette Street to W. Franklin Street, W. Franklin Street to Church Street and Church Street to Rosemary Street.

The only exception to this rule is that sophomores may park in the private lots of the fraternities within this area.

Those who are attending the University for their third year, but are still in General Colelge and do not have a C average, may not have a car. The only exception to this rule is for the student to have begun his academic career before fall, 1956.

University police will patrol the University Campus proper. Areas outside of the main campus will be patroled regularly by special University police.

Violators will be held accountable to the Student Traffic Court.

"In my opinion one who registers a car illegally for someone else is violating the Honor Code," Jefferies said yesterday. So far about 2,500 cars have been registered.

Before school began letters were sent to those students who were ineligible to register a car. Other students and parents were also sent a copy of the automobile regulations.

IFC Refuses Opportunity To Write Rush Statements

The Interfraternity Council has said no to separate letters on the question, "Why should a rushee pledge my fraternity."

The decision was made at the IFC meeting Monday night.

IFC President Tucker Yates said The Daily Tar Heel asked that each fraternity president submit a 100-word statement in answer to the question.

According to Yates, this was discussed at length by all representatives, and the general opinion was that 24 separate statements of similar length would be merely repititious and lacking in genuine value.

"We felt that an article submitted by the IFC concerning fraternities and rush in general would be much more informative and beneficial to all rushees," Yates said.

"Certainly each fraternity president isn't so naive as to believe that his fraternity is the best for every rushee. The rushee is merely asked to carefully scrutinize each fraternity house and make his own decision as to which fraternity is best for him," he added.

Yates said he speaks for the entire IFC when he says that it wholeheartedly appreciates the interest and cooperation which The Daily Tar Heel has shown in helping it carry out rush week in the best possible manner.

Daily Tar Heel Editor Curtis Gans said yesterday he had planned to devote a full page to the statements on the first day of rush.

"I think (the IFC) has lost itself an opportunity for more complete and accurate coverage," Gans said.

He commented that he believes all the fraternities should be able to write individual statements. "The differences between (the fraternities) should be more than which Greek letters they use," he added.

Gans said he planned on using the statements in line with his program to give thorough coverage to rush and the present fraternity situation on campus.

In other business at the IFC meeting Bob Bender, chairman of rush within the IFC, gave a run down of rules together with days designated for having invitations and bids in.

Bender also stressed the importance of complying with the rush rules.

Walter Fitts, vice president of the IFC, said that this year's social calendar will be submitted to assistant dean of student affairs, Sam Magill, for approval. Fitts also said that a social committee under the leadership of the vice president is to be set up.

The members of the committee will be the social chairmen from the different fraternities.

President Tucker Yates also reminded each fraternity to make arrangements with Sam Magill concerning faculty advisers. Yates also stated that a permanent address should be made for intra-campus mail.

Student Party Meeting Set For Tonight In GM

The Stuednt Party will hold its first meeting of the year tonight at 7 o'clock in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

The primary purpose of the meeting, according to Student Party Chairman Leon Holt, will be "to get acquainted with new students that are interested in student government."

Plans call for a brief meeting, during which Holt will give a historical sketch of the party. John Brooks, secretary to Student Body President Don Furtado, will outline the Party organization and purposes.

A social hour will follow the meeting.

Chairman Holt said, "We feel there are a lot of students here who have taken part in student government in high school who could contribute a lot to student government here at Carolina. We fel this is a good opportunity for them to start since the Student Party draws from all segments of the campus."

Holt added, "Membership in the Student Party presents an opportunity to establish numerous contacts on campus. We would especially like to see students take a more active part in student government and fill the positions they are capable of filling."

Last spring's election marked the third consecutive year that Student Party nominees won a majority of positions at the head of student government, Holt said. Party members currently serving are Don Furtado, student body president; Ralph Cummings, vice president; and Paddy Wall, student body secretary.

Met Baritone Warren Starts Concert Series

Leonard Warren, noted baritone of the Metropolitan Opera, will lead off the 1958-59 Chapel Hill Concert Series with a program in Memorial Hall Oct. 6.

Students will be admitted free to the concert upon presentation of ID cards. Student wives will lbe admitted for $1.

LEONARD WARREN
. . . series opener

Warrn has been a member of the Metropolitan since 1939. Acclaimed on several continents as a leading baritone, he was chosen to appear in the Soviet Union last spring in a new cultural exchange program.

While in Moscow, Warren gave two recitals besides one performance of "Rigoletto" at the Soviet capital's famed Bolshoe Theatre.

Besides visiting Moscow, Warren gave several performance and recitals in other Soviet cities.

In other programs scheduled this season, the Concert Series will present, on Jan. 7, Berl Senofsky, violinist and winner of the 1955 Grand Prize of the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium International Contest. He is the first American-born and American trained violinist to gain this international recognition.

The New Orleans Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra with Alexander Hilsberg conducting will appear Feb. 11.

The 85-member orchaestra and its conductor was selected by the United States Department of State in 1956 to visit 16 Latin American countries on a concert tour. Its reception there and in North American countries more recently have made it a popular concert attraction

Louis Kentner, pianist, will be presented in the final concert on March 2.

Batten Named Narrator At Morehead Planetarium

James W. Batten of Goldsboro has joined the narrating staff of the Morehead Planetarium, Manager A. F. Jenzano has announced.

Batten is a UNC graduate, a World Warr II Navy veteran and a member of the National Science Teachers Assn. He is listed in "Who's Who in American Education."

Prior to coming to Chapel Hill, Batten headed the New Hanover High School in Wilmington and taught at Wilmington College. He also taught at Kenly, Princeton, Micro and Smithfield.

Batten will be a narrator for the special Planetarium demonstrations for school children.

"We are fortunate to obtain a man of Mr. Batten's scientific background to narrate school programs which are designed to interest children in the study of science," Manager Jenzano said.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

Linda Llewellyn Clark, Mary Blackman Roberts, Julia Sue Ayers, Judee Dale Doherty, Frederick Ernest Barwick III, Freddie Donald Hickman, Benjamin Lee Rogers, Sellers Luther Crisp, John Leonard Henderson, Joseph Henry Perry, Harvey Lake Harris, Elizabeth Grayson Deal, David Fleetwood McFadyen, Myron Hugh Ennis and Peter Beeken Yuong.

FOURTEEN TAR HEELS ATTEND

NSA Congress Praised By Delegates

By ED ROWLAND

(This is the first in two articles on the National Student Assn. Congress.)

The University of North Carolina, long a leader in the National Student Assn., sent a larger number of persons to the eleventh national congress this summer than ever before.

Held at Ohio Wesleyan University August 20-29, the Congress has been praised by the 14 persons attending from Carolina as one of the best ever held.

A six-person delegation headed by Student Body President Don Furtado and NSA Coordinator Ed Levy attended seminars, discussions and informal talks during the congress. They almost uniformly praised the meeting for its atmosphere of liberality and exchange of ideas.

One of the striking features discovered by the delegates was that the problems faced on the UNC campus are not unique. Yet as Don Furtado said, "Mere words will not be enough to solve the problems we face."

UNC'S DELEGATES

UNC's delegates, in addition to Furtado and Levy, were Curtis Gans, Daily Tar Heel editor; Paddy Sue Wall, secretary of student government; Frank Elkins, member of the president's cabinet; John Brooks, president of the Phi.

Alternate delegates were Gary Greer, student legislator and Di President; Roger Foushee, legislator; Lillian Shannonhouse, chairman of the Women's Residence Council; Diana Johnson, president of Panhellenic Council; Ralph Cummings, vice-president of the student body; and Charlie Gray, treasurer of student government.

Observers were Glenna Meginnis nad Joel Fleishman. Miss Meginnis had the status of alternate alternate.

Each delegate and alternate selected one of the commissions to attend during the entire Congress. They were international affairs, student government, educational affairs, and student affairs. Each commission was divided into subcommissions for more informal talks and exchange of ideas.

Paddy Sue Wall, who was elected secretary of the campus honor and self-discipline sub-commission, said that other schools were very interested in the camous code and honor system as it is in effect here. "Our new jury system was of particular interest," she added.

Miss Wall said that while she realizes the university should become more active in the regional and sectional NSA, "what we learned is to be shared with students on campus. This will make our student organizations more effective by the interest in the congress created for the benefit of the whole student body."

Furtado said he realized after Furtado, after attending the international affairs commission meetings, said, "My greatest gain was that it made me more cognizant of the tremendous problems facing the nation now — both national and international. The greatest service done was to put me in the proper frame of mind for this year's work."

PRE MEETING CONFERENCE

Furtado joined 250 other presidents of student bodies for a three day conference preceeding the main meeting. He said that in instances of common problems like establishing an atmosphere of study UNC is not alone. "In one case it is large classes, limited facilities and lack of tradition that hamper the creation of such an atmosphere. At other schools these things plus some others have produced the same result."

Curtis Gans said the same thing a little stronger. "The NSA congres was both good and bad. It was good from the point of view of discussion and bringing issues and viewpoints into focus.

"It was bad from the ponit of view of leadership, for in a congress of 1,200 student leaders, there were not more than 15 who showed the qualities of leadership. Further, from student leaders one would expect more honesty than that which was evidenced at the Congress."

Gans went on to say that he felt the fundamental job of NSA is to evaluate the education of the U. S. student, and to serve as the voice of the student in all major issues on a local, national and international level. "This is not being done effectively," he said.

"The NSA needs a closer tie with the campus," Gans added. "The annual congress should not be a pep talk for the coming year but a culmination of the year's effort. It can build leadership, it can move opinion, but this is not being adequately done now."

The IFC

The Intrafraternity Council proved last night what many have thought about it all along — that there is no place for individuality among fraternities.

In turning down an opportunity for each individual fraternity house to make a statement about itself on the grounds that there would be too much reptetion of the same statements, there is adequate evidence that uniqueness is not treasured in fraternity circles and that fraternities individually have no uniqueness in and of themselves.

It is a sad situation when a group announces to the public that in its membership there are not twenty-four people with enough originality to say something about their individual fraternity, something that sets it apart from other fraternities and something that makes life in that fraterntiy appealing to the rushee. The rushee ought to bear this in mind when he thinks of the fraternity he would like to pledge.

It was gratifyingly obvious that not all fraternities are in this situation, for unlike the usual IFC procedure, there was not a unanimous vote. However, it is somewhat less gratifying to note that the decision is binding on all individuals — including some individuals who refuse to comment on other phases of fraternity life.

It is rather paradoxical that the IFC which howled last year for publicity until it was blue in the face, quails at giving itself accurate coverage this year. It is hoped that they will soon realize that silence is much more suspect than honesty even if part of an honest picture is unfavorable to the fraternities. Their merits should come out if there are such merits and if the reporter covers everything. This should place a burden on the fraternities to give all the facts not some. It is good to know that at least the president of the IFC is willing to give information. It is hoped that others will follow suit.

The time for truth has come, and if the fraternities have nothing to hide, and they shouldn't it is high time they opened their private iron curtain to the benefit of both themselves and the academic community.

Red China

The United States has again succeeded in misleading the United Nations with regard to giving Communist China a seat in the United Nations. However, the America's balance of power within the U.N. is slipping.

The world is beginning to wake up to the fact that there is an entity such as Communist China, and that this entity is worthy of representation in that it is the government of 400,000,000 people.

The world at present can be even more aware of this country's existence by the very fact that a minor or major war is being started in the Far East with the Communist Chinese being one of the primary participants.

What is apparent further from the General Assembly 44-29 vote is that the prestige of the United States has slipped noticeably, and that if the United States does not do something about this in a hurry, it will have lost the balance of power it is trying so hard to hold. In a world where the balance of power is a tenuous thing, depending on the skill of those who play the game of power politics, the United States is losing its advantage very rapidly

It is hoped that America realizes before long that to play the game of power politics, one must compromise principle, the United States at the present time wants to have its cake and eat it too, and this is impossible. The future can only tell whether the United States is gaining any wisdom as to the realties of foreign policy.

New Art Museum

There have been many comments about the new Ackland Museum. Most have commented on the interior beauty of the structure. Many felt that the exterior was drab and dull and that the paintings within were arranged in no logical order. Others still were pleased with the added classroom space.

The new addition is a wanted one. It fills a void that has been on this campus for a long time. It may do its part to bring the cultural level of the campus upward, and perhaps will attract many students who would not ordinarily journey to Raleigh to see some great works of art.

This type of addition is necessary to breed a higher intellectual level on this campus. It is hoped that additions such as this will be a part of the UNC campus in the near future.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N.C., under the Act of March 8, 1879. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

Walking around the campus after being away for three months, I am conscious of some changes. Besides the three-and-one-half inch rise in the hemlines of most co-ed skirts and besides the fading suntans there are still new things to be seen and felt and heard.

Going into Lenoir Hall, I see that they are building some kind of bookcase looking thing into the side of one room. This device, when finished, will, I am told, alleviate the problem of dirty dishes. Thus we can all get a clean wiped-off table sooner.

As for the library, all kinds of furniture moving has taken place. No longer is the reserve reading room the campus date bureau. Reason: Big metal bookcases now separate the tables, allowing for more privacy but fewer romantic glances between tables. For all those disappointed ones I would like to suggest the Arboretum. University officials say it will be next year before any bookcases are moved in there.

The interior of Memorial Hall now resembles a theater instead of a Quaker Meeting House. The soft new seats may be a foreshadow of more entertainment and less preaching. At any rate, less backaches.

Strolling up towards town, sounds of STEREO drift from the direction of Kemp's, and two blocks up sits a brand new beautiful art museum ALL OUR OWN. Yes, somebody sure has been busy this summer because there are lots of changes.

However, a few things will remain the same. As the racial tension mounts and famous negroes get stabbed with letter openers, and as the cold war rages fast and furious between Washington and Moscow, some little co-ed's world will end abruptly right here in Chapel Hill. Because she didn't get a bid to her favorite sorority.

And as the lecturers lecture intensely on "Educational Shortcomings in the U. S." and as the magazines and newspapers and books scream "We need more teachers!" there will still be the boy or girl in back of the classroom making marks in the margin of a notebook. And what will the marks represent? Simple: The straight ones indicate the number of times Professor Sloe said "... relatively," and the crooked marks indicate how many time he said "... and... uh ..."

We live in our own little coccoon again in which changes are relatively rare.

HHow high is the sky? How deep is the ocean? How far is that star? How near is that war?

I am sitting in the office of the editor of The Daily Tar Heel. It is Monday afternoon about 3:07. The Associated Press Wire is tap, tap, tapping away in the other room. It is bringing news about the weather from the Raleigh-Durham Airport, messages from Little Rock about integration and Ozark Orval and dreary, frightening and depressing syllables and consonants from Quemoy and Matsu.

I have often been proud of the actions of my country. In my own lifetime many memorable events have occured. In December of 1941, we entered World War II; a smart move. In the immediate post war period, we bravely and skillfully executed the Berlin Airlif. In 1950, we entered the Korean War.

Yet, there have been other times when I have been other times of the actions of my country. In 1956 and for years before, we encouraged the peoples of Eastern Europe to revolt against their Communist rulers. Leaflets, espionage agents and the Voice of America all told inhabitants of this area to rise and seek their rightful freedom. The people of Hungary did this. We sent Red Cross observers and called it a day. In 1956, the people of Israel joined with the French and the British in an effort to rid the Middle East of Nasser. We reversed our stand and joined hands with Moscow backing the rotten government of Egypt. In the spring of 1958, the Vice President of the United States made a trip to South America. While there, he was spit upon by a group of students in Caracas. The President of the United States immediately dispatched 1500 Marines to Trini dad to show these Laitn peasants that the big brother to the North was as big as ever. In July of 1958, a revolt in Iraq took the life of King Faisal. The President dispatched 12,000 Marines to Lebanon and the British sent troops to Jordan in a show of force designed to call a halt to Arab nationalism and save western oil. One month later, the U. S. recognized the new Iraqi regime, withdrew many troops and made concesions to the Arabs. Where is the logic?

Now in September of 1958, we no longer turn our attentions to Little Rock, or Caracas, or Beirut, or Hungary. We think of two worthless, insignificant, rotten, filthy islands called Quemoy and Matsu. These two small bodies of land are a stone's throw from the mainland of Communist China. They have very interesting points in their history. Never before has the islad of Formosa laid any claims to them. Always in the past they have belonged to the mainland of China. Recently, before the present crisis, the American military echelon ruled that these two islands had no bearing on the defense of Formosa and could in all respects be writte off of the books. Now, where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves hell bent for a general war and on the road to final disaster.

We are being dictated to by a sick old man who runs a corrupt government. Chiang Kai-Shek is forcing us into a position of defending his mad scheme of capturing the Chinese mainland. It is high time that he realized that he will never again set foot on his birthplace. China belongs to the Chinese. Quemoy and Matsu should belong to the Chinese. The chief of state in China is sitting at this moment in Peking. He is not on Formosa. Chiang's position of insisting that he rules China is as fantastic as if the President of Costa Rica suddenly declared that Eisenhower was not the President of the United States.

When is our State Department going to wake up to the Far Eastern facts of life? When are we going to realize that the Communists are in China to stay? When are we going to stop giving money to Chiang for his insane schemes? When are we going to wise up and recognize the government of Communist China and deal with them on the diplomatic level? When, when, when?

The Wall Street Journal had an interesting comment in a recent editorial. It said, "in the past, we have been bale to count on the help of the decent peoples of the world. Now, we are in plain danger of losing this help." We had better not lose this help. This country cannot stand alone.

Get on the stick America.

CYNTHIA

A Melodrama in One Very Short Act

The scene is the United States Destroyer Mitscher, behind the forward turret. The time is 12:55, Saturday, Sepember 20, 1958. The destroyer is anchored a few miles off Newport, Rhode Island. The America's Cup Yacht Races are taking place. A number of high Naval officials, a few civilians, one woman, and a civilian man are the dramatis personae. The latter seems to be the center of attention. He is attired in a tan cap, checkered sports coat, brown shirt, and tan slacks—and a necktie that must have been made out of a shoelace and pulled taut with a washer. He is the President of the United States).

D.D.E.—(Speaking to an official of the Yacht Club) Mr. Anderson, what is the white thing on top of that boat?

Anderson—That is a sail, Mr. President.

D.D.E.—Oh. (pauses) I thought they only had them at Macy's.

M.E.—Dwight, I'm bored.

D.D.E.—You're always bored. (to Anderson) And what does that man do at the back of the boat?

Anderson—Him? Oh, he is the rudder man, Mr. President.

D.D.E.—What's a rudder?

Anderson—That's for steering the boat, Mr. Presdient.

D.D.E.—Oh. (pauses) I'm bored.

Anderson—What would you like, Mr. President?

D.D.E.—A niblet.

Anderson—A niblet of what, Mr. Presdient? We have some very fine gruyere cheese on board, or perhaps smoked salmon would be more to your taste?

D.D.E.—No no no. A niblet is something you hit a golf ball with.

Anderson—Oh - really? (pauses to look out to see) Mr. President, if you look now you can see the yachts Columbia and Scepter jockeying for the lead.

D.D.E.—I though jockeys were something on the race track.

Anderson—(mildly perturbed) Jockeying, Mister President, is a term we in the yachting game use to describe two or more boats battling for supremacy.

D.D.E.—Oh - really? (pauses) I'm confused, Mr. Anderson.

Anderson—(jovially) Well, Mr. President, we all have little trouble learning the quirks of the game, you know.

D.D.E.—Yes, I know. Say . . . did I ever tell you about D-Day?

Anderson—No sir, I'm afraid you did not (hurriedly) If you'll look now, Mr. President, you will see both yachts in very good perspective.

D.D.E.—Oh yes. Very nice. How much did they cost?

Anderson—The yacht Columbia is valued at about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, Mr. President.

D.D.E.—Boy . . . I could buy Burning Tree for that. Couldn't I Mamie?

M.E.—What Oh, sure Dwight I'm bored. Let's go in town to a movie.

D.D.E.—Why go in town? When you're President they bring the movies to you. Let's see "Follow the Sun" again.

M.E.—Again? If I see Ben Hogan hit a golf ball once more I'll scream. You saw it twice yesterday. Isn't that enough?

D.D.E.—All right Mamie. I want to play golf, Mr. Anderson. Is there a course on board?

Anderson—No sir, I'm afraid not.

D.D.E.—Not even a miniature one? When then, I'm going in. Turn the boat around. Mr. Palmer and I have a date.

A Letter

TO THE AMERICAN STUDENTS IN U. N. C.

In behalf of my fellow Bolivian students, I want to deliver our friendly greetings and our best fraternal wishes to you.

I have had the high honor of being selected as a participant in the Foreign Student Leadership Project (F. S. L. P.) and to be accepted in this distinguished University. This project is sponsored by United States National Student Association (U. S. N. S. A.) which hopes to help achieve mutual understanding between United States and foreign countries, personally I believe this policy is a worthy democratic step to prevent its fail, because in this way we are joining our thoughts and our powers hoping to be able to hold our freedom in the future. By these and other circumstances I am sure that members who are aiding these international relations, have a clear historical vision, because they realize how much responsibility weigh on your shoulders and conciences, it is for me and for all people of our democratic orbit a hope for the coming years.

Since at the present there exists two greatest powers on the earth and one of them is yours, it is particularly important for the human destiny that you realize the role which you must play.

In our countries there are many economic and social problems which sometimes seems insoluble and it is probable that you do not know them as well you should; this project is trying to show you these situations, giving us, at the same time, a chance to know your own thoughts and opinions, consequently I find my mission extremely important, and I would like to be sure that also you understand in this way.

With this intention I invite to you to ask me any questions or doubts which you could have about my country, I will be very glad to try answer them, and if you allow me I will make questions to you about your country, my address is 415 Joyner Dorm.

I wish this year will be a happy year for all American people and very profitable for U.N.C. students to whom I hope to see studying and taking active action in their Student Government.

Returning to the campus, after a year's absence, we have noticed an ever increasing number of "flips" on the campus.

To be sure, there have always been a certain number of these girls on campus as there is around any city or campus or any large size. However, we never expected to see them in any large number here in the South.

What's a flip?

Wel-l-l-l, a flip is pretty hard to describe. It's a girl if that helps any. In fact, she's a very determined girl.

According to Bill Manville of the "Village Voice" she's the type that defines an affair as "a game for two players in which each withholds what the other does not wish to take."

Or one who believes that a clock is a "fatuous machine which supposedly organized eternity into measureable qualities."

Or time is "cosmic stuff that glues together the otherwise unrelated happenings of this world."

Marriage to this girl is a "perfect moment frozen for a dull eternity." And a bride is a "made maid."

This gal isn't from Dull town nor is she hep like the rest of us. This gal is really swinging. She's hip.

Dig me?

These flips dress a bit differently than the average girl. Sometimes she is a little more conservative, but most of the time she dresses much more seductively.

Their hair is either cut Italian style or it is in a pony tail. They like sack dresses and the color black. Jewelry is usually exotic and imported.

They are inclined to be arty and intellectual. And they are certainly not virgins. In fact, as an outgrowth of their individuality they're usually the keeper of the pad and are always quite willing to put up any male that comes along.

Being keeper of the pad is rather difficult here in Chapel Hill as most of our flips reside in dormitories.

Instead of the permanent pad, which city flips maintain, our college flips maintain sort of pad du jour. That is, it varies from day to day and time to time.

Sometimes in a car at the lakeside or golf course, sometimes in the Arboretum, and sometimes in Kenan Woods.

But make no mistake, although this chick may share her pad as often as necessity calls for, there is a definite goal in mind. Her mind is strictly on men.

Once she finds the suitable male she will move right in and before he can say "existentitalism" he usually finds himself pleading "I do!"

Our flip is an outgrowth of the war and a good example of the 'beat' genre. She is a remnant of the "emancipation of the female" movement. Furthermore, we hope that she's here to stay.

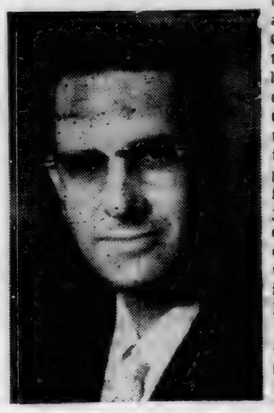
Vive la flip! vice le pad! Vive les bools!

Functions Of Lawyers

Charles S. Rhyne

Our profession is always slow to change, and this inhibition of our profession against change is frequently sound. But that inhibition should not prevent progress in keeping with the high ideals and objectives that are our legal heritage.

There are always those who are interested in maintaining the status quo. In New Jersey, where one of the most modern judicial systems in our Nation has been adopted, the late Chief Justice Arthur T. Vanderbilt often pointed out that in their campaign for a modern court system the chief opposition came from lawyers and judges who interests in the status quo. I hope this will not happen in North Carolina.



The prestige of our profession depends in large part upon the esteem of the public for our courts. Antiquated court systems, congested dockets, too few judges to take care of an ever-increasing population, and failure of our profession to defend our courts as an institution of government when under unjust attack leads to loss of confidence by the public in our judiciary.

Our system of government is no stronger than our courts, and our courts are no stronger than the strength of the public's confidence in them. When public confidence in the courts is undermined or impaired, something basic in our way of life is undermined and impaired. We as a people talk loud and strong of our rights and liberties, but those rights and liberties are as nothing without a redress and protection in the courts. The very stability of our system of government depends upon the respect of the people for those who hold the scales of justice in their hands. Our people have a right to justice, soundly and properly administered. And we lawyers have a duty to make the people secure in their rights. This means that we lawyers must uphold public confidence in our judiciary, and do this by removing the causes of whatever dissatisfaction and misunderstanding may exist regarding the judicial process. The lawyers of North Carolina have a great challenge and a great opportunity to perform a tremendous public service by supporting the Bell Committee's recommendations. I feel certain they will.

6. IMPROVING LAW

The principles of our "government of law" remain rather constant, as they are based upon the great fundamental rule of reason. But the rules of law—as distinguished from the basic principles—require almost constant change to meet the needs of scientific, economic and social developments. One simple illustration of such a change in legal rules is the adaptation of the traffic laws from horse-and-buggy to automobile. The need for new rules of law to govern the peaceful use of nuclear energy is another example. To keep our nation governed by law we must constantly re-evaluate the present status of our laws so that fast-moving changes of our fast-moving era will not outstrip the rules of law which we need to fulfill the needs of man. This essential task is chiefly an obligation and responsibility of the legal profession.

From its inception to the very zenith of its power, the legal machinery of our country has been largely formulated and operated by lawyers. We know more about the legal machinery than any other group, and from that knowledge flows our obligation of seeing to it that our system of government meets the needs of our modern society.

Lawyers must, therefore, keep the legal machinery of our governmental system—local, state and national—under continuous study, and suggest essential changes and additions. Bar Associations and other groups do this work on an organized basis, but individual lawyers have an obligation here also.

7. LEADERSHIP ON PUBLIC ISSUES

The final function of a lawyer, which I would urge you who are on the htreshold of our profession to think about, is that of public leadership in the discussion of the great issues of the day. The people of our country have long looked to lawyers as their natural source of informed comment on these great issues. A sound public opinion is absolutely essential to the proper operation and continuance of our system of government. This is so because in a democracy ultimate control rests with the people. Public opinion fluctuates, but becomes a controlling force when it solidifies into the will of the people.

It has been truly said that "never are people so likely to decide rightly as then they discuss freely." Throughout our history, from colonial days until now, there have been many great public issues the decision of which has governed the future of a local community, a state, our nation, or the world. Community discussion, state discussion, national discussion, and international discussion goes on constantly. Today, with our almost instantaneous world-wide communications, what happens anywhere can affect people everywhere.

By tradition and training the members of the legal profession have been among the leaders in the discussion of public issues in the past, but lately we have lost out somewhat in this leadership to public relations experts, business executives, labor union leaders, and others. We need to recapture our former position of leadership. Never before have the issues before our people been so complex and so difficult of solution and so dependent upon careful fact finding, fact analysis and clear thinking. Lawyers are peculiarly equipped to collect the facts and to express informed opinions, this helping to mold public opinion in a sound direction. Our special talents therefore create special responsibilities to provide this leadership. And this is a responsibility that is unique and different from that of the members of any other profession.

While there are many great isues today. I go directly for my illustration to the greatest issue of them all—how to achieve and maintain world peace.

I sincerely believe that the way to achieve and maintain peace is through the use of the rule of law in a world-wide judiciary. Law plus a court system has achieved and maintained peace domestically in nation after nation. Law plus a world-wide judiciary can perform the same function between nations if but given a chance.

Henry Spends Time Tackling Two Jobs

Graham Memorial's first professional director, Howard Henry, has at least two big tasks to tackle here.

First, of course, Henry is familiarizing himself on the operation and personnel within the University student union. This particular task is probably easy for him since he had experience as assistant director of the spacious stulent union at the University of Wisconsin.

One of the real problems that Henry stepped into when he assumed his new duties July 1 is the work and planning for a new student union building. So far, Henry has had relatively little time to consider the needs of a new building.

He said this week that he will begin working out specifications after meeting with the guilding committee of Graham Memorial's Board of Directors. This committee last spring outlined the general needs to be included in a new student union building.

While he was with the University of Wisconsin's student union, Henry was directing nearly 500 part-time and full-time employes.

Here there are no more than 20 students on the Graham Memorial staff.

Besides his personnel work, Henry was in charge of reservations for the thousands of club meetings held both in the Wisconsin University's student union building and elsewhere on the campus.

Other duties that came under Henry's direction in Wisconsin included overseeing public areas of the student union building not included within the operation of other departments.

Although Henry would not discus to any great extent the student union needs here, he did point out one striking example to Graham Memorial's limited facilities.

Henry saw a definite deficiency in a building that had to close up ping pong for six weeks so that year book pictures might be made.

GM's new director is especially interested in working with student employes. Henry said that work positions are good opportunities for students, commenting on a usual good group of potential workers.

Already expressing a fondness for Chapel Hill, Henry said he appreciated the hospitality shown him, his wife and 4 children.

Prof. Robert Getty Given Paddison Post

Robert J. Getty and Mrs. Getty have arrived here, where Getty is Paddis Professor of Classics. Before coming to Chapel Hill, Professor Getty taught at the University College in Toronto.

The Gettys, presently staying at the Carolina Inn, have bought a home in Chapel Hill and will be moving in soon.

Getty is an internationally-known Latin scholar and is vice-president of the American Philological Assn. A native of Londonderry, Northern Ireland, he was graduated from Queen's University, Belfast, and Cambridge University. He taught at the University of Aberdeen, University of Liverpool, St. John's College, and the University of Toronto.

Insurance Conversion Allowed Korea Vets

More than 685,000 Korean conflict veterans will soon be able to convert their previously non-convertible term GI insurance to permanent GI policies, according to a report from the Veterans Administration.

The affected term GI policies are identifiable by the letters "RS" which precede the policy numbers, the VA explained.

Beginning next January, a new statute (Public Law 85-896) will provide the thousands of "RS" policyholders with three options:

1. To convert their "RS" term policies to permanent plans for GI insurance.

2. To exchange their "RS" term policies for a "limited convertible" term policy carrying a lower premium rate, but which — after Sept 1, 1960 — can not be renewed by persons who have passed their 50th birthday.

3. To keep their "RS" term policies at the currently established premium rates, which increase every five years.

The maximum amount of the new-type insurnace will be limited in each case by the face amount of the veteran's present "RS" policy.

VA listed the types of permanent insurance to be available under the new law as: ordinary life, 20-pay life, 30-pay life, 20-year endownment, endowment at age 60, and endowment at age 65.

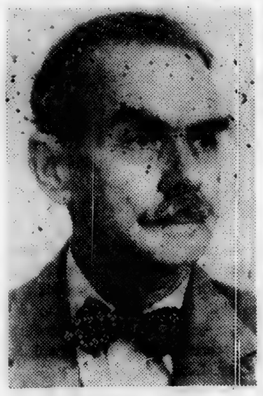
The new type policies — like the "RS" policies they may replace — will not yield dividends.

Only "RS" policyholders will be affected by the new law. Complete information about the conversion or exchange of "RS" insurance will be available at all VA offices by Dec. 1, 1958.

Russell's Book Translated In 4 Tongues

Japanese and Malayan readers will soon have access to translations of Phillips Russell's latest book,' 'Jefferson, Champion of the Free Mind."

The U. S. Information Agency has notified Russell that its Book Translation Program has selected the work for publication in Japanese and Malayan editions.



PHILLIPS RUSSELL
. . . Jefferson Biographer

A Spanish edition has previously been brought out in Argentina, and a German one in Vienna, Austria.

Russell, author of noted biographies of Mrs. Cornelia Phillips Spencer, Benjamin Franklin, John Paul Jones and Emerson, is a former newspaperman and professor emeritus of journalism at UNC.

"Jefferson, Champion of the Free Mind" is written as a series of short vignettes, each illustrating a facet of Jefferson's thinking. Russell's book was published two years ago.

Wilson Library Closes Kitchen To Public Use

The kitchen facilities of of the Library Staff Room will no longer be available for public use. The University Administration has directed that charges cannot be made for the use of these facilities.

Their use must be restricted because they belong in part to the staff association. Charges for the use of the kitchen have been applied towards the employment of help to clean the kitchen after each use and for a fund to replace broken equipment.

Organizations using the Library Assembly Room will be permitted to bring refreshments into the Room from the outside.

GRAHAM AT MEETING

Willard Graham, UNC professor, will be in New York City Thursday and Friday attending a meeting of the Committee on Accounting Procedures of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Better Reading Is Possible Through Course

Improved efficiency in reading and studying is the purpose of the reading program here.

Applications for the program are now being received in Room 08 Peabody Hall from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. through Friday.

The reading program is a voluntary, non-credit course open to all University students, graduate and professional, as well as undergraduate. The course is offered every hour of the day from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday. Classes will be arranged to fit the individual schedule.

Instruction will begin Oct. 6 and continue until the Christmas recess.

Carolina To Play Host To High School Press

The University will be host to several hunderd high school newspaper and yearbook editors and staff members Saturday, Oct. 4, at the Seventeenth Annual North Carolina Scholastic Press Institute.

Plans for the institute were drawn up by Acting Director Chris Folk of Charlotte in the absence of Director Walter Spearman, who has been on leave from the University during the past year to study at Harvard on a fellowship from the Fund for Adult Education. Spearman returned to the University this fall and will serve as director of the institute.

Saturday morning will be devoted to group sessions nad panels on various phases of newspaper work, including news writing, editorial writing, feature writing, sports, writing and advertising.

Ending the one-day session will be a banquet Saturday evening in Lenoir Hall with Greensboro Humorist David Morrah, frequent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and author of several volumes of humor, as the chief speaker.

The institute is sponsored each year by the University's School of Journalism, the University Extension Division, The Daily Tar Heel, student newspaper, and the N. C. Department of Public Instruction.

Two Instructors Added By NR

The UNC Naval ROTC unit has added two new assistant professors of Naval Scitnce to its staff, Lt. Ronald D. Bartlett and Lt. (j.g.) Ambrose A. Clegg Jr.

Lt. Barlett, who will teach naval operations and shipboard navigation, is a native of Salina, Kansas. He reentered the Naval Reserve in 1943, attended Navy Preflight school at the UNC Campus in 1944, and become a regular Navy officer in 1955. During this time Barlett completed his A.B. degree in psychology at Kansas Wesleyan University. His last position was patrol plane commander and survival officer with an airborne early warning squadron at Patuxent River Naval Air Station.

Lt. Clegg holds a B.A. degree from St. John's University in Brooklyn, N.Y., and an M.A. degree from Columbia University, where he also took a professional diploma in school administration and did work toward a doctorate in education administration.

He attended the Officer Candidate School at Newport, R. I., and was commissioned in the Naval Reserve in 1955. Lt. Clegg reported to Chapel Hill after a three year tour of duty with the Alaskan Sea Frontier Command as an operations officer. During his last year in Alaska he was president of the Kodiak and Aleutian Islands Historical Society.

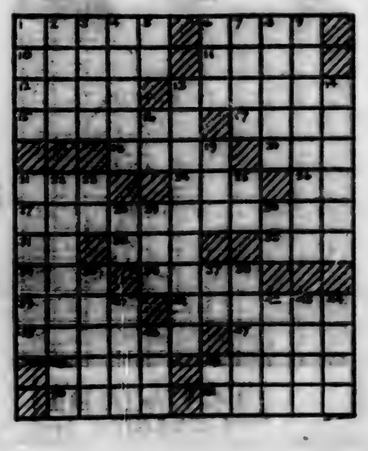
Yesterday's Answer



This week there are probably more red faces belonging to sports writers in this state than in any comparable time in the past. Last Saturday the eight ACC teams met each other. There were three upsets, and nearly a fourth.

On the home front, State College capitalized on Carolina's inability to hold on to the ball, ran up a quick 21-0 lead, then held off a final quarter Tar Heel threat to gain a 21-14 upset.

DEACONS BIG SURPRISE

Over at Winston-Salem, Wake Forest surprised everyone (probably including Wake Forest) by completely routing Maryland 34-0. The Terps were supposed to be the darkhorse team of the conference and the Deacs were said to have little improvement, if any.

A Saturday night barbecue was held in Columbia, and Duke furnished the fodder. South Carolina scored early in the game, ran the extra point, and held on for dear life while both teams tried in vain for another score. The Gamecocks came out on top 8-0.

CAVALIERS SCARE CLEMSON

The only game that went according to form, if it can even be called that, was Clemson's rather close win over Virginia. The Cavaliers, however, were ahead going into the fourth quarter and threatened to go ahead again after the Tigers took the lead. Clemson won it 20-15, and was glad to have escaped with its skin.

One thing is now obvious: There is no "breather" on the Carolina schedule. Tar Heel opponents illustrated and underscored this point in just one week-end. Added to the conference turnovers came a shocker from the West Coast. Southern Cal whipped Oregon State 21-0, beating a team that was supposed to repeat as PCC champs.

Tommy Mont of Maryland gives us this understatement of the week: "I wasn't at all pleased with the work of our boys." This after his boys had been drubbed, 34-0 by the Deacs.

When the suspension of State quarterback Ernie Driscoll was announced last week, most felt the loss would affect the Pack in one of two ways. Either they would lose their morale or go out and "winner for Ernie." Obviously, they did the latter. The suspension probably did Carolina more harm than good.

KEMPER INDEFINITE; STALLINGS READY

Word has not been received yet as to whether Don Kemper will be ready for the Clemson game. It is known that he broke the little and ring fingers of his hand. A good note is that 250-pound tackle Don Stallings will be ready to go next Saturday against the Tigers. His cracked rib has apparently healed.

A new innovation in the Tar Heel backfield, the wing-T, showed itself Saturday. Although at the time it was somewhat of a desperation measure, it clicked and may be used again.

FOUR PLAYS TO PAY DIRT

True, Saturday was a sad day in Chapel Hill, but one bright spot appeared through the clouds. This was the second Tar Heel touchdown, an 80-yard drive. With Jack Cummings at the helm the TD covered the distance in four passes, 1 minute and 15 seconds.

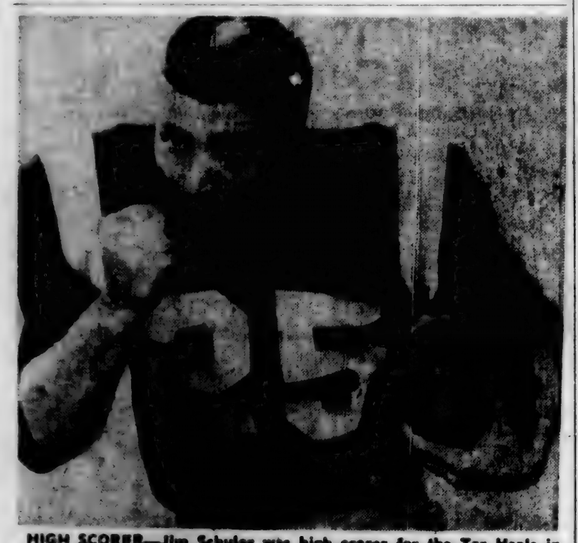
Next Saturday's game with Clemson may prove to be an aerial circus, with Cummings and Lowe pitching for the Tar Heels and Harvey White for the Tigers.

Al Goldstein, DTH Athlete of the Week, put on quite an amazing performance Saturday. There was one catch Goldstein made that was almost unbelievable. That was the one on the Carolina side, at about the State 30. Apologies for the misprint in yesterday's paper, Al.

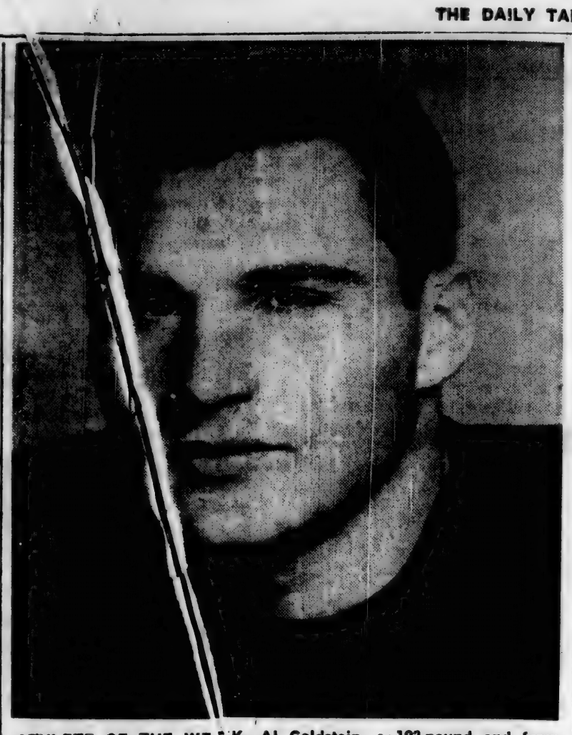
At last count, two of last year's Tar Heels were still with the Ottawa Roughriders. They are tackle Leo Russavage and end and co-captain Buddy Payne. Both are expected to stick with the Canadian football league outfit.

TATUM SIXTH IN NATION

How does Coach Jim Tatum's all-time coaching record stack up against the other coaches in the country? In 13 years of being a head coach, he has racked up 94 wins, 31 losses,and 7 ties. good enough for the sixth spot nationally. Tatum's percentage, including years at Oklahoma, Maryland and Carolina, is a very creditable .752. Bill Murray of Duke ranks eighth. Who is first? Bud Wilkinson of Oklahoma, of cuss, of cuss.



HIGH SCORER—Jim Schuler was high scorer for the Tar Heels in the State game as he scored one touchdown on a pass and ran for two extra points, giving him a combined total of eight.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK—Al Goldstein, a 193-pound end from Brooklyn, is the DTH Athlete of the Week. He set a conference record for passes caught Saturday. The name was spelled wrong yesterday.

NEW CONFERENCE CHAMP?

Wayne Bishop Appears Set To Lead ACC Harrier List

By BING SOMERS

Of the some 7000 students circulating about the UNC campus this year, few demand as much genuine respect and admiration as does Wayne Staton Bishop.

His record speaks for itself. In three years he has secured membership in the Men's Honor Council, the Order of the Holy Grail, and the Order of the Golden Fleece. He has also been sports editor of the Daily Tar Heel, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, and has lettered in both track and cross country.

Despite his impressive catalogue of membership cards, the slightly-built (6'1", 152) Bishop is perhaps best known as a runner. A specialist in the two mile, he finished eighth in a field of 35 at the NCAA finals in California this summer.

Whereas Dave Scurlock is regarded as the galloping, power-packed Horse of the Tar Heel track team, Bishop might be termed the artful, feather-stepping Cat. He is the thinker, the planner, the schemer who uses his mind as much as his legs during a race. He runs with a rather unique cat-like lambency using a step so light that even the battered old boards of the Tin Can barely creak under his stride.

Despite his current perch atop the ACC long distance ladder, this wiry Greenville senior constantly runs with a rather ominous cloud overhead in the presence of recurrent knee injury.

Having first been encountered in 1956, the injury raised its ugly head again last year when it crushed Bishop's hopes of copping the ACC cross country championship meet. Later, just three days before the indoor games, he dodged a runaway volleyball and popped it out of joint again. This time, however, the guts and determination which are his to such a high degree conquered the pain and he staged the '58 Games greatest duel with Maryland's indefatigueable Burr Grim in the two mile, finishing second.

In the spring with the knee at least temporarily healed, Bishop cruised away with the ACC two mile eclipsing the old record with a 9:19.5.

If the knee holds up, and it should, this year will finally be Bishop's. He should, with little strain, tiptoe away with the conference cross country crown, and both the indoor and outdoor two mile. With Grim gone, who's to stop him?

Tag Football Entries

The Intramurals Department has announced the dates when entries will close for the fall Tag Football play-offs. They are: graduate division: Sept. 25, Fraternity Blue—September 25, Dormitory—October 6, and Fraternity white—October 13. Last year's Tag Football champion is the Zeta Psi fraternity who beat the DKEs in the finals last fall.

MONOGRAM CLUB

President Don Kemper has announced that a meeting of the UNC Monogram Club will be held Thursday night at 8 o'clock. At that time a definite report on the coats that the club is asking from the athletic council will be given.

Tatum Says Spirit High

By PHIL CORNER

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Sept. 23 (AP) — A subdued Jim Tatum tossed into the background his disappointment over North Carolina's opening day loss and began talking Tuesday of this week's football contest at Clemson.

Asked by a reporter at his weekly news conference whether team morale were injured by the 14-21 upset at the hands of North Carolina State, Tatum said:

"They're disappointed, of course, but they feel the things that happened can be corrected. They don't feel they got swamped."

Tatum, speaking in a hushed voice partly because of a pesty throat ailment and party because of his disappointment, told newsmen, "I don't feel our line was outplayed. The fumbles didn't come from bruising tackles, but from poor ball carrying. We still have a very high morale on the team."

Tatum blamed the defeat partly on himself, saying a recent throat biopsy left him in bad physical shape during the weekend. He also cited his team's inability to use its quick kicking game as another reason for the setback.

"We've got a great kicking game," he said. "We just didn't get a chance to use it."

Tatum said, "We had shown no signs of failure to move the ball. At halftime I though we were going to win. Then we fumbled at the start of the second half, and while we were wondering what was going on, (State halfback Ken. Trowbridge went into the end zone."

The hefty Tar Heel mentor heaped praise on his squad for its second half comeback. "I thought we did a good job in the second half coming up with 14 points against a good football team," ht explained.

Then Tatum and assistant coach Pat Preston, who scouted Clemson's close call against Virginia, began discussing Coach Frank Howard's highly touted Tiger squad.

Asked whether Virginia's aerial success against Clemson would influence his plans for Saturday, Tatum indicated it would not.

The Cavaliers, led by quarterback Reece Whitely, threw a mighty scare into Clemson with a consistent pro-like passing attack before they bowed 20-15.

Tatum said, "the only way to develop a great football team is to develop a great running attack. When you do throw the football you should be intending to score a touchdown, not a first down. When you work entirely on passing you can't do many other things well."

Preston said Clemson's line is not as good as some lines the Tar Heels have seen in the past, "but the backfield is one of the best Howard's had."

"They have two sets of backs as good as anyone in the conference," Preston added, and warned Tar Heel followers not to become complacent about quarterback Harvey White's lackluster performance of Saturday.

"White's a good football player. (second string signal caller Lowndes) Shingler played better Saturday, but White's a better football player. He's a big powerful runner, he throws the ball and he calls a pretty good game," he continued.

The UNC School of Medicine was established in 1879.

Former Tar Heel Now In Ky.

A champion runner and former Tar Heel, Everett Whatley of Atlanta, with many track records to his credit, is getting ready to settle down to some difficult studies at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky.

The former Henry Grady High School track star and his wife, Martha, say that they feel they definitely are "in the center of the Lord's will for our lives" in Kentucky.

One of the rooms in their Seminary Village apartment has been converted into a study and trophy room. Thick volumes on theology are being graced with some of the books he brought from Carolina, where he graduated last year.

Whatley holds the 1953 and 1954 Georgia State High School Championship titles for the mile run, with a time of 4:32 minutes, and for cross country competition.

At Carolina he took honors during his senior year for a 4:13 mile. He was captain of the track and cross-country teams and was awarded the E. J. Evans senior track trophy for general excellence in sports, scholarship and sportsmanship.

He and his wife this month are celebrating their first wedding anniversary. She is working as secretary in the office of Southern Seminary's special assistant to the president.

Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Woods of Collins, Ky. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Whatley, live at 682 Cumberland Circle, Atlanta.

Enrollment For Fall Totals 7513

Seven Per Cent Increase Noted Over Last Year

Fall enrollment at the University of North Caolina in Chapel Hill totals 7,513 students, indicating a 7 per cent increase over last year and a 30 per cent increase in the past six years, Central Records said yesterday.

Total enrollmtnt on the central campus here is 6,414, including graduates and undergraduates.

Enrollment in the Division of Health Affairs is 1,099 stuedtns.

Most of the students are from Nort Carolina, the in-state total being 5,725. There are students from 44 states and the District of Columbia. Thirty-nine foreign nations are represented in the student body at Chapel Hill, with 104 students from foreign lands beregistered.

STATE TOTALS

After North Carolina the largest number of out-of-state students comes from Virginia, a total of 229 Virginians being enrolled. Next is New York with 195 students at UNC, and after that South Carolina with 124, New Jersey with 122, Pennsylvania with 110, Georgia with 109, and Maryland with 93.

Men students number 5,979. There are 1,534 women students.

The larget enrollment, as usual is in the Genereal College, the freshmen and sophomore years, with 2,569 registered. There are 1,342 freshmen. Next in numbers is the College of Arts and Sciences, chiefly juniors and seniors, with 1,379 enrolled.

The School of Business Administration reports enrollment of 502 students; the School of Education 422; School of Journalism 50 students.

Word Of Warning Issued To Students Having Cars

A word of warning to students with cars here was issued yesterday at a meeting of the Student Traffic committees yesterday.

Students who receive five tickets for traffic violations must appear before the Traffic Court for a penalty which could result in automobile privileges being taken away.

Unlike last year, the accumulation of traffic violations will include traffic tickets from the Chapel Hill police, in addition to tickets from the student traffic groups.

A consideration of plans for imposing fines on students receiving an excessive number of tickets was a major item of business at yesterday's meeting. Plans were also discussed for bringing on-campus fines under the control of student government.

Bob Covington, chairman of the Joint Traffic Committee stressed the fact that fines for parking out of designated areas and failure to display registration stickers are being strictly enforced. Covington said five persons are now making daily checks of cars over the campus area, including those in fraternity areas.

The registration of student cars is far better this year than last, he said, but he urged negligent students to register their automobiles immediately. Failure to comply with this regulation is an Honor Council offense, he said.

Brooks Calls Finances Key UNC Problem

John Brooks, speaking last night before a standing room only attendance at the first Student Party meeting of the year, called finances one of the biggest problems facing student government at Carolina.

In illustrating his point, Brooks mentioned the issue of last spring over a self-liquidating program of dormitory building. In touching upon this subject, he said that the university was very fortunate in getting such dormitories as those recently constructed. The average amount spent on each student in constructing a new dorm here, Brooks declared, is $2,500, while the national average is $3,600. Some other schools, according to him, spend as much as $5,000 or $6,000 giving dormitory residents such services as a launderette or cafeteria.

Other problems facing the campus touched upon by Brooks were lack of an adequate student Union, lack of library study space, and all night study rooms.

Preceding Brook's talk, Student Party Chairman Leon Holt welcomed all visitors and expressed the wish that they all join the Student Party and work for better Student Government.

Following this Holt introduced the party officers and gave a brief sketch of party history. Holt stated that the Student Party had its beginnings 25 years ago in the back room of a fraternity house.

Daily Tar Heel Staffers Will Hold Meeting Today

A meeting of staff and potential staff members of The Daily Tar Heel will be held at 2 p.m. today in the paper offices, Editor Curtis Gans has announced.

Prizes for non-salaried staff members will be awarded this year, Gans said. Each month a $5 award will be given for the best news story, best sports story, best feature, best column and most consistent work.

A full range of jobs is available on the staff and Gans said experience is not essential for staffers.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled for Graham Memorial today include:

Graduate History Club, 4-6 p.m., Rendezvous Room; IDC Social Committee, 5:30-6:30 p.m., Roland Parker I; University Party, 6:30-7:30, Grail Room; Women's Honor Council, 6:45-11:45, Woodhouse Conference Room and Council Room.

We Goofed

The Daily Tar Heel would like to make corrections pertaining to an article yesterday on night watchman Jon P. Carson, who was found guilty of assault.

In the story, C. L. Edmonds was called the companion of the girl assaulted. He was actually the arresting officer.

The headline of the story said the girl was a coed at the University, but the fact is that she is not.

No Legislature Meeting Until Oct. 9—Cummings

Ralph Cummings, speaker of the Student Legislature, Wednesday announced that there will be no meeting of the Student Legislature either tonight or next Thursday night.

The reason for the delay, according to Cummings, is that the by-laws state that the Student Legislature shall not meet during sorority of fraternity rush week. The first meeting of the year will be on Oct. 9.

Wednesday is the all important day when bids will be slipped under girls' doors between 7 and 9 p.m.

Notice Called To Dorm Work By Wadsworth

J. E. Wadsworth, director of the University Housing office, Wednesday called attention to the "superior" work done by directors of University building affairs in the preparation of the three new dorms.

"Every year there are a thousand details to be taken care of in opening a series of dormitories and University buildings," he said. "This year, with the addition of three new dorms, there were more than a thousand. I hope that students, their parents and others concerned will know of the long hours of day and night work necessary to provide comfortable living accommodations."

Wadsworth expressed special thanks to John S. Bennett, director of the Operations Office; J. Arthur Branch, University Business Manager;; and Giles Horney of the Buildings Dept.

These men, according to Wadsworth, in addition to long hours on their own jobs, did extraordinarily personalized work with workmen on the new buildings in getting them to work extra hours so that the new dormitories and parking lots would be morec onvenient for students.

Though Wadsworth was hesitant in admitting it, the housing office itself kept long hours in assisting students and other newcomers to the university area and in finding temporary quarters for those who for one reason or another were unable to obtain rooms immediately because of the crowded housing situation.

No Refund Is Planned For Dorm Room Rent

By STAN FISHER

As of Sept. 1 a new policy went into effect here concerning the room rent refund policy for men's dormitories.

This new ruling means that boys pledging fraternities and moving into fraternity houses will not be able to receive refunds for the dorm rent paid for the whole semester.

Housing Office Director J. E. Wadsworth yesterday explained that under the new system students moving out of University dormitories after classes start for reasons other than illness, a death in the family, or disciplinary reasons, will receive no refund of room rent.

EXCEPTIONS MADE

Under the old policy pro-rata refunds were made to students moving out before the end of nine wekes of school. However, under the new policy refunds (including room deposit) may be obtained by students who let the housing office know before Sept. 1 that they do not plan to return. Students who decided to leave school after Sept. 1, but before classes began, forfeited their deposit.

According to Wadsworth, the policy of not making refunds has been in effect at State College for "quite awhile."

A reliable source indicated that one other possible exception to the present policy might be made in the case of a student promised a two-man room, but because of unanticipated housing problems instead was placed in a three man room. The source said that if such a student found housing outside of university dormitories and wished

Phi Condemns Eisenhower's Quemoy Policy

Ike's "get-tough" policy on Quemoy was condemned by the Phi Society in a close eight to seven vote Tuesday night.

Debate in favor of the bill supporting Eisenhower centered on the danger of another Munich, appeasement treaty. Opponents questioned the military possibility of defending the islands against heavy Communist attack.

Guest Critic Dr. Kenan C. Frazier of the Dept. of Political Science predicted a ceasefire as the next imorptant development in the force," the people of Africa and touchy crisis. He said the "third Asia, will force the powers to come to an agreement.

'RED MONSTER'

The bill was introduced by Rep. Don Jacobs, who spoke of "the little red monster" that could gain admission to te U. N. by destroying Chiang Kai-Shek. He saw Quemoy and Matsu as stepping stones to war on Formosa.

Di Senator Gray Greer asked for realism in our foreign policy and recognition of the de facto government in Peiping, including its rights to the offshore islands.

Rep. Bill Jackson and Rep. Bob Morely both argued that the U. S. should continue its policy of containment of the Communist conspiracy by using force on Quemoy.

CAUTION WANTED

Various other speakers counseled caution in the use of "brinkmanship." It was noted that the U. S. would have major allied support in withdrawing from the islands peacefully.

Rep. Star Black offered a plan for withdrawal with honor, if the Reds would allow evacuation of the Nationalist population of the islands and promise to leave Formosa to Chiang.

An eyewitness report on the situation was given by Di Senator Rick Wolfer, who spent several weeks on Quemoy with the Air

Nationalist China Pilots Shoot Down 10 Migs

TAIPEI, Formosa (AP)—Nationalist China's veteran fighter pilots shot down 10 Communist Chinese MIGs and possibly six others Wednesday in one of the biggest air battles of the jet age, the defense ministry reported.

Adm. Liu Hon-Tu, the Nationalist military spokesman, said 32 Nationalist 'Sabre Jets and more than 100 Russian-made MIG 17s tangled in the blazing 10-minute fight that ranged more than 400 miles along the Formosa Strait.

A Red plan to lure the Nationalists over the mainland backfired, he said. All of the Sabres and their American-trained and equipped pilots returned safely.

The victory ran the Nationalists' string of claimed air kills to 25 MIGs shot down and six probables without loss of a Nationalist plane since the Quemoy hostilities erupted Aug. 23.

The Nationalists at first said 11 Red planes were shot down Wednesday but later they revised the figure to 10.

Liu told a news conference swarms of the Red-starred Communist fighters suddenly swept down at 10:40 a.m. on patroling Nationalist Sabres and tried to cut off their retreat toward Formosa.

Coeds Overflow GM To Pick Up Rush Invites

A stream of hopeful girls overflowed the stairs in Graham Memorial yesterday to pick up invitations for the second round of rush parties which get under way tonight.

Three parties tonight and tomorrow night will be attended from 6:30 to 9:30.

After this round of parties has been completed, three other rounds will be attended Saturday, Monday and Tuesday.

SAY DELEGATES FROM CAROLINA

NSA Results, Ideas To Be Beneficial

By ED ROWLAND

(This is the last of two articles on the National Student Assn. Congress.)

Campus leaders from Carolina who attended the 11th annual NSA Congress in August have been almost unanimous in praising the results and the ideas produced through the meeting, and all have said student government here will benefit greatly by it.

Among those who represented UNC was Ed Levy, the campus NSA coordinator for this year, who called the congress very worthwhile. He said the association, the meeting of minds was enlightening. "I am full of ideas that can be applied here."

"For instance," he said, "There is a student responsibility project with a foundation grant for improving the climate for learning and encouraging students to teach. Another project involves going to high schools and talking to students. One more thing is the organization of a regional speakers bureau in the Carolinas and Virginia, so that if a prominent person comes into this section he can visit more than one school."

LIKE AN AWAKENING

Levy said attending the congress was like an awakening to tremendous possibilities for the year.

Glenna Meginnis attended the subcommission on education and helped to write the bill on federal aid to education the congress passed. The bill proposed scholarship and loan funds for college students. Miss Meginnis said, "Helping with this bill and meeting interesting people was very enjoyable. The congress was effective and UNC will benefit with the end results."

MORE REPRESENTATIVE

Gary Greer, president of the Dialectic Senate and a student legislator, called attention to the homogeneity of the congress. "It was more representative than any former one in that a larger variety of opinion was expressed, ranging from advocates of interracial marriage to staunch segregationists, with an expense as large as the world community and as small as the individual campus," he said.

"This more representative congress was indicative of the dreams of those who initiated the organization coming to reality."

Greer agreed with the other UNC delegates that Carolina problems are not unique here but rather common. He went on to say that "The atmosphere of the congress while not one of agreement on issues was one of agreement on actions. It is significant to note that this year's congress convened itself more with implementation rather than philosophical treatises.

"That is, the congress was concerned with affecting positive action in forms of seminars, regional workshops, individual campus programming and follow-up procedures."

"I was connected with those commissions and workshops which dealt in realms of student government, academic freedeom and human relations, and while feelings of the group or individuals were sometimes at variance with my own, all those present with whom I had connections re-proved to me that faith in our generation may be more strongly laid than in that which preceded us."

ONCE IN LIFETIME

Lillian Shannonhouse, chairman of the Women's Residence Council, called the congress a once-in-a-lifetime experience. "It was both educational and interesting to see college students from all over the country unite in a spirit of cooperation and achievement."

She said getting to know the delegates from UNC better was her greatest gain. She said it will enable her to work with them more closely this year. Miss Shannonhouse attended the subcommission on honor systems, and she said most of her time was spent explaining and defending the one Carolina uses. "Ours seems to be one of the few which work well," she said.

In addition Miss Shannonhouse said she found herself taking a more liberal stand on the issues discussed as a result of the spirit of the convention.

EYE OPENERS

Ralph Cummings, vice president of the student body, summed up the feelings of the UNC delegates by saying: "A lot of the issues brought up opened our eyes to a lot of the problems existing and liberalized our ideas."

"Perhaps the most valuable part of all," Cummings said, "was being able to get away from the campus and looking at it from a distance. I hope we can do our duties better because of it."

Dr. Chamberlin Will Give Talk In Asheville

Dr. Harrie Chamberlin of the UNC School of Medicine will deliver postgraduate medical lectures in Asheville Tuesday and in Morganton Wednesday.

The series of lectures is sponsored by the School of Medicine and the UNC Extension Division. The Asheville course is co-sponsored by the Buncombe County Medical Society and the Morganton course is co-sponsored by the Burke County Medical Society.

Dr. Chamberlin will speak on the same subjects in both cities. One of his lectures will be on "Behavior Problems in Children." His second lecture will be on Epilepsy and Convulsive Disorders." Dr. Chamberlin is assistant professor of pediatrics here.

Dr. Chamberlin is a native of Cambidge, Mass. and did both his undergraduate work and medical studies at Harvard. His M.D. degre was granted in 1945. He has been at the UNC School of Medicine since 1952.

Future South

It is rather shocking that youngsters can point the way to adults.

Yet, it happened rather startlingly when a high school student had the courage to tell a group of rabid parents that they were wrong.

The girl, Angie Evans of Van Buren High School in Arkansas, had the courage to stand up to a group of segreationist parents and tell them that the law was the law, and that the students would attend classes in an integrated school.

It is unfortunate that there are not more people like Angie Evans with the courage to stand up for the rights of all individuals under a democracy. It is a catastrophe that the Governors of the Sourthern States have not the courage to take a constructive stand on the issue of segregation.

They could at minimum adopt a legalistic position — in favor of compliance with the law — the 1954 Supreme Court decision calling segregation in public education unconstitutional, and in violation of the spirit and letter of the Fourteenth Amendment.

There are few Yarborough, Kefauvers, and Gores in the south, but those that are there had better assert themselves soon, before there is an annual toll of violence, black eye for the United States, and further affronts to individual rights in a democracy.

Federal authorities are not asking for an immediate overthrow of the entire system, but they are asking that the South take the initiative in bringing about integration in that manner that will bring the least disruption to the lives of all Southerners.

The type of leadership that has been displayed by the Lindsay Almonds, the Harry Byrds, the Orval Faubus's, and the Marvin Griffins is directly detrimental to the future well being of the South.

These people in offering their policy of "massive resistance" are keeping children out of schools, are playing with the people's emotions instead of appealing to their intellects, and are delaying without need the spread of equal rights to all Americans.

It takes a great deal more courage to appeal to the minds of people, to ask them to think above the petty scope of their emotions, to lead them in the path of law and order in compliance with the law of the land. It is indeed unfortunate that there are so few with this type of courage.

The ideal of equal rights for all is inherent in the ideal of democracy. America is far from that ideal, but the work to be done is the long hard pull toward that ideal rather than away from it.

It is hoped that in the future the people of the South have the wisdow and courage to elect men who will lead and not follow public opinion. The future of the south and of America in the eyes of the world lies in the type of leadership the people of the South select. It is hoped that they make the right choice.

MOVIE REVIEW: FOUR BAGS FULL

The French are probably best known locally for three things: Briggitte Bardot, a certain kiss, and — among the less frivolous — for the philosophy known as existentialism. Singly or in various combinations, these three highly exportable French commodoties have consistently reappeared in French movies which have enjoyed considerable American success: thus, we have seen the aforementioned Miss Bardot as a kissing existentialist of one sort or another at least half a dozen times in the past year.

"Four Bags Full," the French import playing at the Varisty Theatre through tonight, is a departure from the usual formula. The only pretty girl in it appears only briefly, and fully clothed; and there's not an existentialist in sight, in such a setting, needless to say, the French love-making technique is unexplored. All this means is that "Four Bags Full" is a change from the ordinary — and it is quite true that the off-beat nature of the picture adds to its fascination.

But the picture is even more satisfying as art than it is as a change of diet. It is a character study, the type of movie which Hollywood rarely attempts but for which the French have long been known.

In the case of "Four Bags Full," the central characters are Martin (Bourvil) and Grandgil (Jean Gabin). Their predicament, in which their disparate natures are developed and displayed, involves the transport of four bags of black market pork across Nazi-occupied Paris during the Second World War. The situation is simple, and the only real sub-plot is even less complicated.

Martin is a simple Frenchman who eakes out his living by running black market meat around Paris. His accomplice captured, Martin one night picks a stranger, Grandgil, to assist him, not knowing that his new partner is a well-known and well-heeled artist who agrees to be thus employed merely because the idea intrigues him.

After the artist has throughly exposed the meat supplier as a coward and forced him to double his price for the job, the two companions set off across the city. On their way they meet, among others, a prostitute, several policemen, a barkeeper and his wife, and the German army. In each encounter the artist demonstrates the character weakness of each of his adversaries, as he alone, the artist, remains unfrightened and clear-sighted. Everyone else is either afraid, or criminal, or selfish; and all of them are summed up in Martin, who is too afraid to be really daring, and who engages in crime meainly to keep his wife, whom he sincerely loves.

"Four Bags Full" is not a comedy as we usually understand the word. There is not a belly-laugh in the whole hour and a half of it. But it is a comedy in the more valuable sense that it brings a smile, not only at the warm ending, but a smile all the way through in sympathy with the unstated philosophy of the film — something of tolerance and love.

This is a good movie, beautifully acted not only by Jean Gabin and Bourvil (who received the Grand Prize at the Venice Film Festival for his work in this film), but also by every one of the minor players. It is well worth seeing.

Letters & Replies

To The Student Body:

I had a deeply unfortunate incident to happen to me the other day. Upon eating breakfast on Friday morning I placed my Latin and Math book on one of the shelves in the Lenior Dining Hall, put there for that purpose. Upon returning after breakfast my Math II book was missing. I am not an overly-cautious person but when I invest my money in a book I immediately place four marks on a certain page in the book whether or not I plan to keep it.

I do not believe in condemning a man especially since I believe that someone took the book by mistake, neither would I think of checking all the 800 or so Math II books. Not only would it take time but it would be extremely embarrassing for the individual who mistakenly took the book. All I ask, all I can ask is that each of you check your books and if you find you have the wrong Math II book, to replace it on the shelf in Lenoir Hall.

Thank You,
Hubert M. Riddick

Note in Thursday's DTH that Mike Lanham, chairman of the Student Traffic Council, says it's an Honor Code violation for a student to fail to register his j-loppy. What better way to enforce a simple administrative procedure than to impose the harshest possible penalty: the defamation and the ruinous tag of being an Honor Code violator, and explusion from a fine school? It's just as logical to make the same punishment available to the U's cashier to help collect student fees.

Assuming that all of the approximately 9000 students with cars have the $2 (a facile assumption these days after the financial rigors of last week), can we even let the Honor Code be available to put its heinousness on a person because he doesn't have $2? Clearly the Code is being wrongfully employed.

A multo fortiori: such indiscriminate use of the Honor Code system will seriously weaken its noble aspects.

Marty Pannell

President Furtado's Answer

I have received an information copy of a letter to the editor by Marty Pannell which objects to designating a student's failure to register his automobile as an honor code offense.

I would merely like to point out that the only reason that this action is designated an Honor Code offense is because at registration each student is presented a card which asks if that student will keep a car on our campus. If the student says "no" but brings a car to UNC anyhow, he is violating his oath not to lie, cheat, or steal.

I would also like to point out that traffic or parking violations, are tried by the Student Traffic Council and if at any time a student lies in testimony, he is subject to Honor Council action, not because he was a parking violation, but because he lied to those students involved.

At this time I would like to state that a complete study of the Carolina parking situation is being undertaken, and it is possible that changes in procedure will be made which will culminate the cause of Marty Pannell's objection.

EDITOR:

It is great regret that I find myself having to write this letter. The subject of this letter—School Spirit. At the Pep Rally and the game I was appalled at the lack of participation in the cheers. I have seen several hundred high school kids with ten times the cheering spirit that was displayed by the thousands of Carolina rooters at the game. The cheerleaders really did their best but that eleven men and womes can't constitute the entire Carolina cheering section. I think it would benefit everyone and particularly the teams if everyone received a copy of all the cheers and learned them. At the games it would also help if the cheerleaders would spread out more and if more loud speakers were used so that the rooters could hear the cheers as they are being led.

The team didn't look too good today but the fans were much worse. No more could be expected from them with such a spiritless group of fans. If State can cheer their team on to victory over Carolina, we can surely cheer the Tar Heels on to the A. C. C. Championship!!!

EDITOR:

Upon reading this semester's first edition of The Daily Tar Heel, some of my friends and I were disappointed to notice the absence of "Li'l Abner." Because we enjoy reading about the adventures of the Yokum family and the rest of the Dog Patchers, we would greatly appreciate your doing everything in your power to restore them to their usual place beside "Peanuts" and "Pogo." I am sure that there are a great many other people on campus who share these sentiments.

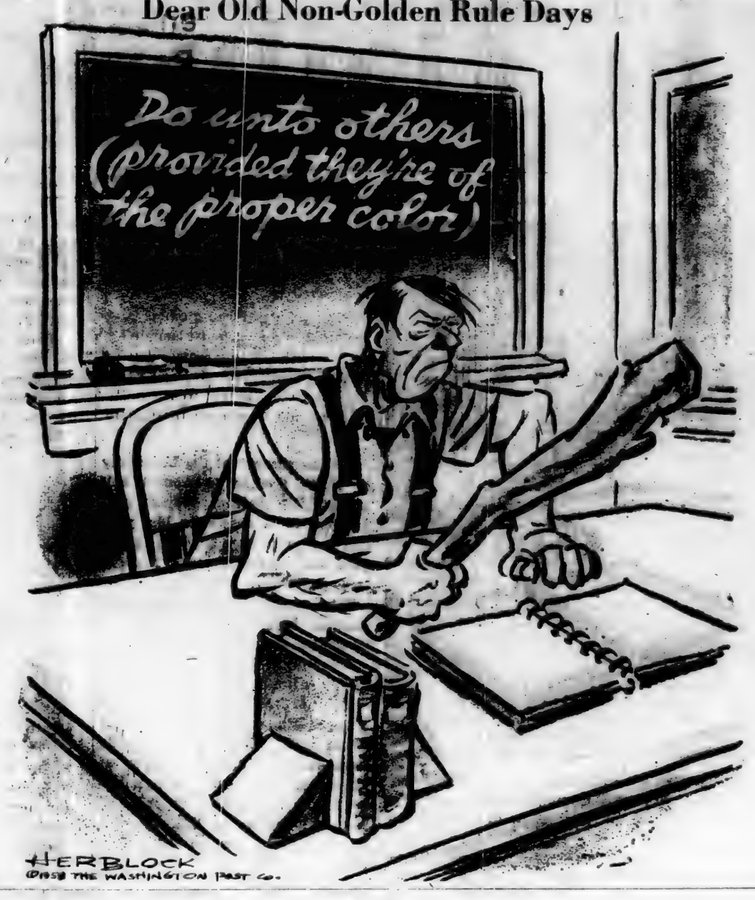
Dear Old Non-Golden Rule Days



Out Of Joint

March Wind

When Martin Luther King, known to his followers as "The King," took a seven inch letter opener up to the hilt in his chest, the immediate reaction of the New York gum shoes was that the race issue was not "involved" in the "incident."

This profound analysis, worthy of Joe Friday operating at top capacity on Thursday, was based on the fact that King's assailant was a Negro woman. Incidentally, there is no truth to the rumor that, as she plunged the weapon home, the woman yelled: "THEY SAID IT COULDN'T BE DONE."

Now, for the benefit of any New York detectives who may read this column, permit me to elucidate a simple fact: Demented Negroes (male and female) are splendid symbols of the race issue.

As A. Philip Randolph, Negro president of the Sleeping Car Porter's Union commented: "Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., beloved and respected leader of millions of Negroes and admired by millions of white persons, behavde with calm and courage in spite of an attack on his life by an apparently demented woman. Something more than this individual and her act should cause us concern. We must be concerned about the kind of social climate which makes such an act possible.

"Although we are not yet certain what motivated this assault, such horrible crimes are inevitable in the climate of violence which has been created incident to the struggle for freedom and integration.

"Let those responsible for this climate of hate reflect on the potential consequence of the increasing violence which is directed toward the Negro people and their courageous leaders."

Demented Negroes are not brought by the stork. They are created by the thousands in the segregated jungle ghettos of the urban North and the plantations and tenant farms of the Solid (?) South. Every demented Negro is walking evidence of White America's great crime.

Another disturbing aspect of the King case is that the woman asailant may have had a connection with an extremist group of Negro chauvinists. As the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser reported: "Negroes in Montgomery and New York said Saturday they thought there was some connection between a woman charged in the stabbing of Dr. Martin Luther King and the 'Black Nationals,' an international organization of proponents of 'Negro supremacy.'

"An associate of King in New York said it was believed members of the organization which had its heyday during the early part of the century were in the crowd which heard King speak Friday night.

"He was booed intermittently during the speech," associates said, "and we believe that the woman charged in the stabbing may be associated with that group which was believed to have a scattering of the Black Nationals membership."

King, Montgomery Negro integration leader, spoke to a Civil Rights Rally in Harlem sponsored by the Youth March for Integrated Schools.

Charged in the assault is Izola Ware Curry, 40-year-old Negro woman from Adrian, Ga.

Associates of King both in New York and Montgomery did not elaborate on their reasons for believing the woman connected with the Negro organization founded in Jamaica in 1914 by Marcus Garvey.

Talk of the group, which began to fade from Negro community life in the late thirties, was the first indication that it may still have some influence among certain Negro elements throughout the country.

Garvey brought the movement to the U. S. in 1916 where it was first known in New York as the Universal Negro Improvement Assn.

He was violently opposed to cooperating in any sense with the white man in seeking to improve the status of the Negro.

And he was as violently opposed to the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

"The NAACP wants us to become white by amalgamation," he once said. "But they are not honest enough to come out with the truth. We of the UNIA do not want to become white," he said.

Garvey was sentenced to jail in the mid-twenties for fraud by mail and in 1927 was ordered deported as an undesirable alien by President Calvin Coolidge.

The name "Black Nations," is one given more recent outcroopings of the earlier organization the Alabama paper reported.

Difficult as it is for many whites to believe, the plain truth is that Martin Luther King is a restrained, conservative leader of his people.

But as King's stabbing makes clear, there are maniacal forces buried deep in the American Negro life. To use the terminology of that preachin' feller down in Charlotte, the presence of these maniacal forces is evidence of our sin, not Negro inferiority.

An age-old and apparently everlasting problem came up again with the mass of students who went to the State game.

Everything seemed to be running pretty smoothly at the student entrance gate. There were the usual lines, but they were moving fairly rapidly.

The catch came when the students tried to enter the sections designated on their tickets. The National Anthem played, the kick-off was made and the minutes of the first quarter began to roll by.

The line was not flowing with any degree of ease until the second quarter had begun.

Just what the basic cause of this problem is difficult to say. One student was standing in the sweltering mob commented, "I guess when the others get out there (to the seating area), they forget what it is like to be back here (under the temporary stands)."

A factor which should help a great deal to ease this situation is to issue tickets without any specific seat designated on them —just "student section."

The time spent looking for a particular seat certainly causes some confusion and adds to the waiting time. Quite often the seats designated on the ticket are already taken.

Then ensues the only too familial argument—"You're sitting in my seat." "Well ,somebody else is sitting in my seat. Why don't you find another seat." — and so it goes.

In the meantime those who are trying to get the others to relinquish their seats are waiting in the aisle. Traffic is blocked. Tempers flare. (Two bodies can't occupy the same space simultaneously).

The only apparent solution seems to be to get to the game an hour early and drive hard, being careful not to squash anyone bigger than yourself.

Of course, after the State game, the pressing throng might not be so great.

Functions Of Lawyers

Charles S. Rhyne

Because of the great technological achievements of our era, the survival of mankind requires that disputes between nations be resolved in some way other than by the age-old method of ultimate resort to war. Everyone agrees that nuclear warfare would be so incredibly destructive as to produce mass extermination.

History teaches that a community, whether local, state or national, can become and remain peaceful only so long as law prevails in that community. People throughout the world understand this function of law in the domestic area. But the regrettable fact is that people do not yet comprehend what law can do for them in the world community. The need for law in the world community is indeed the greatest gap in the growing structure of civilization. This situation contains a tremendous challenge and a great responsibility for lawyers.

We lawyers know that if the existing gap in civilization's growing structure is to be filled with law, the concept of peace under law must be sold to the public so that governments will react to the pressure of public opinion and take essential steps to create the legal mechanism which is needed.

I therefore suggest to you that we of the legal profession must launch a world-wide program of leadership in selling world peace through law. Lawyers are the logical leaders in this program. In the past they have largely assumed leadership in creating and carrying out the legal machinery which has brought peace within nations. They can and must perform the same task between nations.

It is clear that expansion of the use of law in relations between nations can lead only to more peaceful relations. Unlike an expansion of technology, expansion in the use of the rule of law can be only for peaceful purposes.

The rule of law by itself is not enough. We must have a world-wide court system. Law can only function adequately to serve man when it is used in a court system whose decisions are enforceable. If law is ever to serve mankind in the world community, as it can and must, a new world-wide court is therefore essential.

We have thousands of courts within nations, but only one court to serve the entire world community. It is the International Court of Justice. It has 15 Justices. They have decided only ten cases in the twelve years of the Court's existence. It is the most unknown court in the world today, and the most unused instrument for peace that mankind possesses. To enable law to contribute its potential service for the benefit of mankind by achieving and maintaining world peace, this Court must be expanded into many courts. We must have a world court system with a trial court branch in each nation, regional intermediate appellate courts, and the International Court of Justice serving as the Court of last resort for the world community. We need for the world the same type of unified and adequate court system the Bell Committee recommends for North Carolina.

This world-wide court system could throw a blanket of law over the entire world. Its cost would be negligible as compared to the ever accelerating cost of the arms race. And while it would not eliminate lawbreakers any more than law and courts do within nations, it should more than justify its existence by peaceful decision of many of the disputes between nations formerly settled through bloodshed on the battlefield. Such a world judicial system must be created, and its existence must become so generally known as to encourage the people to rise up and cry "go ot court, not to war" in such an overwhelming way that even the most unprincipled dictator will pause before plunging the world into nuclear flame.

Tremendous world-wide interest has developed in world peace through law. The idea is rapidly gaining support and stature. A growing pressure of public opinion can be expected for reference of justiciable disputes to the existing International Court of Justice, while the effort is being made to bring about the creation of the proposed new world-wide judiciary. That Court is there and can function for peace today if it is but used.

In the Formosa Straits we face a situation which could trigger world-wide conflagration, but which should go to court not war for decision. The controversy between England and Iceland is another dispute which the International Court of Justice could decide. The Suez controversy and many more come to mind where the rule of law could perform great public service for the cause of peace.

In the race between development of a system of world courts and the destruction of civilization in a thermonuclear war, it would lend great impetus to recognition of the value of law in the settlement of disputes between nations if the United Nations would seize the initiative and refer the Formosa Straits controversy to the International Court of Justice. Impassioned debate in the United Nations will but reopen old enmities and probably will lead to an inconclusive result. The success of the negotiations at Warsaw may be dependent on our giving up some legal rights now claimed by Nationalist China. A court would appear to be a more acceptable forum to decide all legal right, and the end result of a decision based up the dule of law will probably be a more acceptable solution to all concerned.

In suggesting that the Formosa Straits controversy be referred by the United Nations to the International Court of Justice, I have not done so lightly. I agree with President Eisenhower that the Chinese Communist regime should not be allowed to extend its authority over Quemoy and Matsu Islands by naked force. I agree that such armed conquest must be opposed by force. But force against force is a dead end street which leads nowhere but to death and destruction.

FORMER MEMORIAL HALL BENCHES—The old wooden benches formerly used in Memorial Hall can now be bought from the University for $20. With the exception of the ones in the downtown area such as above the seats—now disassembled—are in a Raleigh storehouse. Out of 160 benches, 35 have been bought by alumni. Some of the old seats date back to 1885.

Want A Good Used Bench? Get Hammer, Nails, Money

By BEN TAYLOR

Friend, are you in the market for a good used bench?

Twenty dollars, a good sturdy hammer, a few strong nails . . . and you become the owner of one genuine bench.

The dark brown wooden benches—commonly referred to as "loafing lumber"—seen scattered along Franklin St. are the sturdier segments of what used to be Memorial Hall benches.

Webb Evans of the University Purchasing Dept. announced recently that those benches other than the ones found in Chapel Hill have been disassembled and stored in Raleigh at the State Dept. of Administration Warehouse. Decision to retain the odd-sized lumber was made by University officials before the advent of the now soft, leathery and backache-free seats.

19TH CENTURY BOARDS

Some of the boards in the benches date back to 1885 when the old assembly hall was in its infancy. When the present building was constructed in the years of 1929-30, many of these old benches were transferred to the new building. Up until this semester, the benches remained intact—splinters and all.

Many of the backs are of "very odd-sized and antique timber which the State will attempt to retain for future use," Evans explained.

He also revealed that the numerous benches seen around town were purchased by various interested alumni and placed along Franklin Street to enhance the beauty of the vilage thoroughfare and to keep the rustic feeling of Southern hospitality which has become synonymous with Chapel Hill.

ONLY $20

The disassembled lumber will be sold for about $20 from the storehouse in Raleigh, Evans said. A total of 35 benches out of the original 160 taken from Memorial Hall have already been sold to alumni.

To the newcomers on campus, the benches may seem to be a part of the atmosphere or just a convenient place to tumble after a bout with a bottle. But to upperclassmen who have had the chance to visit Memorial Hall since classes began and have lounged in the new seats, the departed lumber represents years of backaches, and strains.

Bible Scholar Plans Lecture Here Sunday

William F. Albright of Johns Hopkins University and an authority on Semitic studies in Biblical literature will speak here several times this weekend, and will appear at a public lecture Sunday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall auditorium.

A foremost scholar of the Bible, Dr. Albright is professor of Semitic studies at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore.

LECTURE TITLE

His public lecture here is entitled' 'The Rediscovery of the Ancient Biblical World."

Sponsoring Professor Albright's visit here is the Department of Religion. Prof. Bernard Boyd, chairman of the department, and religion Professor James A. Gray said Albright will be here as an adviser to the department as well as a speaker in classes and to faculty groups.

Since the University plans eventually to add a professor of Semitic literature to the department, and Dr. Albright, as a foremost authority in the field, will be able to offer suggestions, they said.

Professor Albright will lecture to classes taught by Dr. Boyd and classes taught by Prof. Arnold Nash. He is also tentatively scheduled to address a class in ancient history taught by Prof. Wallace Caldwell. He will meet on Monday at 8 p.m. with about 50 members of the University of North Carolina faculty at a special gathering in the faculty room of the Morehead Building, and will address them on the topic, "The Place of Semitic Studies in the Humanities."

A graduate of Johns Hopkins in 1916, Dr. Albright was on the staff of the American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem from 1919 to 1936, serving as director for several years.

SCORE OF DEGREES

Between 1922 and 1951 he directed and cooperated in many excavations and expeditions in different parts of Southwestern Asia. He holds a score of honorary degreees from various countries, including degrees from Yale, St. Andrews, Trinity College (Dublin), Utrecht, Oslo, Uppsala and the Hebrew University (Jerusalem).

Carrboro Boy's Arrest Solves Wave Of Thefts

Arrest of a 16-year-old Carrboro boy by Sheriff's Deputies Earl Bush and Paul Cook Saturday afternoon cleared up a long series of robberies extending over a period of time.

He is Earl Brewer, who admitted entering locker rooms of Woollen Gymnasium several times stealing clothes, watches, billfolds and other personal belongings, as well as numerous thefts from parked cars on Chapel Hill streets, clothes from a Burlington store and an auto in Burlington. A juvenile from Burlington was also involved in some of the thefts.

Suspicion was directed to the boy when Chapel Hill police made a routine driver's license check on the Brewer boy and noted that the billfold and license presented carried the name of a Jamerson boy whose billfold and license had been reported stolen earlier. When Brewer was later identified and questioned by the Sheriff's deputies he admitted the series of thefts.

FASHIONS DO CHANGE!

While browsing through the furniture department of Lord & Taylor the other day, one of our correspondents observed a brisk-looking interior decorator leading a harried-looking lady through the displays. "Just one more question," the lady was saying. "Are they using pianos this season?"

First Telegram To Be Compiled

The University Club's first team telegram of the 1958 football season, will be compiled and transmitted this weekend. University Club President, Dave Jones, and Head Cheerleader, Carter Jones, are handling arrangements.

All dormitory and house presidents have been contacted by the club, and arrangments for collecting the money have been made.

There will be a club representative in the Y from 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. Friday. All money and names must be in to the representative by 4 p.m. Friday to meet a Western Union deadline.

"I would like to urge every student to participate in this telegram," said UC President Jones.

"It costs just a dime, but is an excellent opportunity for the student, as an individual, to show his interest in UNC's football team," he said.

Covering The Campus

YACK PICTURES

Pictures of seniors, senior nurses and law students continue today through Friday.

Juniors, September 29 through October 3; sophomores, October 6 through October 10; freshmen, October 13 through October 17; medical and dental, October 20 through October 24; and nursing, pharmacy and dental hygiene, October 27 through October 331.

Senior girls must wear black sweaters and one-strand pearls. Senior nurses must wear uniforms. All other girls wear black sweaters, the Yack office said.

Men must wear dark ties and dark coats with a white shirt, according to the Yack office.

LIBRARY COMMITTEE

A meeteing of the Library Committee will be held today at 4 p.m. in the office of Dr. Jerrold Orne in the Library. Student Body President Don Furtado will be present at the meeting.

CANTERBURY CLUB

The Steering Committee of the Canterbury Club will meet this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Parish House of the Episcopal Church. All members have been urged to attend.

PARISH DANCE

A parish dance with a 12-piece orchestra will be held Saturday night for Catholic students and their friends.

The dance will be from 8 to 12 p.m. in Weidenger Hall of Saint Thomas More Church. The admission will be $1.50 per couple to be paid at the door.

DENTAL DAMES

The Dental Dames will meet Monday night at 8 o'clock in the Library. A get-acquainted social hour will follow the business meeting.

The semi-monthly meetings of the Dental Dames are open to all wives of dental students.

FREE FLICKS

"The Hasty Heart" is the free flick scheduled for Friday in Carroll Hall Auditorium. There will be two showings at 7:30 and 10 p.m. "The Hasty Heart" stars Ronald Reagan, Patricia Neal and Richard Todd. It deals with war's impact on the lives of a group of invalid soldiers.

"Mr. Roberts" will be shown Saturday in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 10 p.m. "Mr. Roberts," starring Henry Fonda, James Cagney, William Powell and Jack Lemmon, is a comedy about the crew of the "USS Reluctant."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The Carolina chapter of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship will hold its first supper meeting of the year tonight at 6 o'clock in the upstairs dining room at the northern entrance to Lenoir Hall.

Inter-Varsity is an international, interdenominational collegiate organization established to provide a means of fellowship for Christians.

The activities of the Fellowship will consist of a weekly supper meeting and a weekly Bible study. The business of the first supper meeting will be to determine the times of future weelky meetings.

No Refund

to move, he would in all probability get a refund. This, however, is unverified.

BUSINESS OFFICE DECISION

The decision to adopt the new policy reportedly came from the business office of the University. Business officials are said to have made the decision because of anticipated extra revenue to be used in paying for the three new dorms on campus. Increased room rent in all UNC dormitories was supposed to have made these new dormitories "self-liquidating" before the new policy of no refund was announced. At the time of this writing the Business Office could not be reached for comment on this issue.

A statement from personnel in the Dean of Women's office said that women on the campus had been under a policy of "no refund" "for 15 years." Exceptions for the women are the same as men under the new policy, allowing only for illness, family deaths, or disciplinary reasons. It was pointed out that room rent for women is also much higher than that for men because of more personnel involved in maintaining the dormitory.

However, women who leave school for practice work in the field of their major (education, social work, and public health majors) pay only three-fourths of the regular rent for the semester during which they must be away.

In such cases the room remains the girl's for storage of out of season clothing, and for weekend visiting. The university does not use these rooms to accommodate guests or in other fashion, but instead absorbs the loss.

SOCIAL WORK MAJORS

An exception to this is in the case of social work majors who must do field work for parts of two semesters. In this instance, three-fourths rent is paid for one semester and the full rent for the other.

Student Body President Don Furtado, speaking on the adoption of the new policy for men, said, "I think that this change in administrative policy comes at a very inopportune time. At the present time we still have three men in two-man rooms in several dormitories and still have some men staying in the basement of Cobb."

Furtado further stated that it seemed completely illogical to him that the University should discourage students from moving into fraternity houses or other off campus areas when such changes would result in alleviating the present crowded conditions.

"I hope that some arrangement on this matter can be worked out," he said.

The list of recently injured players who will be ready to go Saturday against the Clemson Tigers is still a little vague, but here is a rundown on their present status: Don Kemper, the starting left end last week, will probably play against Clemson even though he has a broken bone in his hand. Coach Jim Tatum explained that the injury is not really bad and that many boys play football with broken hands.

Tackle Don Stallings, recovering from a rib injury which kept him out of the State game, put on the heavy togs yesterday for the first time. His status is still in doubt, but it should soon be known whether he will be ready.

BACK FIELD SHIFTED

Rabe Walton, the scholastic sophomore who returned from the service was shifted from right half to fullback in yesterday's drills in an effort to provide more power at that slot. Walton was originally a quarterback and has been shifted around to find his best position. Moe DeCantis moves over to right halfback. Coach Tatum felt that with Jim Schuler and Wade Smith runnning well at left half, DeCantis should not be left to collect dust on the bench.

Daley Goff, the Morehead scholar from Dunn and scheduled as a starter before the State game, is out indefinitely with a broken ankle. The doctors and the coaches will know how well the bone has knit only when the cast is removed. Soph Sonny Folckomer started in Goff's place against State.

HATHAWAY NON-PLAYING CAPTAIN

Many students may have noticed that Curtis Hathaway went to the center of the field at the game Saturday with Phil Blazer and Ronnie Koes for the toss of the coin. Hathaway was, of course, dressed in street clothes and a cast. Curt was elected co-captain last spring, and although he has another eligibility and could play next year, the doctors have advised him to give up football.

So he chose to act as captain this year rather than risk permanent injury to the arm. Ronnie Koes went with Blazer and Hahtaway because the team felt that there should be two active players who are co-captains. Thus, the team will have an acting co-captain every week. Against Clemson it will be tackle Don Redding.

The offense Carolina ran against State in which every back but the signal caller shifted to one side is called a slot offense, and is used very effectively by the pros. Coach Tatum said that the Tar Heeles will probably use the slot again, and maybe some other type offenses.

When asked whether he thought Clemson would take to the air against Carolina, Tatum replied "I hope we can make them pass. They have a good backfield, four hard runners. In fact, I would say it is the best backfield I hve seen in all my years of coaching." The Clemson attack is led by quarterback Harvey White, with Rudy Hayes, George Usry and Charlie Horne rounding it out.

EVERY GAME BIG——TATUM

How big is the Clemson game? Tatum had this to say: "We know that everyone is saying what a big game this (Clemson) will be. They're right. Every conference game is a big one, and this one is no exception."

The Tar Heels are running drills as usual this week, without the addition of any type of special fumble drills. Such a drill could give a boy such a complex he'd be almost sure to drop the ball when he got it. The fumbles which happened Saturday were just one of those things, and it probably won't happen again.

Tatum stated that although big Don Klochak is blocking and tackling very well, he just hasn't come around when it comes to running with the pigskin. Klochak was a soph sensation in '54 and many had hoped he would bolster the fullback ranks this season.

Only four sophomores saw action against State last week. They are halfback Sonny Folckomer, end John Schroeder, center Rip Hawkins, and guard Fred Mueller. Mueller was the only starter.

Carolina and Clemson first met on the gridiron in 1896, but only six games have been played since then. Carolina has won four, losing only two. Last year the Tar Heels took a decisive 26-0 win over the Tigers.

SHADES OF IRV HOLDASH—Fans who remember Carolina's all-American center Irv Holdash will notice a distinct resemblance when watching center Ron Koes. Koes was cited by Coach Jim Tatum for his outstanding play in the State game.

Clemson Readys For Heels

By STEWART PHINIZY

People around Clemson, South Carolina love their football as much as most southerners love southern fried chicken on Sunday.

It used to be that if Frank Howard's, Clemsn Tigers could beat South Carolina, why Frank could spit his tobacco on almost anyboy's front porch — it didn't make no difference — but things have changed.

Howard's Tigers have gained national recognition. This is the year the Tigers are suppossed ot growl. In preseason polls Clemson has been picked consistently a one of the nation' top football teams. Howard just laughs and says, "I know it does make me feel kinda' good that they would rate my boys so high."

The showdown is this Saturday, only it won't be with the red and black villians from South Carolina, instead it'll be the big blue from North Carolina.

Many writers feel that the Clemson-North Carolina game could easily decide the Atlantic Coast Conference Championship.

It's no secret that Clemson has been pointing to the Carolina game. Last year the Tar Heels literally Clemson squad that was pushed all cut the Tigers tail off. It was a over Kenan Stadium, and a badly beaten Tiger club that came out on the tail end of a 26-0 score.

Howard was asked last week before the Virginia game if his boys were looking ahead to the North Carolina game. He replied, "We ain't looking at nobody but Virginia," but if you listened close enough, you might have suspected by the way he said it, it just wasn't so.

George Usry, a 5-10, 175-pound junior from Waycross, Ga., confessed after the Virginia game that "our bad showing against Virginia can be attributed to the fact that I think everyone was looking ahead to the North Carolina game."

When you start to go into details about Clemson, one name keeps poping up — Harry White.

White last year as a sophomore passed for 11 touchdowns, had the most total offense in a game in ACC (248), and season's offense of 1,038 yards. What's more remarkable is that he had only three interceptions in 95 tosses.

There is no doubt that in White and Jack Cummings, the Atlantic Coast Conference has two of the finest junior quarterbacks in the country.

Clemson is a fast, powerful team with two units of almost equal strength. If there is any weakness between the two units it is probably at guard.

Howard has a world of depth in his backfield and he himself admits that this is probably the finest backfield material he's had at Clemson since 1940.

Carolina Draws Yale To Open Dixie Classic

Preparations for the Dixie Classic Basketball Tournament got underway yesterday in Raleigh when the coaches of the host "Big Four" met to draw their oppoinents for the annual event which gets started December 29.

Head coach Frank McGuire, picking for his defending champion Tar Heels, drew Yale University in the opening round. Carolina will be in the same bracket with Duke and its opponent Michigan State.

The other two games on the first day will pit Wake Forest against Cincinnati and N. C. State against Louisville.

The four opening day games will find both Wake Forest and State playing in the afternoon while Duke and Carolina will be the feature action that night.

The main actractions of the three day tourney will be Michigan State's Johnny Green and Cincinnai's sensational junior Oscar Robinson. Tar Heel basketball fans will best remember Green for the police job he did on Lennie Rosenbluth in the NCAA semi-finals two years ago. Robinson, on the other hand, developed as a sophomore last season and by the end of the campaign had one of the highest scoring averages in the country.

Mural Officials Set For Season

Many students here at Carolina have been going to school in Woollen Gym, taking training in the art of officiating games for the Intramurals program.

These boys are officiating murals contests to help pay their way through school. They make about 1.25 per game or about a dollar an hour. This averages out to some eight dollars a week, which will greatly aid them in their school expenses.

Last year the Intramurals Office used a total of about 50 different officials in all of the sports connected with the intramurals. Twenty-five of these officials were used in tag football.

In tag football alone 15 different officials are needed each afternoon. There are 10 games daily at 4 and 5 o'clock on the Intramurals field.

IDC May Hear Court Proposals At Regular October 8 Meeting

IDC Sets Tuesday For Dorm Elections

General dormitory elections will be held next Tuesday, according to a statement by IDC President Rudy Edwards yesterday.

The IDC set the date for the special election in its first regular meeting Wednesday night. All offices vacated since last spring and those offices not filled at that time will be filled by the election. The polls will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., it was announced.

The IDC also heard a report on the results of the limited visiting privileges allowed coeds in some men's dorms last Saturday. It is possible that this policy will be continued in the future, although no action has been taken.

Charlie Gray announced that each dorm will be allowed an indefinite sum of money for television repairs and parts this year. Any dorm wishing to buy a new set may have $50 toward the purchase price.

Jerry Chichester made a report for the dorm improvement committee stating that his committee will inspect all dorms within the next few weeks for external and internal improvements needed. The object is to improve the general appearance of the men's dorms.

President Rudy Edwards reviewed the goals of the IDC for the current year, and set Oct. 3 as the next meeting date for the body.

District Courts Being Considered

By STAN BLACK

House Councils, or a district court system, may be installed in the men's dormitories sometime in the near future, according to IDC Court Revision Committee Chairman Otto Funderburk.

It is expected that a report will be presented to the IDC at its next regular meeting on Oct. 8.

Chaiman Funderburk emphasized that as yet no definite decision has been reached on the details of the plans. The decision as to which plan might be feasible is up to the Interdormitory Council itself.

A system similar to the one now in force in the women's dorms is one of the ideas now being studied by the committee.

The house councils would have jurisdiction over minor offenses such as noise or disorder in the dorms. All appeals and serious offenses would be referred to the IDC Court, which would retain much of its present character.

The members of the house councils would probably be composed of the dorm president, IDC representative, and possibly other officers of the dormitory.

A second system that has been under consideration is a district plan with the men's dorms divided into districts such as upper quad, lower quad, new dorms, etc.

Each district would have a presiding judge, who would be a student selected from the IDC. The judge would not under any circumstances be a resident of the district over which he might preside.

Again, under this system appeals and serious offenses would be referred to the IDC Court.

Membes of the revisions committee in addition to Chairman Funderburk ,include: IDC Vice President Doug Bayliff, Phil Edwards, Walt Poole and H. E. Holland. They will hold their first meeting of the year Friday at 5:30 p.m.

IDC President Rudy Edwards commented on the poposed revisions, saying "We feel that the present system is really too cumbrous to deal effectively with the situations.

"If a more localized system is set up, much unnecessary detail will be eliminated from the present IDC Court. It will be easier to establish an atmosphere of quiet and study with the administration of IDC rules brought so much closer to the individual dormitory."

Student Body President Don Furtado said he thought the council or district idea may be the best approach to the matter of maintaining an atmosphere for study.

The district or council would "bring the problems of dormitory life closer to each individual involved," he said.

Longer Infirmary List Not Due To Bad Food

"There is no epidemic of food poisoning on campus," Dr. Edward Hedgepeth, University physician, reported yesterday.

He said there was a rumor being circulated that the increased number of cases in the infirmary was the result of food served in a public eating place.

Yesterday 18 students reported to the infirmary with upset stomachs.

The source of the illnes was described by Dr. Hedgepeth as viral gastro-enteritis. "This is nothing serious," the physician said. He added that the infirmary receives complaints of it continually.

Viral gastro-enteritis is an inflammation of the intestine caused by a virus.

The virus does not have to enter the body in food, Dr. Hedgepeth said. The food poisoning diagnosis was dismissed when it was discovered that the patients had eaten at several different places.

Some of the patients were released yesterday afternoon and most of the others wil be released today, Dr. Hedgepeth said.

Kenan Dorm Elects Negro To Council

Bernadine Booker, graduate student in education, was elected to Kenan's dormitory council Wednesday night.

Miss Booker, who is one of the first Negro coeds at the University, holds the distinction of being the first Negro to be elected to a campus office.

As a member of the council, she will work to keep order in her particular section of the dorm, and also work with the house president concerning dormitory problems.

A Greensboro resident, Miss Booker entered the University this fall as a transfer from Fiske University, where she received her degree in music. She plays the piano, organ, violin and clarinet. At Fiske she was also active on her dormitory council.

Asked about her opinions of women's governing bodies on campuses, she said, "I think it is an excellent way for the women students to communicate their wants and even their grievances and make themselves heard through representatives. There are too many to all be heard separately."

Miss Booker is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Hodges of Rt. 10, Greensboro. Mrs. Hodges is an elementary school teacher and her husband is principal of New Hope School in Sanford.

Morehead Grants May Increase, Armstrong Tells Exchange Club

The Morehead Foundation, which is currently benefactor of 117 scholars at the University, hopes to expand its progam in the future, the Chapel Hill Exchange Club was told Tuesday night.

Roy Armstrong, executive secretary of the Foundation, told club members that Joan Motley Morehead, 88-year-old benefactor now living in Rye, N. Y., "hopes eventually to have 300 to 400 students under scholarship at one time."

It is the hope to accomplish this, Mr. Armstrong said, by bringing in additional out-of-state prep school youths.

Under the scholarship plan, North Carolina youths receive $5,000 grants and out-of-state scholars get the same, pus the differential charged to non North Carolinians. The grants are only to those who will attend the University in Chapel Hill.

Of the 117 now in the University, 107 are from North Carolina public schools. 30 are graduates of North Carolina senior colleges, 29 are from out of state prep schools, nine from North Carolina Junior colleges, and four from North Carolina state prep schools.

There are 31 students in the current University freshman class under Morehead scholarships, and one junior college graduate.

Mr Armstrong told the Exchangers that Mr. Morehead originated the scholarship program in 1951 "to increase the distinction of the University. He doesn't care if the recipient is a pauper or a millionaire, as long as he has real ability."

Since its inception in 1951, the foundation has awarded 179 scholarships with a financial outlay of $800,000.

RECEPTION THURSDAY

Thursday night at the University's Morehead building, the senior class of Morehead scholars will be hosts to the incoming freshman class of Morehead Scholars at 6 o'clock. At a reception and dinner, the scholars will be greeted by directors of the Morehead Foundation who will be here for the occasion.

John L. Morehead, Charlotte, said that John Motley Morehead will not be able to attend the annual Fall reception and dinner. Special guests to be present include Grenville Benedict, of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and Spencer McCallie, of the McCallie School, Chattanooga, Tenn. Others include R. B. Fetzer, resident secretary, and Hugh Chatham, Elkins, a trustee.

One Orange county youth is now attending the University under a Morehead scholarship. He is Bryan Wilson Roberts, Hillsboro, a junior.

Legal Points Stymie Request To Aldermen

By ANN FRYE

A legal point apparently is the reason the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen has not acted on a request made this summer by acting Student Body President Curtis Gans.

In a letter this summer to Mayor O. K. Cornwell, Gans urged that a member of the student body be appointed as ex-officio member to the Planning Board. Gans said that the board's recommendations to the city council affects student life in such matters as parking meters; thus the need for a student on the board.

Mayor Cornwell said yesterday that the Planning Board membership, provided for in a town ordinance, includes five members from Chapel Hill City Council and five members from the Orange County Commissioners.

Planetarium Ends Show

The final performance of "Land, Sea and Sky," the Morehead Planetarium's tribute to the International Geophysical Year, will be given at 5:30 Monday night. This IGY show has been running all summer.

The demonstration includes up-to-the-minute findings of scientists on, under and above the earth during the IGY, and points them up with a depth dive thousands of fathoms into the ocean and a zoom trip to the moon.

"Land, Sea and Sky" will be offered nightly at 8:30 and at matinees on Saturday at 11 a.m., 3 and 4 p.m., and on Sunday at 2, 3 and 4 p.m., until the final show Monday.

A new production will open at the Morehead Planetarium Tuesday.

FORMOSA ROUNDUP

Warsaw Talks May Stall; Dulles Says No Retreat

By THE ASSOCIATER PRESS

WARSAW—U.S. and Red Chinese ambassadors held their fourth meeting on the Formosa crisis Thursday and announced only that they agreed to resume talks next Tuesday. Concern grew over gloomy reports of deadlock.

UNITED NATIONS — British and French foreign ministers in General Assembly policy speeches supported U.S. efforts to get a Formosa strait cease-fire as a first step toward resolving the Far East crisis.

NEW YORK—Secretary of State Dulles said the United States will make no retreat in the face of a threat of force. He asserted that the Soviet Union is aiding Red China in a threat of war by arms and moral support, and could make a peaceful solution possible if it wanted to.

QUEMOY—Red China mainland batteries hammered the Quemoy Islands with some of the heaviest barrages of the offshore island war Thursday after a brief lull. Red MIG planes were spotted after the shelling. Speculation was that the Reds were trying to knock out another supply convoy.

TAIPEI—The Nationalist China defense ministry said Nationalist counterfire from Quemoy Wednesday knocked out 16 Communist guns, 6 artillery emplacements, an ammunition depot, a gasoline store and a radar station.

LONDON—Prime Minister MacMillan told British Labor leaders who fear U.S. policies in the Far East that Britain will not play into the Communists' hands by making any public statement critical of U.S. activities. MacMillan said Britain is ready to take any step to help negotiate peace.

Justic Dept. To Oppose Integration Methods

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The Justice Dept. served notice Thursday it will oppose any plan to let private corporations use public schools and teachers as a way to bypass integration.

Its opposition, laid down by Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers, applied specifically to Little Rock. However, it was evident that this was administration policy for anywhere the lease idea might be tried.

Just what might happen to the private corporation plan in Little Rock will have to await developments, since District Judge John E. Miller refused Thursday to pass on its legality. It said it was a matter for a three-judge court.

In any event, the government position as laid down by Rogers in a memorandum to Miller was clear.

The Justice Dept. will fight any such device as a sham and artifice to keep Negroes out of white schools in defiance of court orders.

One major point in Rogers' memo:

"The status of a school as a public institution is not changed by projecting into its operation a private corporation of this nature.

"Unequivocally the courts have held that the superimposition of such a corporation does not excuse a state institution from non-compliance with the 14th Amendment or with orders establishing 14th Amendment rights."

Art Center Announces Evening Sketch Class

The Ackland Art Center has announced an evening sketch class for people who like to draw for pleasure. The class will cover various approaches to drawing from life and from imagination.

The class is under John Allicott of the Art Department of the University. It will meet Wednesday evenings at 7 p.m.; the first meeting is October 1.

Monday Meet Announced For Magazine Staff

The Carolina Quarterly will have its organizational meeting Monday at 4:15 p.m. The editor has invited anyone interested in working either on the business staff or on the fiction or poetry boards to come by the Quarterly office Monday.

Recent appointments to the Quarterly staff include: Robert Hall Demaree a student in the Classics Dept., business manager; Arthur Lessing, graduate student in philosophy, poetry editor; Paul Warren Heeman, graduate student in the English Department, fiction editor, and Jerah Johnson, review editor.

The Editor also encouraged any students interested in submitting manuscripts of poetry, short fiction or scholarly articles, to do so before the middle of October for consideration for the fall issue.

Student Assn. Leaders To Visit UNC Campus

United States National Student Association President Bob Kiley and former President Ray Farabee will be on the University campus Saturday to meet with the steering committee of the Southern Student Human Relations Seminar.

The group of 15 representatives of the five sponsoring agencies will meet in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial at 10 a.m.

The Seminar to be held later this year will bring together 150 students from many colleges and universities in the South to discuss the problems of Human Relations, including the present pressing problem of race relations.

The meeting Saturday is to set the time, location, speakers and program of the conference.

An outgrowth of the Human Relations Conference, held at Delaware, Ohio, this year, which Frank Elkins, of UNC attended, the seminar will be a three-day long gathering in which students will be given a chance to look at the Human Relations problem in all its aspects and from all viewpoints.

Sponsoring the seminar will be the USNSA, the American Friends Service Committee, the YMCA, the YWCA and the Council of Churches.

Volunteer Workers Needed At Hospital

Volunteer workers are ugently needed at N. C. Memorial Hospital for service in the Bandage Room and Central Supply Room.

Persons who can give a few hours time, or more, each month have been urged to contact Mrs. Robert Cochnus at 8-1852 or call Mrs. Viola Jacobs at the hospital.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled in Graham Memorial today include:

The Graham Memorial Board, 2:30 p.m. in the Grail room; and the Caslian Symposium committee, 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference room.

Helmut Moteka Speaks Tonight On Literature

A specialist in German philosophy, history and folklore from the University of Munich will give a public lecture at the University of North Carolina tonight at 8 o'clock in the Wilson Library Assembly Room.

Prof. Helmut Motekat, who is spending several months in the U.S. giving university lectures and attending ronferences, will speak on "Experiment and Tradition Within 20th Century European Literature."

All interested persons have been invited to join UNC faculty and students for the lecture.

Motekat has scheduled another lecture at UNC on Friday night, Oct. 3, when he will discuss "Recent Trends in Contemporary German Literature (1945-1958)."

The UNC Department of Germanic Languages and Literature, headed by Prof. John Kunstmann, is sponsoring Professor Motekat's lectures here.

Cosmopolitans' First Meeting Set For Sunday

The Cosmopolitan Club of UNC will hold the first meeting of the year on Sunday, September 28. As it has been in the past, all students are invited to participate. The membership is composed of American and foreign students, residents of Chapel Hill and faculty members of the University. There are about 45 new foreign students representing countries such as Germany, Bolivia, Italy, Guatemala, Puerto Rico, Pakistan, Japan, Hawaii, and India.

The club offers various social events as well as cultural and informative programs on various countries and subjects of interest to the members. An international dinner and open house are given for the club members and people of the community.

The meeting will be held in the Library Assembly Room at 4 p.m. Immediately following the meeting the Cosmopolitan Club will have a dutch dinner in the south dining room of Lenoir Hall.

Two Chairmen Needed For GMAB Committees

Two Graham Memorial Activities Board committees are currently without chairmen, GMAB President Bob Carter said yesterday.

Carter is seeking applications for chairmanships of the publicity and drama committees. In addition, openings on other GMAB committees are available for interested students.

Applications for positions on the committees may be secured at the GMAB office or at the Information Desk in Graham Memorial.

Three Rush Parties Scheduled Tonight

Three rush parties are scheduled for tonight to complete the second round of rush activities. These parties are scheduled for 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Invitations for the fourth round on Saturday will be available Saturday morning from 9:15 to 1 o'clock.

WUNC Radio Begins Shows This Evening

"This is WUNC, the high fidelity voice of the University of North Carolina . . ."

WUNC Radio, the University's educational FM station, returns to the air tonight at 6 p.m., operating from recently remodeled studios in Swain Hall.

On the air each evening between the hours of 6 and 11:30 p.m., WUNC will be broadcasting a wide range of educational and cultural programs in the fields of classical music and cultural events on the University community.

The station will also broadcast selections from such sources as Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the French Broadcasting System, the National Association of Educational Broadcasters, U.N. Radio nad Radio Netherlands.

The student staff of WUNC has extended a general invitation to students to tune to 91.5 FM for another year of educational broadcasting.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Grace Eugenie Robertson, Betsy Field Harris, Mary Blackman Roberts, Fern Elizabeth Rhyne, Jo Ann Simmons, Mary Rosalind Snell, Lois Lorine Gault, Joan Bertha Gibson, Charles Henry Howell, Jesse Robert Peel, Thomas Mitchell Tull, Richard Earl Quick, James Howard Gibbs, Lawrence Christmas, George Wineoff, Carl Cecil Hendrickson, Robert Campbell Walker, Karl Eugene Bostian, Charles Randal Shelton, Maurice Victor Barnhill, John Rainey Parker, Harvey Helton Henry, Wendell James Harper, Freddie Donald Hickman, Benny Lee Rogers, Robert Windsor Dixon, Josef Henry Perry, Clarence Simpson, Bryan Grimes, James Lee Kerr, Bruce Francis Caldwell, Donald Brown Fogleman, Charles David Purnell, Myron Hugh Eanis and Peter Berken Young.

Room Rent

The University decision not to refund rent this year is one that will bring howls from many quarters. It is definitely not a satisfactory decision.

Not only will it double the cost of those boys who wish to move from dormitories because of the noise that permeates some of the corridors, but it also will bind many that would ordinarily move out to stay. In short, it will limit the freedom of action of many through their pocket book.

Tradition or precedent is not a good enough reason to institute policy, and although the bookkeeping difficulties entailed by refunding the student's money has been great, it has not been insurmountable.

If the problems in the past have been great, then it might be advisable to set up a monthly billing system so that refunds are not made, and students are not bound for longer than a month to live in dormitory accommodations.

It seems rather unfortunate that students who will not live in buildings are paying for their construction under the self-liquidation program. It seems sillier still to charge students not living in dormitories room rent both for their dorm room which they do not occupy and for future construction which they will not see. Unless the students are allowed to sublet their space, which is probably against state laws, the students should be given a break.

Rush

Sorority Rush is going on, and fraternity rush starts soon, but in actuality every organization on the campus is pursuing rush on a grand scale.

One minute at the Student Party meeting Wednesday night would indicate that the organization is rushing members as hard as any fraternity.

There were three greeters at the door, the chairman made a flowery speech full of meaning and generalities, and the secretary to the president of the Student Party told of various programs that the party and student government plans to undertake with the confidence of one who is presenting a program which would be liked by all, as indeed it was rather uncontroversial.

It seems unfortunate that at least part of the atmosphere of a meeting of something that should be a really moving influence on the campus, was treated as more of a tea party. It promises little in the way of controversial and much needed legislation.

It is hoped that at their business meeting, the Student Party will settle down to work, and that the great job of making the campus the best in the country can be accomplished.

The Student Party not too long ago assumed this role of leadership; not too much later they abdicted it. It is hoped that they regain it and stand for principle uncompromisingly over expediency and electability. This much of Chairman Holt's speech had great meaning. It is hoped that the party lives up to this much. If so, it will be a successful year.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel invites critical comment. Letters to the editor are printed almost as soon as they are received, with the exception of those times when the controversy gets so heavy as to make it necessary to put a proportional representation of letter material.

The Daily Tar Heel also accepts letters that point out deficiencies or strengths of the campus or the world scene.

The only prerequisite for letters is that they be signed.

Letters may be sent to the Graham Memorial information desk or to The Daily Tar Heel, Box 1080, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Columnists

All people interested in writing columns are asked to come by The Daily Tar Heel office between 2-6 daily.

The Daily Tar Heel is trying to better the quality of its editorial page, but cannot do this obviously if writers who can write well do not come up with literary efforts.

Columns will be judged on the basis of their overall quality, at the time that enough columnists write. No specific topic requirement is placed on any columnist and no specific point of view need be reflected.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N.C., under the Act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

A Swiss Eye-View Of The U.S.

John Casparis

Coming from Europe to Chapel Hill and living in this small university town for nearly two years has given me time to make a few good friends, think, read and feel at home in America. How would a ten thousand mile trip by car change my picture of this huge country?

First impressions are made through the eyes of one's own culture. That is, I see America through the eyes of a European and make comparisons with Switzerland. There, four languages spoken along a distance half the size of Maine; here, three thousand miles of American English from North Carolina to San Francisco. Preserving the languages of Europe seems to be frowned upon. Girls serving us free samples at a Swiss cheese factory in Idaho spoke scornfully of their old grandmother who continually gabbled Swiss-German at them, which they refused to understand. At home we were proud to be able to speak English and German, although during the war we never had a chance to visit England and use the language. The argument that one can seldom use a foreign language in America seems a bit too simple.

Such universal language communication cultivates tastes in food, drink, clothes and durable goods of incredible sameness. Budweiser, hamburgers, crew cuts and Chevrolet's in an area that in Europe would include Athens, Rome, Madrid, London, Warsaw and Paris. Certainly one can get chianti, lasagna, champagne, borscht or sauerkraut, but in places built for that purpose not in regular restaurants. This conformity on one hand — beauty queens and Wyatt Earp in every city — and on the other hand a Chinatown or Disneyland or Gambling Palace to add an exotic note, I found very interesting. Everything is no new, so man-made. It does not merge with nature to form an organic picture. Nature is where man is not. For example, Salt Lake City in the midst of a hostile, silent expanse of sand, salt and sage brush, is as incongruous as Rockefeller Center in the Florida Everglades. However, what as accomplishment! The Mormons were driven from Nauvoo, Illinois, for their religious beliefs and had to cross the great plains under terrible hardships, some families pulled all their belongings in a hand cart. When Brigham Young, their leader, saw the valley of the Great Salt Lake and said they would live there, many of the Mormons wept. But a city was built and the massive temple, ugly though it is, stands as proud witness of their struggle.

AMERICA IN WHITE

In two national parks — Grand Teton and Yellowstone — I saw what was being done to conserve some of the remarkable beauties of nature. Wonderful to drive through dark forests, along mountain rivers, see bears and wolves, and deserted lakes like Bear Lake in Idaho. In Switzerland all would be dotted with chalets and tourist centers. The far West has enough space to take care of both. To Mount Rushmore National Monument I reacted as I would to a skyscraper or super highway. Where but in America would one blast away a whole mountain to carve the heads of four presidents? Masters not worshipers of nature: o perhaps a spirit similar to Europeans building great cathedrals in the Middle Ages?

California would make as interesting sociological study. Nature has endowed her with everything —rivers, mountains, forests, deserts, oceans, and fertile valleys with mild climate. Man has built spacious housing, good roads, fine universities, and churches of innumerable sects. Living standads are high and a substantial portion of the popuiation has all it could reasonably desire in a material sense. How do people live under such affluent conditions? What do they live for when the ethic of "work, save, deny the flesh" has lost its meaning?

Summarizing the trip is impossible. What I gave are but a few Random impressions. The immensity of the United States tempts one to think big. Whether it is any better just because it is bigger is another question.

Variations

Gail Godwin

A bevy of shrill voices, the clink of the sterling silver ladle within the crystal punch bowl and RUSH is in swing once again.

Once again at least two-thirds of the campus female population will make last-minute preparations in their wardrobes so that they will not possibly make the fatal mistake of wearing the wrong outfit to the wrong thing. Once again nervous little coeds will practice smiles in front of mirrors and hope and pray that the "sisters" will approve.

And then, the final test. A week or more of parties — formal, informal, skirts, dresses, heels and flats — during which the coed rushee will be subjected to something not unlike the Senate Investigation. A typical conversation during one of these investigation parties:

Sister: And what is youah name?

Rushee: Uh, Mary Kathleen Jones.

Sister: Jones! Well how nice. Of course you are related to John Paul Jones.

Rushee: Well, uh, no. That is, I don't think so.

Sister: Oh. That's too bad. Well, where are you FROM?

Rushee: Bent Twig, North Carolina.

Sister: (gleefully) Oh but naturally! Do you know the Twigs who own the bank, the grocery store, the newspaper, and the fish market?

Rushee: Well, uh, not personally, but I have heard of them.

Sister: Oh, well; how nice. Mary, It's just been wonderful talking to you and I'm so sorry I just can't sit here all night long, but here is another sister who will grill . . . er . . . I mean talk to you since I can't.

Second Sister: And what is YOUR name?

And on it goes. And then one secret night everyone goes in her room and shuts the door and pretty soon the white envelopes come sliding under the door. And then the silence is broken by the 40% who got the bid from their first choice and second choice. They scream and run into each other's arms. And the other 40% who squeezed in any group at all give happy little squeaks of relief. And the 20% left that didn't pass the investigations? Some of the more emotional shed loud tears that mingle discordantly with the gleeful screams. The less demonstrative ones put a pillow over their heads and sob quietly or else just sit and think.

And so another season of Rush is ended and everyone, well almost everyone, goes back to being themselves again.

"—Five Years, Eight Months And Two Days—Five Years, Eight Months And Three Days—"

Neither Black Nor White . . . .

Norman Smith

Last Tuesday night a friend and I were sitting out in front of Y-Court waiting for a meeting in Memorial Hall to finish up. We were there with identical purpose in mind, i.e. to watch the new co-eds pass.

He's a freshman from Little Rock, and after the inevitable question, "Did you go to Central High School?" and the disappointing answer that he hadn't, he related an incident that had taken place earlier in the evening.

Some upperclassmen were sitting on the steps. One of them asked him, "Are you a freshman?" as he walked up to the group.

When this fellow heard the affirmative reply, he said, "Start walking. Get the hell out of here!"

My friend went on to say that this one instance was about the only sign of such rudeness he'd run into since orientation started.

Is it a natural thing for someone to put on such an obnoxious display of superior feelings when in contact with a less experienced person? I think it probably is. The prime example is, of course, freshman hazing in other colleges and universities — our neighbor institution just over the hollow and past the sewage works, for instance.

Or how about the second lieutenant fresh out of ROTC that is given command over a seasoned platoon? "Ninety day wonder," they spit out in disgust. There's the new town marshall or just the plain stranger (compounded by the fact that he's usually a sheepherder or "clodbuster") who innocently invades the motion picture Western cattle town.

Well, then if you agree that it's natural, would you say that this outward show of superiority is beneficial enough to be accepted? The initial reaction from most Carolina people would be a firm "No!", or so our policies toward freshman hazing indicate. In fact, if the upperclassmen in the incident quoted above ever openly admitted his identity, I'm sure he'd be most unpopular hereabouts.

A favorite story of orientation counselors is the one about how freshman hazing ended at Carolina. It seems that a freshman received a fatal heart attack while being the unwilling participant in a blanket toss party.

Then it appears we have forced on ourselves this condition of toleration toward the inexperienced because of a tragic death. In other words, we were shocked into departing from our natural tendencies.

As long as we are anti-hazers, we'll defend our position merely because it's our position. Well, everyone wants to be right.

To get down to the roots of the question, I'll do my best to present advantages and disadvantages of hazing. Advantages: (1) development of more intense loyalty and school spirit, (2) apparently an inner satisfaction on the part of the hazer, (3) greater striving on the part of the hazee to conform to standard codes and to be no longer of the inexperienced.

Disadvantages: (1) possible injury to person of the hazee and probable injury to his feelings, (2) discouraging individuality in behavior, (3) accumulation of loyalties which are prejudicial to tolerant outlook.

And that's about it.

Even in my little outline of advantages and disadvantages I'm afraid I've made it pointedly plain that I am opposed to hazing. I believe in individuality, in tolerant outlook, and in humane treatment of others.

On the other hand, certain amount of conformity is necessary for social and political cohesion, we must be somewhat intolerant to protect our institutions, and for disciplinary reasons one can't always be humane.

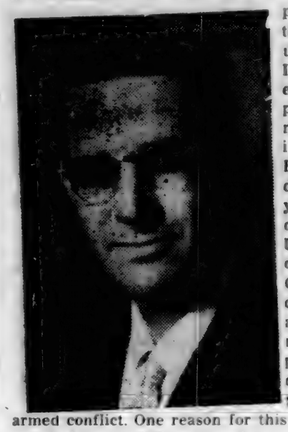
Now, damn it, I conclude not knowing whether I'm right, or whether I'm rationalizing to fit current Carolina behavior patterns, or even whether our institutions are worth defending or our unity worth preserving.

Functions Of Lawyers

Charles S. Rhyne

The negotiations now going on in Warsaw may offer a means for peaceful resolution of the different claims and counterclaims that are involved. The great difficulty is in negotiating with those who recognize no principles of morality or law. The problem is how to inject such principles into the Formosa Straits controversy, because the basic principles of world law are an indispensable foundation for peace.

It is regrettable that the United Nations has in the past given too little emphasis to the use of law as a substitute for force in the settlement of disputes between nations. Do not misunderstand me. I think the United Nations has performed magnificently within its limitations. But the world has developed far beyond the world of 1945 when the U.N. Charter was drafted. That Charter has not deterred the ever-accelerating arms race, nor has it prevented armed conflict and the threats of more armed conflict. One reason for this is absence of resort to law and failure to refer to the international court for decision the many disputes which constantly arise between nations. The great need now is to bring law to the forefront in the deliberations and decisions of the United Nations. One of the very best ways to do this is for the United Nations to make constant use of the International Court of Justice, a body which it now largely ignores.



The Preamble of the Charter of the United Nations states that the United Nations is created "to establish conditions under which justice and respect for . . . international law can be maintained" and that "for these ends . . . to insure . . . that armed force shall not be used, save in the common interest." Article 1 of the Charter states that one of the basic purposes of the United Nations is to prevent and remove "threats to the peace," and "to bring about in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace." Article 96 of the Charter of the United Nations provides that "the General Assembly of the Security Council may request the International Court of Justice to give an advisory opinion on any legal question."

The Formosa Straits controversy fairly bristles with legal questions, the resolution of any one of which might well aid in solving the many claims and counterclaims involved. The questions before the International Court would probably be whether this is a dispute within domestic or international jurisdiction, whether Communist China and Formosa are separate sovereignties, whether Communist China can legally extend its boundaries to the 12-mile limit it now claims, and many others.

While Communist China is not a member of the United Nations, under Article 35 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, controversies involving non-members may be considered by that Court. Since non-member Communist China will be allowed to present its case to the United Nations, there is no reason why it should not be allowed to appear before the International Court of Justice. And whether Communist China appeared as a party or not, the legal questions involved could be the subject of an advisory opinion under Article 96 of the Charter of the United Nations. The United Nations has an obligation under its Charter (i.e., Article 2, Sec. 6) to "ensure that states which are not members of the United Nations act in accordance with these Principles (i.e., law and justice) so far as may be necessary for the maintenance of international peace and security."

The Statute of the Court in Article 41 provides that: "That Court shall have the power to indicate, if it considers that circumstances so require, any provisional measure which ought to be taken to preserve the respective rights of either party." Under that provision the Court could issue a recommendation of a "cease-fire" to maintain the status quo pending determination of the legal questions submitted to it, just as domestic courts maintain the status quo pendente lite.

While the use of naked force in the current controversy demonstrates beyond question that Communist China is not a "peace-loving" state within the requirements of Article 4 of the Charter of the United Nations, and therefore is not eligible for membership in that body, I see no reason why we should not use every possible route to a peaceful settlement—negotiations, armed might, the International Court of Justice, United Nations discussion or any other means that will save lives in the Formosa Straits.

The reaction of our friends and foes in other nations demonstrates that there are many who disagree with the stand of our Country with respect to the Formosa Sraits controversy. That is another reason why we should go to extraordinary lengths in using every possible means and organ to bring about a peaceful and just settlement. To me, that means use of the rule of law and the International Court of Justice to resolve as much of the controversy in the calm and deliberate atmosphere of the courtroom as is possible. The Court's decision could well open up new avenues of approach to this whole matter through the new positions which the decision or decisions on claims and counterclaims may create. In any development which allows a reassessment of position there are obvious advantages to all parties. That is a universal experience of lawyers.

The concept of world law is the only lasting solution to the problem of international anarchy which leads to war. World law is the only medicine that will ultimately exercise the agony that is becoming ever more excruciating as the weapons of war become more horrible. The fact is so obvious that I have often wondered how any one can challenge it —that nations, like men, will live at peace with one another only under some system of law which they respect and either willingly obey or are forced to obey.

COEDS SACKED BUT NOT BAGGY

Wandering Waistlines To Mark Campus Dress

By JOAN BROCK

According to previews of collegiate fashions and reports from leading designers, waistlines will remain invisible on college campuses this fall.

Belts will be worn at almost any other point—from the bustline to the knees—but coeds will have little opportunity to display trim waistlines in the new fall fashions.

As in the more sophisticated fashions of the season, the high-waisted Empire line is important in the campus line-up. The long-waisted line is dominant also—seen at its most spectacular in the elongated sweater tunics that are taking the college crowd by storm.

The chemise, however, is less prominent than the newer versions of the wandering waistline. When it is shown, it is in a much more wearable version than the baggy garments seen this summer.

Appearing in a modified form, the chemise will be seen conforming to a slender, unaccented tube silhouette, carefully fitted at shoulder and hipline.

Colorful tweeds and a new wool-and-cotton knit jersey are used to advantage by designers this fall. This combination is used in jumper and slacks outfits, with jersey shirts in coordinated colors.

Tweeds are shown in bold plaids and stripes as well as muted solid colors—light in weight but sturdy enough to stand the strain of campus life.

Other favorite ensembles to be seen on the campus this fall include the blouson, the sweater dress, the pull-over sweater with standaway neckline and stretch-nylons leotards to wear with Bermuda shorts and short skirts.

Mademoiselle '59 Art Contest Now Underway

Mademoiselle, a leading women's fashion magazine, recently announced that its 1959 Art Contest is now under way.

Any woman under 26 years old, in college or art school, is eligible to compete.

The magazine requires no special work for this contest, but does ask for at least five samples of the participant's work.

Mademoiselle further stated that the magazine is not looking for fashion illustration or advertising layouts, but for imaginative, original work in whatever medium or style the student works best.

The two winners of the contest will interpret the two winning stories in the magazine's 1959 College Fiction Contest and will receive $500 each for publication of their work.

All entries for the contest must be submitted by March 15, 1959, to Art Contest, Mademoiselle, 575 Madisen Avenue, New York 22, New York.

Carolina Coeds Eligible For Maid Of Cotton Title

The deadline for applications in one of the nation's famous beauty contests . . . Maid of Cotton . . . is Dec. 1, and Carolina Coeds are eligible.

The Maid of Cotton for 1959 will represent the American cotton industry on a global tour in 1959, including visits to cities in the Far East, Canada, the Caribbean and Europe, as well as in this country.

On June 5 next year she will board a British Overseas Airways Corporation turbo-jet in New York for the beginning of her round-the-world Journey.

To be eligible to be Maid of Cotton, a girl must have been born in a cotton-producing state, must be between the ages of 19 and 25, at least five feet, five inches tall and never have been married.

Entry blanks for the 1959 contest may be obtained from the National Cotton Council, Box 9905, Memphis 12, Tenn.

Twenty finalists wil be selected early in December from applications and photographs to participate in the finals of the contest in Memphis Dec. 29 and 30.

The Maid of Cotton contest and tour are sponsored annually by the National Cotton Council, the Memphis Cotton Carnival Association and the Cotton Exchange of Memphis, New York and New Orleans.

Endocrine Soc. Names Dr. Ham To Meet Faculty

Dr. George C. Ham, professor and chairman of the Department of Psychiatry, UNC School of Medicine, will be a faculty member at the 10th annual Postgraduate Assembly of the Endocrine Society to be held at the State University of New York Upstate Medical Center in Syracuse Sept. 29-Oct. 3.

The theme of the assembly will be 'Endocrinology and Metabolism.

The faculty for the course will consist of 29 noted clinicians and investigators in the fields of endocrinology and metabolism. Designed to cover the main aspects of diagnosis and therapy in endocrinology and metabolism for the physician in general practice and for those in other specialties, the course will cover various endocrinopathies, with emphasis on the clinical aspects, demonstration of laboratory tests, presentation of cases and panel discussions.

Student Aid Office Helps Locate Work

Many students here work part-time while going to school.

If you want or need a job the first thing you must do is visit the Student Air office in the Hanes Hall basement.

There you will be interviewed oand you will tell them what kind of job you are interested in, the work you are capable of doing.

Also available are scholarships, loans, and grants-in-aid. These can be applied for at the same office.

If you get a job working for meals it will likely be at Lenoir Hall or the Carolina Inn, that is if you work for the University. Some students get jobs in downtown eating places.

Other places to work here include Graham Memorial, the Scuttlebutt, the Monogram Club, the Pine Room, the library, and others.

A "C" average is usually required to keep a job but exceptions sometimes can be made.

Freshmen have been advised not to work unless it's necessary. But the Student Aid office realizes that sometimes you can't get by without working.

This office is open from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on weekdays and until noon on Saturdays. Students interested in discussing job or scholarship possibilities have been invited to come by.

Approval of the Student Aid office is not needed if you want to work for downtown restaurants, theaters, filling stations, or other privately-owned places.

In this case the student is completely on his own.

Science Grant Program Joined By University

The University of North Carolina is among eight Southern colleges and universities to participate in a fellowship program, sponsored by the Tennessee Eastman Company, during the 1959-60 academic year.

Fellowships here and at the seven other colleges are for advanced study in chemistry and engineering. A Ph. D. degree candidate in chemistry wil receive a fellowship here.

The fellowship awards are a part of an overal aid-to-education program of the Eastman Kodak Company, of which Tennessee Eastman is a division.

OLD BOOK NEWS

It's hair-cut time again, and the old book corner has had it's periodical trim. Dozens of of books that were on the 72c shelf are now on the 48c shelf Other dozens have fallen from the 97c shelf down to 72c, and a flock of books formerly in the $1.50 - to - $2.00 price range are now yours for 97c. Most of the special sections have been hit by the pruning shears to make room for the exciting stuff we expect this Fall.

The Recent Acquisitions Shelf is filled, at the moment, with group of books we bought from a mountain library. Happily, it is mostly an assortment of books a scholar might whoop over, but the average ladies' club member only yawn at.

The Old Joint looks pretty tempting to our prejudiced eye. Come in and see what you think.

Today at 12:15 the Carolina football team will board a bus for Raleigh-Durham airport where they will take a National Airlines plane to Greenville, S. C. The Tar Heels will practice this afternoon at the Furman College field. They will stay in the Poinsett Hotel in Greenville, as accomodations in Clemson were impossible to obtain.

Tomorrow morning at 10:30 they will take a bus to Clemson College. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 they have a date to keep, one with an aggregation called the Tigers who play football on the side. They will leave by plane at 6:30, immediately after the game and will return to Raleigh-Durham at 7:30.

CLEMSON BIT THE DUST

Last year it was Clemson who made the trip. They made the return trip under much different circumstances than when they arrived. On the way up their spirit was high from having just polished off little Presbyterian 66-0 the week before. Add to this the fact that the Tar Heels went into that game having lost to State on the preceding Saturday.

When the dust cleared last season after these two teams had met in Kenan Stadium, Carolina was on the long end of a surprising 26-0 score. Clemson returned to South Carolina, somewhat dejected but probably more amazed.

Tomorrow a similar set of circumstances will be in evidence. Clemson of course, did not have the easy time with Virginia they thought they would. But Carolina lost to State again, another upset. Both teams supposedly have been pointing to this game since football practice started on September 1.

In the rough and tough ACC, all games are important. This is true now more than ever before. Evidence the number of upsets in the conference last Saturday. The fact remains, however, that the Carolina-Clemson game could still very well decide who wins the marbles in November.

TIGER BACKFIELD FAST AND SAVVY

Clemson brings into their new stadium a group of fast, experienced backs led by the capable Harvey White at quarterback. Their only weakness is in the line. Against Virginia they moved on the ground, and how they moved. They ground out yardage, choosing to stay on the ground rather than go to the air. But go to the air they can if they decide passing is a better form of attack. Mr. White teamed up with two fine ends and the backs last year, and whenever he cocked his arm the enemy shuddered.

Carolina has the horses, if they can ever get galloping. Their inability to control the ball cost them the State game. The Tar Heels have two talented signal callers in Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe, and both can throw with the best. The Heels also have a powerful, deep line and fast, hard-running backs.

GAME MAY BE SELL-OUT

All in all, fans can look for a wide-open, interesting game tomorrow, and there may be quite a few fans in attendance. Clemson's new Memorial Stadium will hold 38,000 and that may be just the story of how many people will see the game. Back in Chapel Hill, students will be glued to their radios for the play-by-play.

Coach Jim Tatum has never lost to a Frank Howard coached team. Last year was the first time Carolina and Clemson had met since 1915, but Tatum beat Howard five times while at Maryland. Coach Tatum seems well from his recent throat ailment and says that he will be in top shape for this Saturday's game.

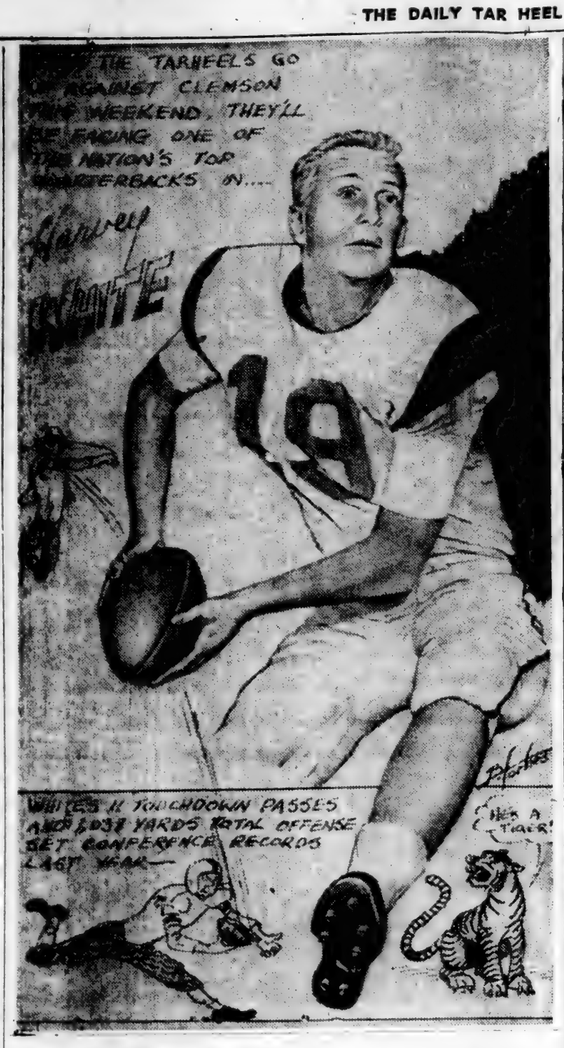
In case you are interested in this hint of things to come, in last week's game the Tar Heel passing average was 7.1 per toss to only 2.1 per carry on the ground. Up in the air . . .?

The last team of the two to go a bowl was Clemson in 1957 when they lost 27-21 to the Colorado Buffs in the Orange Bowl. Experts are saying that the winner of this game stands the best chance of smelling Oranges of any team in the conference.

PREDICTIONS

After last week's series of rather startling upsets, we almost decided not to predict this week. We only hit 2 of 4, even though one was a predicted upset by South Carolina. Anyway, here they are:

Carolina 29, Clemson 22
Wake Forest 25, VPI 8
Duke 30, Virginia 16
State 14, Maryland 13
Army 38, South Carolina 20



Frosh CC Improved

Not since 1956, when the current crop of senior cross country runners (Bishop, Scurlock, Kahn, Coffin, and Henderson) were freshmen, has a Tar Baby squad had as much potential as does this year's team.

Blessed with talent and depth, the squad is in such an early stage of training that only previous times can be used to determine who may be the leaders of the pack.

Peltz Currently Tops

Currently, the number one runner shapes up to be David Peltz from Newport News, Va., who owns a tremendous high school half mile time of 1:56.4. Three other out of state boys, Fred Lavery fom Flint, Michigan, Scott Bent from West Newton, Mass., and John Martin of Upper Montclair, N. J., are balanced right on the two minute line for the half.

Rett Everett (4.38 mile) from Greenville, Dennis Rash (50.6 quarter) from Lenoir, and Louis Sullivan (4.45 mile) of Anderson, S. C., are three native Tar Heels from which Coach Dale Ranson is expecting great things and sprinter Tammy Lefler, of Chapel Hill is another.

Others In The Running

Runners who will battle the above for starting berths are George Noel, Barry Boreno, Don Jeffries, Frank Kertesz, Edward Flody, Jim Hathcock, Tim Burnette, Maurice McDonald, Larry Henry, Garland Carlton, and Tommy Stack.

The schedule:

October 9—Freshman Cake Race; 18—Wake Forest (h); 22—N. C. State (h).

November 5—Duke (a); 10—State Championships (Raleigh).

Tar Babies Prep For Va.

By ELLIOTT COOPER

One week from today the '58 edition of Bud Carson's Tar Babies will open its five game schedule in Charlottesville, Va. against a much improved Cavalier freshman eleven.

Carson has been working with his charges since early September to prepare them for the coming campaign. Last year his Tar Babies compiled a 3-1-1 record, losing only to the State College Frosh.

After the Virginia game the Tar Babies will play Wake Forest, Maryland, North Carolina State, and Duke. The Maryland game on October 31 will be the only home contest for the frosh this season. The schedule ends on Thanksgiving Day when the Tar Babies meet arch-rival Duke in the annual holiday contest.

In comparing his current squad with the one he coached last year, Carson stated, "Although they are not as big, this year's team has much better overall speed." Numerically speaking, the present Tar Baby squad is not as large as last year's.

Carson stated that he has about settled on his starting lineup and only injuries will alter it greatly. The probable starting ends will be John Runco from Arnold, Pa., and Bill Lopp from Lexington. Lopp, at 6-3 and 195, is considered as one of the finest prospects on the team.

Ben Gallagher and Don Amos, who replaces the injured John Hegarty, are the present first-string tackles. At the moment Bill Taylor, Dick Fullam, and Benton McMillan have an inside spot on the guard positions. Gary Truver from Freeport, Pa. will be the number one center.

The backfield will be led by Ray Parris and Ward Marslender at quarterbacks. Gil Carson, another Freeport, Pa. product, and Gene Shuford from Lincolnton are the halfbacks while Joe Davies rounds out the team at fullback.

Speaking on the topic of recruitnig high school prospects, Carson said that Carolina lost only one of the high school stars who had intended to come to Chapel Hill. Notre Dame shot Carolina out of the saddle by grabbing off Joe Clements, a 6-3, 210 pound center from Philadelphia, Pa.

Carson expects State and Virginia to give his team the most trouble. Carolina stomped last year's Cavalier frosh selected by former Virginia coach Ben Martin.

Rod & Gun Field Meet

The sponsors of the annual Rod & Gun Field Meet, to be held Nov. 6, are tying to add pistol competition to the other sports already available. Other sports are bait casting, riffery and trap shooting. You must own your own pistol, and the caliber makes no difference. If interested call Richard McKiernan at 7-1318.

Track Meeting

There will be a meeting of all varsity and freshman track squad members and all those interested in paticipating in either track or cross country this afternoon at 4 p.m. in room 304 of Woollen Gym.

New Men Boost Booters

Several promising newcomers are making Coach Marvin Allen very happy about the prospects for the varsity soccer team.

The showing of one person in particular, John Faucette, on the forward line, has made the high-spirited team members think they've got great potential this year.

Faucette, who three years ago had rarely even kicked a soccer ball, has so impressed the coach with his hustle and great improvement that he is now working at the right inside position on the first string during practice.

"He'll go and he can kick," Coach Allen said. "I'm very pleased with him."

Faucette, a senior geology major from Swannanoa, saw very little action last year, filling in mainly as a halfback at scrimmages. Even then, his steady improvement as a kicker and his stamina was evident.

Playing on the forward line with Faucette at practice has been another promising newcomer, Joe Perkins, a standout on last year's freshman soccer team.

On defense, where he has rebuilding problems, the showing of Tom White and Bill Stem at fullback positions has been impressive, Coach Allen said.

The coach also singled out the work of halfback Tate Robertson, now in his first year of varsity competition, and Tom Cordle, who saw only limited action last year with the team.

While Allen cautiously refrains from making any predictions about how good the team will be, the facts seem to hint that, provided injuries do not hit key players, this year's team may well give Maryland a tough battle for the conference championship.

Helene Nears Land; Evacuations Begin

CHARLESTON, S. C. — (AP) — Apprehensive Carolinians began evacuating low coastal areas Friday as a howling West Indian Hurricane churned up through the Atlantic toward these shores.

The Weather Bureau warned in frequent advisories that destructive winds and dangerously high tides would begin striking land early Friday night.

EIGHTH OF SEASON

Helene, the eighth hurricane of the season, packed 100-mile-an-hour winds as she boiled forward at 10 to 14 miles an hour.

The Weather Bureau at 3 p.m. Friday (EST) located her about 160 miles southeast of Charleston, moving northwestward.

This course, if continued, would bring the storm center ashore in the Charleston area with its 200,000 people or slightly to the north.

PLEADS EVACUATION

The Weather Bureau advised that all possible safety precautions be taken before nightfall in the path of the storm. It pleaded repeatedly for evacuation of threatened costal areas, where extremely high waves were expected to strike.

From Edisto Island, 30 miles of Charleston, to Pawley's Island, 60 miles to the north, beach residents began moving out. The tourist season at these summer play spots wound up about Labor Day, but the passing throngs left thousands of year-round residents. It was these who moved inland as Helene approached.

ALMOST DESERTED

Pawley's Island, struck disastrously by 1954's Hurricane Hazel, was almost deserted in early afternoon. Sheriff Garris Cribb said at Georgetown, 11 miles south of the island, that any who attempted to remain would be forcibly taken off the exposed island.

Charleston's Disaster committee and the Red Cross set up evacuation shelters in the county schools. Police broadcast warnings to this coastal region to move inland. In Charleston, white people will, if necessary, be sheltered in the armory of The Citadel, South Carolina's military college here, and Negroes will be sheltered in city hall.

Air bases at Charleston and Myrtle Beach flew their planes away to safe fields and ships at the naval minecraft base on the Ashley River here were moved up the Cooper River on Charleston's north side to protected anchorages. At the U. S. naval base here, all ships were secured to withstand 100-mile winds.

READY TO MOVE

Just north of the South Carolina border, North Carolina residents of beaches and the Wilmington area stood ready to move out of low places if Helene should veer to a more northerly course.

It was about along the North Carolina-South Carolina border that Hazel made her 1954 landfall and caused damage estimated at more than 100 million dollars.

Highway patrols of both states alerted patrolmen for coastal duty.

Two Bus Drivers Find Cool Spot

While other people on the campus were busy thinking about the UNC-Clemson game, the approach of Helene to the coastal areas, or the Formosa crisis, these two bus drivers from Winston-Salem—here on a trip by high school students to the Planetarium—find time to rest a few minutes. One of them was caught stretched out on the bench; the other stood and watched the campus go by.

Chapel Hill To Receive Storm Effects

Hurricane Helene will have a definite effect on the local weather conditions here, according to a report from Bill Davis of the Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport yesterday

The storm moved inland near Charleston, S. C., at about 12 last night. Squalls and windy conditions were predicted. Light rains over the weekend were also forecast.

The extent of the wind and rain will depend of the course which the hurricane took after passing over Charleston, Davis said. Early Friday afternoon the path of the storm had not been plotted past Charleston.

Seniors Stand In Long Line For Yack Photos

Seniors waited yesterday in a long line to beat the deadline date for their Yack pitcures.

Cameron Cooke, editor in chief of the Yack, said yesterday that the photographers from Smith Studios in Raleigh were rushed the latter part of the week. Cooke urged the rest of the students to come early in the week to prevent waiting in long lines.

The pictures are being taken from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday in the basement of Graham Memorial and the line is usually shorter in the earlier part of the afternoon.

Cooke also invited any typists who were willing to assist in the operation to help in the Yack offices. He explained that part of the reason for the extremely long line yesterday was the shortage of typing assistance.

LATENESS FEE

Pictures of seniors, senior nurses and law students were closed out yesterday in the basement of Graham Memorial. Late pictures will begin for these students Monday and continue through Wednesday. A fee of $1 will be charged for late photographs.

The junior pictures will begin Monday and will continue through Friday; sophomores, Oct. 6 through Oct. 10; freamen, Oct. 13 through Oct. 17 medical students, Oct. 20 through Oct. 24, and nursing, pharmacy, graduate, and dental hygiene, Oct. 27 through Oct. 31.

Girls must wear black sweaters; men must wear white shirts, dark coats and dark ties.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled in Graham Memorial today include:

The Panhellenic Post Office, 8:45 a.m. to 12 noon in the Roland Parker Lounge 1 and 2; the Political Science Dept., 10 to 11 a.m. in the Woodhouse Conference Room; and the free movie, "Mr. Roberts," at 7:30 and 10:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Aycock At Clemson For Groundbreaking

Chancellor William B. Aycock will represent the University groundbreaking ceremonies today for Clemson College's new Samuel Broadus Earle Chemical Engineering Building.

Clemson's acting president, Dr. R. C. Edwards, officially invited Chancellor Aycock to attend the 11 a.m. exercises and other events. South Carolina dignitaries and officials of the Olin Foundation, donors of the building, will be present for the ceremonies.

U.S. Launches Satellite, But Orbit Chances Slim

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — (AP) — The United States fired a "weather-eye" satellite toward space Friday, but the chances of a successful orbit appeared to be slim.

The 72-foot rocket, plagued by five failures in six attempts up to now, blazed aloft majestically at 10:38 a.m., EST., but three hours later there was only a blanket of silence.

The chances that the U. S. would successfully blast its fifth satellite into orbit looked good when it was announced minutes after the spectacular launching that the rocket's three phases had performed flawlessly.

NOTHING TO REPORT

But three and a half hours later in Washington, where the first news of successful orbit was expected, a spokesman said there was nothing to report.

The odds appeared to be stacked against the hardluck Vanguard program once again, for by that time the satellite's signals would have been picked up at a tracking station in San Diego, Calif., if the satellite orbited smoothly.

The Martin Rocket thundered through the cloud filled Florida sky with a 21½-pound goldplated satellite equipped to measure the earth's cloud cover.

COULD SPOT STORMS

The satellite potentially could spot scientists in their battle to control hurricanes and typhoons and help weather.

In the previous six tests the only success came last St. Patrick's Day March 17 when a 3¼-pound ball plopped into an orbit that may last 200 years.

Since that time three Vanguard rockets strayed off course high in the sky when malfunctions developed.

Today's launching appeared to be perfect to reporters working atop a launching tower a mile and a half from the launching site.

The 2,500-pound rocket belched a pool of white flames and streaked straight up, slowly at first. Then it accelerated after about 50 seconds arched over gracefully and roared through the clouds.

On May 27, the first Vanguard to carry a full sized satellite also worked smoothly on the flight up but just as the third stage reached 18,000 miles per hour speed and was about to shoot the satellite into orbit, something went wrong.

FAILED TO LEAN

It was learned later that the rocket failed to lean toward the precise altitude and instead of orbiting it continuer to shoot straight up some 2,200 miles high.

South African School Official Here To Talk

A South African university official and Dutch Reform minister is on campus this weekend to talk with students about education and human relations.

Jacobus Stephanus Gericke, vice chancellor of Stellenbosch University, is being sponsored here by the international-relations committee of the YMCA in connection with the African-American Leader Exchange program.

Gericke, the first person in a planned series of such exchanges, will remain in this country about two and a half months to observe the changing racial situation and the religious consciousness of U. S. students.

During his stay he will meet with Evangelist Billy Graham, and Dr. Waldo Beech, professor of ethics at Duke, as well as with Y groups, chaplains and representatives from various student government organizations.

Miss Anne Queen of YWCA staff said yesterday that the South African leader plans no public addresses on campus, but he will speak at Congregational Church Sunday.

UN Diplomats Seek Formula To Ease Tension

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP) —U.N. diplomats sought Friday to work out a formula for easing tension over the Formosa crisis.

They conferred in an atmosphere of discouragement stemming mostly from inability to gain substantial concessions from either the United States or Communist China.

India was among the nations probing Western and Communist positions in an effort to find some way to break the present deadlock. V. K. Krishna Menon, India's defense minister, has publicly offered his country's good offices to aid in easing tensions.

Secretary of State Dulles saw British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd and French Foreign Minister Maurice Couve De Murville separately during the day.

Nothing official was released on the conferences. But Lloyd Thursday and Friday talked with Menon, who is reported receiving information from Peiping by way of New Delhi.

It was assumed that Lloyd filled in Dulles on his talks with Menon, and also on conversations held earlier with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. Menon has been in contact with Gromyko, and talked today with Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, head of the U. S. delegation.

Gromyko was reported under pressure from Britain, Canada and Norway to try to persuade the Chinese Communists to agree to a cease-fire. But there was no indication he had consented to take this up with Peiping.

The United States is insisting on a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait before participating in any talks about the status of the offshore islands of Quemoy and Matsu.

India was reported hopeful of achieving a situation under which the firing would stop without any formal agreement. Diplomats call this a "de facto" arrangement.

Showing Of Campus Values Is Goal Of Upper Classmen

To try to show freshmen the real values on this campus is the goal of a group of industrious upper classmen who are planning a series of dinner meetings for the newly arrived men and coeds to Carolina.

At these meetings, which start Oct. 9. discussions will be held on the relationship of psychology, jazz, drama, sex and and the United Nations to this campus.

The highlight of the dinner meetings will be a trip to New York to visit the United Nations and to tour other places of interest. This trip will probably be taken Nov. 13.

The idea of this freshman program can be credited to Jim Jordan, who was in charge of freshman camp this year. Jordan yesterday expressed his concen for the letdown freshmen experience after orientation and especially for the general distorted value of intellectual events freshmen inheret from upper classmen.

Jordan said the dinner meetings should stimulate the freshman to examine the activities offered on this campus and to arrive at a real appreciation for lectures and dramatic presentations, for example. He said that only top notch speakers will be at the dinner meetings.

Individuality, of course, is the important purpose of the programs, Jordan said.

Details of this series of programs for freshmen were being worked out by Jordan and several other upper classmen yesterday at the second meeting that group has held so far.

When plans are ready, letters will be mailed out to all freshmen—both men and coeds—describing the program and inviting them to participate.

Racial Mixing Comes To Vote In Ark. Today

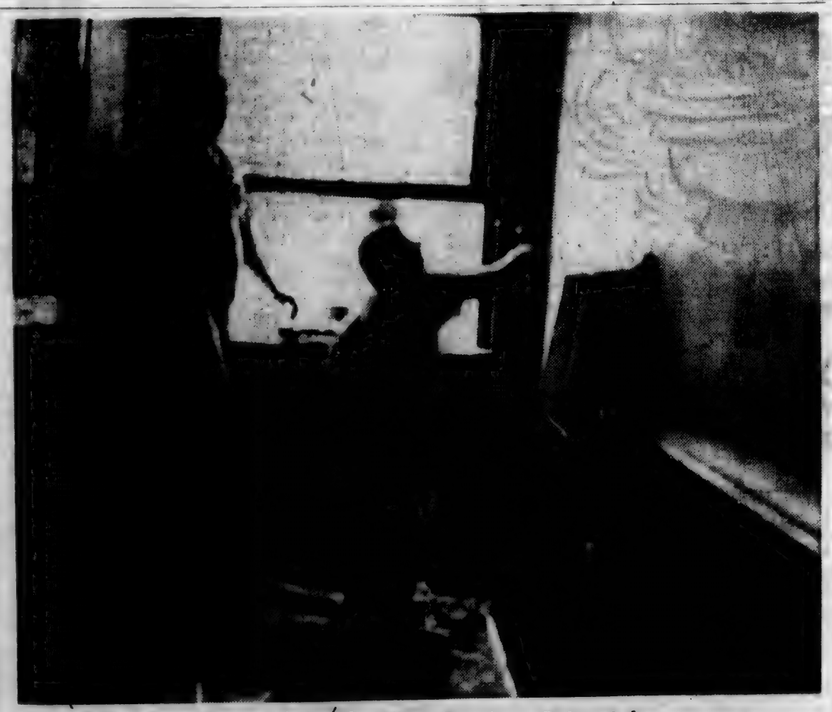
By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Race mixing in the public schools comes to a ballot box showdown in Arkansas today and to a new legal test in Virginia.

In a setting of race feeling and bitterness, Little Rock, Ark., voted on the red hot issue of segregation versus integration.

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said that if the integrationists win—which he did not expect—he would allow desegregation without further interference of all Little Rock schools with their 20,308 students.

A win by the segregation forces will be a mandate, he said, to proceed with plans for opening the high schools as segregated private institutions. He viewed refusal of a U. S. district judge to rule on the private school plan as a strengthening development.



Graham Memorial South Wing Receives Paint Job

The south wing of Graham Memorial received an outside paint job yesterday. The man at right, probably finding it cooler to work inside, is shown in Graham Memorial painting the edges of a window screen. The job is being done by the Buildings Dept. here. Another workman stands by watching.

Counselor Program Costing $13,000

By PETE GILCHRIST

Nearly $13,000 is being spent in a new counseling program primarily for freshman and sophomore students.

Details of the new program were contained in a report released earlier this year by Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs.

Beginning in September the University hired residence counselors for each floor in five dormitories. The job of these counselors is to promote an academic atmosphere rather than to discipline the students.

On each floor of Graham, Stacy, Everett, Aycock and Lewis the resident counselors are working to promote a generally better atmosphere in the dormitories, to become acquainted with the students, to counsel them and to devote themselves to making the dorms a positive factor in the educational program rather than a mere place of lodging.

Residence counselors who are students also, are responsible for approximately 30 students each. The relationship between the student and counselor is one of informality and friendship rather than official academic advice. The counselor assists the student in situations ranging from academic assistance to purely personal problems.

The counselor arrived several days before the influx of students in September so that he could be on hand to assist the students and to meet the students' parents. He also will remain afer the end of the session to discuss personal needs with any student.

Attempts are being made to have personal interviews with each student several times each year so that both student and counselor will understand each other better.

It is especially stressed that the counselor is not a disciplinarian and that all incidents which require disciplinary action will be handled by the IDC rather than the residence counselor.

The counselors have all been trained in their jobs and duties, which take up at least 20 hours a week. As compensation for their time and efforts the counselors are assigned private rooms and given $1,250 for expenses.

Three Orchestras Signed For Concerts This Year

The famous orchestras of George Melachrino, the Roger Wagner Chorale and Roger Williams will all be in Chapel Hill for concerts during the year.

These three outstanding musical programs have been secured by the Student Entertainment Committee, headed by Bob Borden.

The concerts are free to all students upon presentation of ID cards at Memorial Hall, where the programs will be held.

Melachrino's orchestra will present a concert Dec. 9. The Roger Wagner Chorale will be here Jan. 30 for a concert. And the well-known pianist, Roger Williams, will perform sometime in the spring.

In these three programs, Borden said the Student Entertainment Committee (SEC) is appealing to a more semi-classical level than was customary with SEC concerts in previous years. The reason for the change to more popular concerts is that the SEC is cooperating financially with the Chapel Hill Concert Series to bring well-known classical artists here.

Last year the SEC paid an admission fee for each student who attended Chapel Hill Concert Series programs. But this year, the SEC has already turned over a blanket sum of $1,500 to the Concert Series for student admissions.

Oklahoma Cast Is Announced For 1958 Team

Tommy Rezzuto, director of the Carolina Playmakers forthcoming show, Oklahoma, has announced the cast for the production which is scheduled for Memorial Hall, Oct. 24-26 at 8:30 p.m.

In the leading roles of Curly and Laurie are Hunter Tillman and Carolyn Myers. Lillian Prince will be seen as Aunt Eller. The comic duo of Will Parker and Ado Annie will be played by Darwin Solomon and Margaret Starnes. Dan Linney is cast as Jud Fry; John Sneden as Ali Hakin; Donna Hastings as Gertie and Jim Potter as Andrew Carnes.

Dancers for the production, choreogaphed by Foster Fitz-Simons, are Barbara Bounds, Bobbi Bounds, Bobbi Dixon, Gerry Ham, David Jackson, Jack Jackson, Nelson Lambe, Jim Poteat, Marti Preston, Gail Rice, David Richardson, Megan Stuart, Jane Walker, Bill White, Chet Wilkinson and Jim Villas.

The chorus, under the direction of Gene Strassler, includes Ellen Acker, Larry Barnes, Barbara Chadwick, Marty Chesson, Bill Dixon, Tally Eddings, Vicky Ferguson, Pete Flahive, Joel Fleishman, Martha Gery, Carl Hinrichs, Gene Lanier, Russell Link, Evelyn McKnight, Alfred Miller, Bill Monell, Mary Orne, Tabby Schuler, Betty Rhodes, Fred Sitton, Roy Weaver, Marilyn Zschau and Catherine Orne.

Oklahoma is one of five major productions being presented by The Carolina Playmakers this year. Only 200 season tickets remain to be sold. They may be purchased at a saving of one-fourth the single admission prices at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard.

Single admission seats for Oklahoma will go on sale at the above locations Oct. 17.

Five Added To Faculty Of UNC Chemistry Dept.

Five new members have been added to the chemistry faculty, according to Prof. Arthur Roe, department chairman.

Roe announced the addition of four instructors: James P. Collman, Richard C. Jarnigan, David L. Venezky and John T. Yoke III.

Richard G. Hiskey was announced earlier by Chancellor William B. Aycock as the new assistant professor in the Chemistry Dept. Hiskey formerly taught organic chemistry at Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute and completed his Ph.D. at Wayne University.

Collman, a specialist in inorganic chemistry, holds a Ph.D. degree from the University of Illinois. Jarnigan, whose Ph.D. is from Yale, will teach physical chemistry courses.

Yoke, an inorganic specialist with a Ph.D. from University of Michigan, has worked in Procter and Gamble's Research Laboratory in Cincinnati, Ohio, for several years.

Venezky did his undergraduate work at George Washington University, has worked at the Naval Research Laboratory, and is completing his Ph.D. studies here.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Gilbret Kenneth Gray, Betsy Field Harris, Mary Blackman Roberts, Fern Elizabeth Rhyne, Freddie Donald Hickman, Benjamin Lee Rogers, Harvey Helton Henry, Wendell James Harper, Johnainey Parker, Robert McDonald Diggs, Clarence Grimmer Simpson, Brian Grimes, Sylas Wike Leteilier, Bruce Francis Caldwell, George Edward Ricks, Donald Brown Fogleman, Charles David Purnell, Myron Hugh Ennis and Peter Becker Young.

Third Round Invitations Available This Morning

Invitations for the third round of rush parties may be picked up in the Roland Parker Lounge this morning from 9:15 until 11:15.

The third round of parties will be held at the sorority houses this afternoon from 1:30 until 5:15.

To The Abyss

America is dying. Its disease is intellectual atgovernment down through the echelons of society. trition. Its symptoms are manifest throughout its government down through the echelons of society.

Politically it has been on the decline for many years now. It has lost its propaganda advantage in the world. It has been a failure in seeing the realities of the world situation and meeting this with a consistent policy toward other nations.

It has set itself out as the spokesman of democracy and retained within its bounds such undemocratic institutions as segregation and infringement of the right of speech and press.

It pleads with the world for law and order and backs its plea up with bomb tests in Nevada. It supports the United Nations, but when the United Nations is not meeting, America resorts to its own devices in contradiction to what the United Nations would have done.

It asks for rational talk, but forces decisions down the throats of allies and enemies alike.

It is the representative nation which has determined its own desitny, but denies the principle of self-determination to other nations.

It will take up arms to protect its territorial ingenity so that individual freedom may exist, but will not take up the same fight in the case of other nations.

It demands good faith on the part of the other nations of the world, but more than three times durthe past several years has acted in contradiction to its policies.

This is speaking on the purely political level, and answers many questions as to the leanings of of the Middle Eastern and Far Eastern nations' leanings at the present time. It shows lack of foresight, courage, honesty, principle, and character.

These are manifest in the United States itself. It took a McCarthy to wake the people to the dangers of their individual liberties, and many did not know that they had such liberties until McCarthy brought them to their senses in a howl of outrage and pain.

It took a Sputnik to make the people of the United States painfully aware of the deficiencies of its educational system, but it also touched off a reaction that was not healthy.

The people of the United States are controlled. They are controlled by their own ignorance and lack of understanding. They, who have not read Marx, will be the first to rebel at socialism.

Those who have not thought are the first to deny thought to others. They, who do not speak and act, are the first to deny free speech and action to so many.

They, if they though, would not do this, but they do not think. They react. There has not been any price tag put on thinking and for many it takes effort. They see price tags on wealth, on property, on social acceptance, but they see none in thought.

It is a curious paradox that what the people see price tags on are things material. It is funny in the fact that this is the fundamental doctrine of Karl Marx. The thinkers they so quickly label Communist, are the very people that make Communism impossible.

They do not realize this as they do not realize so many things.

They do not realize that the primary thing a democracy can bring them is freedom of choice, and they have let others make the choice for them. They let advertisers select their breakfast cereal. They let demagogues control their point of view. They let the Joneses govern their economic aspirations, and they let the church that they were brought up into determine their values.

They move in a void. They think not. They act not. They inquire not. They accept. They are to this world dead.

They want to hear none of the poverty in India or the sickness in Malaya. They listen not to the harbingers of doom, who predict correctly that the United States will cease to exist if something is not done quickly. They have shut their eyes. Somewhere in their development, the thinking process stopped and they allowed other people to think for them.

This is reflected in their leadership, for at no time in the history of this country has there been less emphasis on brains in any area of public life.

The artist is looked on as homosexual. The writer is pictured as starving. The philosopher is cloistered behind a book in the average mind's eye, and his phlosophizing has no meaning.

In government the picture is more abysmal. The popular hero has replaced the educated man of principle, who perhaps never existed, but should exist if this country is to survive.

It is reflected in the temporary expedients which the government tries to use to solve something and which ends up solving nothing. Heroic efforts are rewarded, but cool-headed, far-seeing programs are not.

America is dying, and unless the people of the United States arrest its dizzy descent into the abyss of forgotten nations with high ideals and hopes, which were tarnished at one point and fell into disuse, death will be soon.

There is hope, but it has dimmed to a flicker, as the clamor education rose with Sputnik and sank with Explorer.

American democracy cannot survive, unless it rests upon a thinking populace and unless it can bring about a thinking populace it will die.

Democracy depends on an intelligent electorate. Without this necessary qualification, democracy will not survive. A totalitarian system can concentrate its brains at the highest level and pour its orders down to the lower echelons via a pyramid of people of descending degrees on intelligence. It thrives on ignorance, for with ignorance people will be willing to accept dictates more easily, for people will not know any better.

A totalitarian system can be brilliant in its maneuvers and in its propaganda, for it depends on the consent of the few not of the whole.

Democracy depends on the whole. If the standards of the whole are low, then its policies and message will be delivered at as low a level as Elvis Presley shows America in comparison to Tchaikov.

The cause of American survival is bound up in the cause of education. It is bound up in the potential intelligence of all people and in the possible realization of man's individuality.

The Meaning Of Education At UNC

"The Meaning of Education at Carolina" is not a topic that I would choose for myself. But since it was given to me as an assignment, I accept it willingly. There is an element of presumption, perhaps even of vanity, in attempting to speak about the meaning of education; because there is the suggestion, in the first place, that the speaker considers himself educated, and, in the second place, tat he thinks he can tell someone how to become educated. Actually there is no such presumption here. We realize that we cannot tell someone how to educate himself.

Nevertheless I do not think you will find University people especially hesitant about sounding their opinions on the subject of education. Manifestly someone among us has, or ought to have, some definite ideas about this. The University has been going for 163 years. The number of living alumni of the University is close to fifty thousand. At the mention of "living alumni" the question occurs, how many of them are dead? I just asked Mr. Saunders that question a minute ago. The answer was ten thousand. Sixty thousand students, then, have come here before you seeking an education. There are more than five hundred full-time faculty members whose work it is to teach—to educate. In addition, there are several hundred. I think you will find also that most of your seven thousand or so fellow students have views on the subject. And they are an especially fruitful source of information and advice. We are all in it together, seeking to help one another to become educated.

Everything you do, everything that happens to you is a part of your education. The latest thing in your education is this retreat, Mr. Lanier's statement a few minutes ago. What was the earliest thing in your education? Did it occur the day you were born? Was it going to the first grade? Was it kindergarten? Was it 1795 when the University first opened its doors, or 1776 when the clause providing for a state university was written into the North Carolina Constitution? Was it in Greece or Rome? We can become metaphysical about this. We already know even if we did not have the "space age" to remind us that we comprehend beginnings and endings very vaguely.

Education is books, lectures and laboratories. It is literary societies and fraternities. It is football games and pep rallies. It is also the church and solitude and meditation.

Following this meeting you are to have group discussions in the cabins. Accordingly, I shall endeavor to lay before you a few quite concrete points which may serve as a basis for your discussions. There will be four.

My number one point will not come as a surprise to you. The text for it could come from many sources. The one I have chosen is Adlai Stevenson Jr., son of the presidential candidate, Adlai Stevesson of Illinois, Governor Stevenson, you may recall, is a graduate of Princeton. His son was turned down by Princeton so he had to go to Harvard. During one of Mr. Stevenson's campaigns a reporter for The New Yorker interviewed Adlai Jr., the Harvard student. The reporter asked the boy whether his father ever gave him and his brothers any advice about education. The boy replied that he did. "Father often advised us about our education," he said, "but it always consisted of only three words. They were: read, read, read!"

Read, read, read! I have recently said facetiously to some of my friends that the next time I addressed a group of entering students I was going to stand up before them and say, "Let's all go to the Library right now. That is where we should be. That is where we can accomplish the most of what we have come here to do." And that would be all. That would be the best advcie I could give.

The other day I read in the newspaper the report of an interview of Elfrida von Nordroff. She was explaining what it was that enabled her to answer all those questions. She said she had from childhood been surrounded with books. Her mother and father saw to it that her appetite for reading did not go unnourished. She said she read not only Shakespeare and the Bible but many things: Hemmingway, Faulkner, Restoration plays, novels, dramas, poetry —everything! I think we can say fo Elfrida that she is not the bookworm type. She is not only phenomenally well-read and intelligent. She is a charming, attractive, and I may be forgiven if I say a winning person!

It is tied to the principles of freedom that were so necessary a part of the ratification of the Constitution, but so little known and used in present day America.

It is reflected and one by one nations are beginning to realize the true state of a democracy that can make "defending friendly nations" a principle and deny that self-determination is a fundamental precept.

America is losing its self respect, for it does not know what its self is, and denies the opportunity to learn it.

America can be free. It can live on, but it must radically change its present foundations.

It must dedicate itself to the education of its populace. It must breed thought in the way it now breeds Fords. It must open the avenues to information, and realize that only through opening these avenues will the populace be shocked into thought. It must make a hero out of the educated man, for then Americans, who seek their values outside of themselves may want to be like this hero, and perhaps they too will find that basic values emanate from the self.

It must build the critical faculties of the people. It must make them discontent with their surroundings rather than content with the highest wages in the country's history.

This is no panacea; this is no quick remedy. Rather it may lead a few of these thinking people to deny the foundation stones of democracy. This is the risk that must be taken in order to perhaps have many more who can say what democracy is and why they want it.

The process is painful, for it is a radical departure from the past. The people stand to gain, but those at the present time controlling the people hrough their emotions stand to lose.

However, they deserve to lose. Democracy was created for rational men. It can be destroyed by rational or irrational desires on the part of the few to control the many. It can be destroyed by men's emotions and the misuse thereof.

Democracy has as great and as appealing a message to the world as communism. It can promise liberation of the mind.

America's message has been sterile, and the will to democracy among the people of the world is dying as America dies.

America's message can be virile. It can open doors and unlock locks.

To do this, a thorough cathartic is prescribed. It will hurt, but it will bring a healthy body.

Through this, and this alone, will America and democracy survive. The future hangs in the balance.

Letters

Dear Mr. Edwards:

I have just read your "Radicleer" article of September 24 and may I say that I, for one, find it extremely distasteful and disgusting. I feel, when I say this, that I speak for the majority of the coeds on this campus. I do not know for what reason you wrote this little journalistic gem — perhaps you hoped to stir up the reactions of the readers of The Daily Tar Heel. If this is the case, you have succeeded. If, on the other hand, you were attempting to be humorous, this misguided pseudo-intellectual effort proves unworthy as amusement. You are no Max Shulman. For whatever reason the aticle was written, it was indeed out-of-place and in poor taste.

I wonder, Mr. Edwards, in what strange and radical area of the world you have spent the past year. Perhaps the young ladies in that locality fit the loose description you have attempted to make of the Carolina coed. If so, I am hopeful that they will remain outside the confines of our University of North Carolina dormitories, sorority houses, arboretum and Kenan Woods. It is obvious that the primary interest of those young women is indeed men and sex. They would be sadly out-of-place in this academic community. I heartily doubt thtir ability to understand such integral parts of a Carolina coed's life as an Honor Code and Campus Code — they are just the "arty, intellectuals" who would likely poke fun at anything concerning honor. They would not understand the work of our YWCA or that of the thirteen church groups in this vicinity. They would have little time for study and academic endeavors. No, I dare say, the main part of their time would be spent "keeping the pad" as you put it.

You, Mr. Edwards, have closed your eyes to the truth. You apparently see only oneside of life and that is twisted. Sex is not a thing to be dragged about in the mire of minds such as yours. Thank you for this article enlightning us as to your opinion of the Carolina coed. I hope you will not find life too lonely here in Chapel Hill without the companionship their presence near you might afford.

I have just finished reading the latest epic by Jonathan Yardley. Is this number two in a series of columns written by Mr. Yardley while dead drunk? If my memory serves me right, last year this golden boy wrote a piece concerning the eating of afterbirth. When is number three in the series to be published? What will it be entitled? I'm sure there are a few psuedo-intelectuals, including Mr. Yardly who can't wait to find out.

Mr. Yardley's articles have continually been of low moral and intellectual fibre. His profound thoughts may impress Mr. Yardley and a few low-brows on the Tar Heel staff, but I'm sure that the majority of the student body is not fooled into thinking that anything our boy might have to say is worth the time it takes to open to page two. Any one of the entering freshmen could have filled Mr. Yardley's space with dirty jokes that would have made much more sense than this last fiasco.

I am by no means a staunch Eisenhower supporter, and I am even less a Republican, but may I suggest that the next time one of your columnists undertakes to write a political criticism that he either be sober or funny.

"—Five Years, Eight Months And Two Days—Five Years, Eight Months And Three Days—"

On Leaders

Why do comedians so often mimic the way Southerners talk? It would appear that there is a deep and important reason for this, and at the heart of it we find the demagogy of Dixie Senators and Representatives. Time and again Congressmen from the South have appeared on national radio and television programs and refused to give intelligent answers when asked why they favor segregation of White and Negro students. This reflects back at every Southerner. Even worst, though, is the appeal this has. Any person who considers an answer like, "White birds and black birds don't stay in the same tree" will realize this has no practical application to the segregation issue. It may appeal to some Southerners, but it also tends to cause Northerners to consider their Southern neighbors as being rather naive.

Perhaps we may excuse those in the South who rejoice at answers that show little intelligence. However, we may never excuse the apathy of educated people living below the Mason-Dixon line who show no concern about statements made by our Congressmen. An informed and active South would never elect people who gave this region a black eye. If Congressmen believed they would incur strong opposition from their demagogic statements they would never make them. If these statements were rare there would be little cause for concern, but as things now stand they are frequent, and have a serious impact. If we Southerners awake we can stop this. If not, Northerners will continue laughing at you and me due to our Representatives noxious remarks.

Heard In Passing

Two people were discussing the national political situation. One commented that the worst thing that could happen to the United States would be if President Eisenower were to die and Vice-Persident Nixon assume office.

The other agreed commenting that the second worst thing that could happen was for Eisenhower to remain in office, on which the two struck agreement.

Station's Story

Around New York there are three radio stations that can be called noted. These are WQXR, WNYC, and WPAT. They are noted in that they have a special type of programming.

They do no program, the westerns the children love to watch, the mysteries the adults sit on the edge of their seats listening to, or the soap operas that women cry with. Indeed, there are no great cash giveaways for factual knowledge of minute details.

They have survived a trend in programming that has put what the people want on an inane level. They have survived for they thought that people are better than how the average station depicts them.

The communications industry as a whole can provide an educational force. It can do this through the very power it has to channel people's tastes. It is abdicating its responsibility in this area to the detriment of all America.

It is hoped that more people have the wisdom of those who built and manage WPAT, WQXR, and WNYC. America might be a healthier nation for it.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publications Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N.C., under the Act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

Coastal Areas Threatened By Hurricane

advising them to carry jugs of fresh water if called on for emergency duty.

The air force's radar station at Ft. Fisher, N. C., at the mouth of the Cape Fear River, picked up the fringes of the storm as early as late morning on its scope.

Wrightsville Beach, 10 miles east of Wilmington, and Carolina Beach, 18 miles to the southeast, were alerted for possible evacuation.

Radio, this century's gift to the storm country, kept up a continual warning after direction finders indicated Helene was heading this way. This means of warning entered shanty and mansion, and motorized police cruised to warn any who might not have hearn.

Much of the coastal countryside from Charleston to Myrtle Beach, a stretch of about 90 miles, is heavily timbered with pine forests, several miles thick. Most of these forests are reforestation projects by pulp companies of the region. The area also is dotted with pre-civil war plantation houses, most of which have been bought and restored by "rich Yankees."

HAZEL RECALLED

Helene's approach brought the first serious hurricane threat to the Carolinas since three storms, known as Connie, Dione and Ione, struck in 1955.

But it was Hazel, the Oct. 15, 1954, Walloper, that the Carolinas remember. Nobody was able to set an exact figure of damage.

De Gaulle Asks For Yes Vote On Constitution

PARIS (AP) — Premier Charles De Gaulle pleaded with his countrymen Friday night for all of his new constitution in Sunday's national referendum. The new constitution is intended to give France a stable government.

Asserting that France stands at a crossroads of destiny, the wartime leader of the Free French asked for a massive "yes" vote for the sake of effective government and national unity.

The premier spoke from his offices on a nationwide radio-TV broadcast that officially closed the referendum campaign. Voting has begun in parts of revolt-torn Algeria, to continue through Sunday, when Frenchmen elsewhere will be voting.

De Gaulle singled out Algeria for special attention and, on the surface at least, seemed to concede that Algeria requires special treatment. The proposed constitution does not mention Algeria as such; legally the vast North African area is a part of France.

De Gaulle said "A new republic . . . is going to be established to lead France to the renovation which she now has within reach."

Then he turned to Algeria in a paragraph which came in for close scrutiny:

"From the fact that Algerian men and women of the various communities will be taking part, for the first time altogether in complete equality, in this great consultation, it will be established that in the midst of their trials they have confidence in France, and, if I may say so, in myself. They will show that they intend to participate in common in the great political, economic, social and cultural work which we have resolved to accomplish to transform Algeria, to free its inhabitants from fear and misery, to assure to each woman, to each man, his liberty and his dignity."

University's Dance Committee Announces Rules For Year

The University Dance Committee as released its rules and regulations for the year.

Although the rules and regulations closely resemble those of previous years, closer attention was called to the procedures which a campus organization must follow to initiate any dance.

The listed regulations concern all aspects of any dance which may lawfully be presented by or for university students. The rules caution against drinking, misconduct, presenting false identification, unapproved chaperones and failure to pay the application fee of $2 which will be charged for each dance.

Organizations may secure a copy of the regulations at the Information desk in Graham Memorial.

Five UNC English Professors Make Contributions To Journals

Five members of the University English Dept. have contributed articles and reviews to recent issues of well-known professional journals.

Prof. C. Hugh Holman, English Dept. chairman, published a re-assesament of the work of the novelist Ellen Glasgow in a volume entitled "Virginia in History and Tradition" printed by Longwood College at Farmville, Va.

His article, "Ellen Glasgow and was first presented as one of the in the Southern Literary Tradition" first presented as one of the Institute of Southern Culture Lectures at Longwood College last summer.

REVIEW OF LETTERS

Professor Holman also wrote a review of a new edition of letters of William Gilmore Simms which appeared in the American Quarterly and a joint Review of writings about Herman Melville by Merton M. Sealts and Milton R. Stern which was printed in the South Atlantic Quarterly.

Prof. Raymond Adams' article, "Hawthorne and a Glimpse of Walden," was used in a special issue of the Essex Institute which was devoted entirely to Hawthorne. Professor Adams presented a new perspective on the personality of Thoreau as preserved in records of his time.

An argument for closer attention on the part of critics to the basic story and narrative structure of Shakespeare's plays was written by Prof. Clifford P. Lyons and was published in the Shakespeare Quarterly. The paper was first delivered at the Modern Laaguage Associatios meeting last September.

ENGLISH STUDY

"The Study of American English" by Prof. Norman Eliason was printed in the August issue of English Studies. The plea for increased study of American English by professional linguists was first presented as a lecture at several German and Austrian universities during the spring of 1956.

In the same issue of English Studies is Prof. Eliason's review of Kurt Wittig's "Phonetics of American English." The summer issue of the Shakespeare Quarterly also carried Dr. Eliason's review of E. J. Dobson's edition entitled "The Phonetic Writings of Robert Robinson," a 17th century student of the English language.

Prof. Peter Phialas presented the Shakespeare Quarterly with two articles: a note on Shakespeare's "Henry IV, Part 2" and a review of Paul N. Siegel's "Shakespearean Tragedy and the Elizabethan Compromise."

Covering The Campus

PARISH DANCE

A 12-piece orchestra will play tonight for dancing from 8 to 12 p.m. in Weidengen Hall of Saint Thomas More Church for Catholic students and their friends.

Admission will be $1.50 per couple and will be paid at the door.

"The Recognition of and Dealing with Early Emotional Problems" will be the topic of an address in Wilmington by Dr. Lucie Jessner of the UNC School of Medicine.

Dr. Jessner will speak before a meeting of the Community Council and the Mental Association on Wednesday. She is professor of psychiatry and director of child psychiatry of the UNC Dept. of Psychiatry.

KREPS IN CHICAGO

Dr. Clifton H. Kreps Jr. of the School of Business Administration is in Chicago, Ill., this week attending a two-day meeting of the Finance Committee of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Kreps is an associate professor, holding the Wachovia Chair of Basking in the B. A. School. Before joining the UNC faculty three years ago, he was in New York City as a Federal Reserve Bank economist and instructor for the American Institute of Banking. He holds an M. A. degree from here and received his Ph. D. from Duke University.

Fourth Concert On WUNC-TV To Be Sunday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns to WUNC-TV, Channel 4, at 7:30 p.m. Sunday.

This will be the fourth in a series of full-length concerts filmed for presentation by educational television stations throughout the country.

On Sunday, Channel 4 viewers will see Charles Munch conduct the orchestra in the following program: "Suite in F, Opus 33" by Albert Roussell, "Viola Concerto" by Walter Piston, and "Symphony No. 7" by Beethoven. Joseph de Pasquale, first violist of the Boston Symphony, will be featured soloist in the Piston work.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra now in its 16th season, is considered one of the world's great orchestras. Mr. Munch has been conductor since 1949, following a tradition of illustrious conductors including Serge Koussevitsky and Pierre Monteux.

Duo-Pianists To Open Series With Recital

Faculty pianists William S. Newman and Wilton Mason will open the UNC Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series this year with a joint recital Sept. 30.

The program will be in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. and will be open to the public at no charge.

There has been no such program featuring a two-piano recital in Chapel Hill for the past 12 years. For this reason, the artists will play three of the main masterworks originally composed for two pianos.

Opening with Brahms' Variation on a Theme by Joseph Haydn, the program will continue with Mozart's three-movement Sonata in D and close with Rachmaninoff's Suite No. 2 .

Professor Newman, nationally known pianist, teacher and author, has appeared in main centers throughout the country as recitalist and soloist with orchestras. He is chairman of piano instruction and gives courses in music appreciation and graduate musicology at the University.

Professor Mason, well known as pianist and composer, teaches music history and directs the University Chorus. He has also produced numerous operas and musical comedies, and has served as accompanist on tour with singers of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

OLD BOOK NEWS

It's hair-cut time again, and the old book corner has had it's periodical trim. Dozens of of books that were on the 72c shelf are now on the 48c shelf. Other dozens have fallen from the 97c shelf down to 72c, and a flock of books formerly in the $1.50 - to - $2.00 price range are now yours for 97c. Most of the special sections have been hit by the pruning shears to make room for the exciting stuff we expect this Fall.

The Recent Acquisitions Shelf is filled, at the moment, with group of books we bought from a mountain library. Happily, it is mostly an assortment of books a scholar might whoop over, but the average ladies' club member only yawn at.

The Old Joint looks pretty tempting to our prejudiced eye. Come in and see what you think.

GREENVILLE, S. C.—Carolina's football Tar Heels invaded this quiet South Carolina countryside Friday, arriving from Raleigh-Durham Airport at about 2:15.

Today is the big one, the one both teams have been pointing to since the beginning of football practice. This afternoon at 2 in Tiger Memorial Coliseum Jim Tatum's visiting Tar Heels will meet the home-standing Clemson Tigers of Frank Howard in the feature game in this section.

The Tar Heels departed from the airport Friday at about 1:20 en route to Greenville, where they are housed here in the Poinsett Hotel. Clemson is some 20 miles away, and this morning at 10:30 the team will board busses and head for the home of the Tigers.

About the same time the Carolina plane was preparing to move out, the plane carrying Maryland's footballers arrived at the airport. Maryland meets State at Raleigh today.

The plane trip down took only 50 minutes. Two busses and a police escort furnished transportation into downtown Greenville. When the team leaves for Clemson tomorrow, they will check out of the hotel since they leave for Chapel Hill as soon as the game is over. The Tar Heels are scheduled to return to Raleigh-Durham tonight at 7:30.

A one hour meeting was held Friday afternoon soon after arrival at the hotel. Coach Tatum and assistants gave the team a chalk-talk, instructing them as to the strategy that will be used in today's game. Special emphasis was placed on the quick kick, which the Tar Heels are expected to use frequently today.

The team then left for Greenville City Stadium where they held a brief 45-minute workout in sweat clothes.

Many fans will remember that at Tatum's press conference last week he noted that one reason for the loss to State was that the Carolina kicking game wasn't going well. Today the Tar Heels are aiming at making Clemson have to run every touchdown they attempt at least 60 yards. They will try to keep the Tigers deep in their own territory much of the afternoon.

Tatum pointed out that Clemson has an excellent punt and kick-off returning team, and the Heels must guard against this. One way in which they will try to bottle up the fast Clemson backs is by kicking from a spread formation, enabling the backs and ends time and space to get to the runner before he can get started.

The coach emphasized at the same time that our own punt and kick-off returning must be at its best today. He pointed out how important it is to get the jump off defensively. A team starting their drive in enemy territory already has a big advantage.

Coach Pat Preston, who scouted Clemson last week, gave some short remarks about the style of play that the Tigers use. He pointed out their excellent backfield, which ground Virginia to bits with its running attack.

More and more evidence mounts that the Tar Heels will take to the air today. Last week the Virginia Cavaliers almost beat the powerful Tigers, mainly on the passing game of Quarterback Reece Whitley. While the Tigers contained Virginia on the ground throughout most of the game, they were at many times unable to stop the Cavalier aerial attack.

Carolina's main trouble last week, the fumble, is hoped to have vanished in the night. The Tar Heels were at a disadvantage all the game against State because they constantly put themselves in the hole. Penalties also took their toll, coming at many times when they hurt the Tar Heels' chance of scoring.

One of the many guests of the football team here for the week-end is the amiable Carolina cage coach, Frank McGuire. McGuire had basketball books with him to study, already getting into the grind which will begin in December.

As both teams in today's big event have admittedly fine backs, the difference in the end should be in the line play. And here the advantage goes to the Tar Heels. Carolina has two lines of almost equal strength, but Clemson has had line problems all season, mostly due to the lack of experience at several key positions.

Rebounding Tar Heels Play Clemson In Big Game Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special to The Daily Tar Heel

Clemson, S. C. — The Ram and the Tiger meet head-on here today in Clemson Memorial Stadium at 2:00 in a game that could decide the Atlantic Coast Conference football championship.

Carolina's Tar Heels are the visitors from the north who have invaded the peaceful South Carolina countryside. The home standing Clemson Tigers furnish the opposition.

Carolina, after losing last week to N. C. State, has been drilling hard all week in preparation for this game. The fumbling problem which beset the Heels last week is hoped to have vanished.

Clemson Favored

Clemson, who beat Virginia 20-15, will go into the game favored by most of the experts. The Tigers scored a last-quarter touchdown last week which shoved them past the Cavaliers when the issue was in doubt.

The probable starting line-ups:

Carolina	Pos.	Clemson
Don Kemper	LE	Wyatt Cox
Phil Blazer	LT	Harold Olsen
Fred Swearingen	LG	J. McCanless
Rosnie Koes	C	Bill Thomas
Fred Mueller	RG	Jim Payne
Don Redding	RT	Jim Padgett
Jack Cummings	QB	Ray Masneri
Mac Turlington	RE	Harvey White
Emil DeCantis	RHB	Charlie Horne
Wade Smith	LHB	George Usry
Don Coker	FB	Rudy Hayes

MAC TURLINGTON
. . . starting today

Clemson come into the game today with a group of backs that Carolina coach Jim Tatum has said are "the best backfield I have seen in all my years of coaching." Junior quarterback Harvey White leads a veteran contingent of proven ground-gainers.

The Tigers can also pass when the occasion arises a fact they proved many times last season.

Tiger Offence

Carolina will run basically from T and the split-T equally well, and the only weakness anyone has spotted so far has been at the guard spots where sophomores lead the pack of candidates.

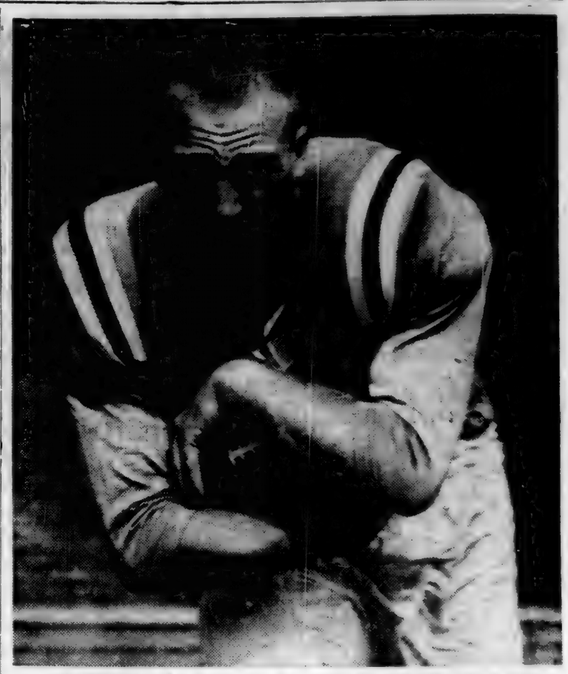
Carolina will lrun basically from the split-T today, but may use the slot offense or even the single wing. The Tar Heels' plan of action has not been ascertained, but they can run, pass, or kick with the best.

With Jack Cummings heading up things at quarterback, some quarters say the Tar Heels will be filling the air with passes. The air attack against State worked well, giving the Heels one touchdown in four plays.

The Tar Heel second unit, which performed well last week, will see plenty of action today. It includes: John Schroeder and Al Goldstein at ends, Ed Furjanic and Don Stallings at tackles, Paul Russell and Ralph Steele at guards, and Jim Davis or Rip Hawkins at center.

In the second unit backfield are: Nelson Lowe at quarterback, Jim Schuler and Sonny Folckomer at halfs, and Bob Shupin at fullback.

With the new freer substitutions rule in effect, both teams are expected to platoon their first and second units throughout the contest.



STARTING at the key fullback position for the Tar Heels today is one of their big returning lettermen Don Coker. Hailing from Reidsville the big junior is expected to play a vital part in Jim Tatum's '58 plans.

PIGSKIN PREVIEWS

A Layman Predicts Today's Top Games

By ELLIOTT COOPER

On page 31 of this weeks issue of Sports Illustrated magazine there is a half page picture of Don Kemper and Jim Schuler leading the Carolina football team onto the field prior to last Saturday's football game against State.

The story that goes with this picture is entitled "Kickoff In Dixie." In his article, author Roy Terrell, using Jim Tatum as an example, explains the problems that a coach goes through as the attempts to build a team into a big time winner.

The subhead to the article, which can be taken as a joke, reads like this, "Jim Tatum, rebuilding at North Carolina, tells how it's done-only he hasn't yet figured out how to win 'em all."

TERRELL VISITS TATUM AT MONOGRAM CLUB

It seems from the context of the story that Terrell dropped in on the Tar Heel coach while he was eating at the Monogram Club. Mr. Terrell says that Sunny Jim wasn't so sunny; this would be a logical conclusion to draw since Tatum had just lost his first game several days before.

'Still, in between luncheon courses at the Monogram Club," Terrell writes, "(and there were several, since Tatum must watch his weight-if it drops below 250, his clothes won't fit) he managed to croak out several thousand words on a subject to which he has given some thought."

Terrell goes on to explain that in Tatum's book it should take about four years for a coach to produce as good a team as he is going to have. The Carolina coach qualifies this statement by saying that if you happen to have a Justice or a Kazmaier you can expect to do even better.

"Now I have got a ball club that is 100% better than last year—," Tatum says, "more depth, more experience, better defense, better passing, better receiving, better everything. Of course, that doesn't mean we'll win a game. Everybody else is improved, too"

The author goes on to explain that being a "Big Time" football coach consumes all a man's daylight hours every day of the year. To emphasize this point Terrell gives a physical description of the Carolina coach, "A man of gargantuan size and appetite to match he has kept the black-eyed-pea growers of the South solvent for years and hasn't hurt the distillers, either). Jim Tatum is also a man of prodigious energy."

On the subject of recruting, Tatum tells Terrell just how it is done in Chapel Hill. To read the article you would think it was simply a matter of clipping Pennsylvnaia newspapers and then signing the desired boys to a square deal as determined by the NCAA.

TATUM PREDICTS CAROLINA'S FOOTBALL FUTURE

Getting down to the cold facts (the won-loss column) that the students are interested in, Tatum says as he has done many times before, "I am going to give them good football teams here at Carolina. That's what they hired me for and that's what they have every right to expect. We'll have some 7-3 yeras and maybe some 8-2 ytars. Maybe we'll have some bowls. But we'll never have a national champion. The school is too tough academically. You can't get every boy in that you might like to have and you can't always count on keeping those you do."

After all this buildup we turn forward in the magaine to page 7 where Red Grange predicts the wdeeks top contests. At Clemson tomorrow Grange sees it like this: "Both teams had a lot of trouble in their openers, but Clemson managed to eke out a close win while North Carolina's speed bogged down against North Carolina State. Off last week's results, I'll certainly take CLEMSON."

American Boat Columbia Wins

NEWPORT, R. I. — (AP) — Columbia, proud aristocrat of the Atlantic, sent Sceptre back to Britain Friday a badly beaten challenger-victim of a four-race sweep in the historic America's Cup Regatta.

The glistening white Yankee sea racer completed the sad, almost distasteful, mopping up operation with another lopsided victory in the fourth and final off Brenton's Reef Lightship in the open ocean.

Clemson Edges UNC 26-21 On Last Quarter Touchdown

By RUSTY HAMMOND
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

CLEMOSN, S. C. — Clemson Tigers scored their fourth and winning touchdown here yesterday with only a little less than 3 minutes showing on the clock to give them a 26-21 victory over the Tar Heels of Carolina.

Left halfback George Usry plunged into the end zone from 3 yards out to cilmax an 82-yard sustained drive which began at the Clemson 18. The Tigers had just gained a first and goal on a 10-yard run by Rudy Hayes from a 4th down and 2 situation on the Carolina 13.

Both teams played aggresive, exciting football the entire 60 minutes before a cheering throng of 40,000 fans, the largest crowd ever to see a football game in Clemson.

Carolina got first blood, in the initial quarter on a 3-way combination that read Lowe to Folckomer to Schroeder. Quarterback Nelson Lowe pitched out to Sonny Folckomer who started left, then threw a strike to end John Schroeder in the end zone. The play covered 15 yards; and the 2-point after touchdown attempt failed when Lowe was stopped short.

Clemson struck back in the second stanza as guard Jim Paine stormed through the line to block a Don Coker quick-kick. Tackle Jim Padgett scooped up the loose ball and galloped 30 yards for the first Clemson TD. Harvey White passed to George Usry for the extra 2-pointer making it Clemson 8, Carolina 6.

The Tar Heels took the ensuing kick-off and drove 79 yards for another marker. The key play of the series came on a 3rd and 7 situation deep in Carolina territory when Al Goldstein made an almost impossible catch of a Jack Cummings aerial on the Clemson 33. 8 plays later Cummings then shot through left tackle for the extra 2, giving Carolina a 14-8 lead with 9:55 remaining in the first half.

Clemson just got under the wire with their second touchdown when Usry cracked over center from 1 yard out with only 1 second left in the half. The drive was highlighted by the arm of Harvey White, whose three completions drove the ball deep into Carolina territory. The extra point attempt failed and the teams went to the dressing room at intermission all knotted up 14-14.

Clemson then began using a new formation, splitting both ends and sometimes flanking a halfback. This time they stuck to the ground, hitting off tackle and up the middle. The Tigers drove for the distance, with Doug Cline climaxing the drive by driving off tackle from the 1 into paydirt. Londes Shingler was stopped short on the 2-point try but Clemson led 20-14.

The Tar Heels began once again at their own 20 and ground out 80 yards for their third touchdown. With 3rd down and 5, Cummings threw a remarkable pass to Wade Smith complete at the Clemson 25, with a Tiger holding onto his ankles. The pass covered 37 yards. Carolina then drove to the 1 yard

Little Rock Votes Down Integration

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., — UP — Little Rock voted overwhelmingly last night not to admit Negroes to its all-white schools.

With all but three precincts reported, plus absentee ballots, the count stood:

Against 17,437.

For 6,750

Gov. Orval E. Faubus said such a verdict would enable him to turn the all white high schools into private institutions and reopen them without Negro students. He said he would take action Monday, or soon thereafter.

By telephone from northern Arkansas, he told the Arkansas Democrat when informed of the tally:

"The issue was made very clear in the minds of the people and they have made the decision."

Large Grant Given Library For Collection

The University Library has received a check for $1,000 from the North Carolina Association of Jewish men. This is the first installment on a fund which is to be used in the development of a collection of Hebraica and Judaica at the University.

The Library Committee hopes to raise enough funds to make the initial purchases and to get the statewide association to make an annual allocation sufficient to keep the collection up-to-date.

In this way, eventually, practically every important book in the field of Jewish history and Semitic language and literature would be available fo study and research by students, scholars, and visitors in the University Library.

UNC Grad Club Hears Minister At First Session

A Methodist minister and director of the Wesley Foundation will be the first speaker this fall for the UNC Graduate Club.

The Rev. Bob Johnson of the Union Seminary of New York will be here Monday at 6 p.m. in Lenoir Hall's upstairs dining room for the club's meeting.

In preparation for the appearance Oct. 3 and 4 of Harvard theologian Paul Tillich, the Rev. Mr. Johnson will speak on: "Who is the Man, Paul Tillich?"

The Graduate Club is an organization open to all professional, as well as graduate students.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Freddie Donald Hickman, John Rainey Parker, Frank Leroy Turse, William Norville Rogers, Charles Franklin Lane, Clarence Grimmer Simpson, Brian Frimes, Agnes Lynn Cochenour, Donald Brown Fogleman and Peter Beeken Young.

Ex-Blue Devil On House Roof Interrupts Rush

A former Duke stuednt, James C. Hudiburg, allegedly attempted to break into the Delta Delta Delta sorority house on Pittsboro St. Friday night during the midst of sorority rush activities.

Hudiburg was on the roof of the house when Chapel Hill police arrived, Officer C. L. Byrd said yesterday.

Police had been summoned after one of the girls spotted Hudiburg. Before the police had come, a number of UNC men students were watching Hudiburg while he stayed on the roof, Byrd said.

Hudiburg was released from jail yesterday after posting $500 bond.

In addition to Byrd, other arresting officers were C. L. Edmonds, John Nesbitt, David Shaffer and Herman Stone.

Originally Hudiburg was booked on a burglary charge, but this charge was reduced, Officer Byrd said.

Ackland Extends Hours On Current Exhibition

The Ackland Art Center's innaugural exhibits have proved so popular gallery hours have been extended, Kenneth Ness, acting chairman of the Art Department, announced yesterday.

Ness said the new hours are for the convenience of art students and the public. The new hours are 7-9 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The afternoon hours remain as before, 2-5 o'clock daily and Sunday. The Knapp Rooms, containing an antique furniture collection, will be open during the same hours.

The Ackland exhibit is entitled "Art from American College and University Collections."

Hurricane Helene Flirts With Coast, Moves On Toward Virginia Shores; No Loss Of Life From Storm Reported

PILE-UP—Mac Turlington (86), Wade Smith (31), and Sonny Quesenberry (25) converge on pile-up at the Carolina side of the field. The Tar Heels lost to Clemson 26-21 in newly renovated Clemson Memorial Stadium yesterday.

Wide Evacuation Saves Many Lives

WILMINGTON, N. C. — UP — House-ripping winds of 135 miles an hour, 25-foot waves and torrential rains of hurricane Helene broke across North Carolina's coast yesterday and wrought tremendous, widespread damage.

Never had winds so strong been recorded along this storm-blown coast.

Helene, feinting at South Carolina coastal cities, only to alter course, boiled northward along the Carolinas all day. She shattered shipping installations, gouged out beaches and shattered buildings and houses as she kept her eye, or storm center, always just off shore.

Highway Patrol spokesmen said no loss of life had been reported. There were a few minor injuries.

In late afternoon and early evening Helene's destructive course lay northeastward, still paralleling the North Carolina coast as it, too, swings northeastward to its eastern extremity—Cape Hatteras, "the graveyard of the Atlantic."

The weather bureau's 5 p.m. advisory located the hurricane center 75 miles southwest of Cape Hatteras. It then was moving toward the northeast at 17 an hour.

Hurriacne warnings were up from Wilmington to Manteo, N. C., and all warnings came down south of Wilmington.

After setting the position and velocity of the storm, the Weather Bureau added:

"This will bring full hurricane conditions over the outer banks and Pamlico Sound area from Morehead City and Cape Lookout northeastward to Manteo between now and midnight.

"Tides of this area will rise seven to ten feet above normal and probably higher in some places. Tides from Manteo to the Virginia capes may rise from three to five feet above normal."

This course, the bureau added, will carry the center a short distance southeast of Cape Hatteras before midnight and well out into the Atlantic on Sunday.

This appeared to eliminate the possibility of the storm causing further damage along the Atlantic seaboard.

Town officials everywhere were quick to applaud the work of the hurricane warnings. These, they said, probably saved countless lives.

Exposed beach fronts, cities, towns and isolated dwellings had been fully prepared, either by evacuation or battening down.

Helene Snubs University Area Today To Be Fair

Chapel Hill will have fair and warm weather today and Monday, the Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport reported, despite the high winds and rains nearby places are receiving from Hurricane Helene.

Hurricane Helene called a cloudy halt to sorority rushing yesterday afternoon when her ominous weather caused Mrs. Martha DeBerry of the student affairs office to notify all sororities to cease rushing after the 2:30 round of parties.

She announced that the parties will resume this afternoon at 3:30, weather permitting.

The Weather Bureau said there would not even be high winds in this area because the storm is moving further away.

The low last night was expected to be in the upper 60s. The high today should be near 80 degrees.

YM-YWCA Picks Dr. Waldo Beach To Head Fall Meet At Quaker Lake

By BEN TAYLOR

"Conscience on Campus" will be the theme ofthe joint YMCA-YWCA Fall Conference Oct. 11-12 at Quaker Lake.

Dr. Waldo Beach, profesor of Christian ethics at Duke Divinity School, will present the major addresses at the overnight conference. He will center his topics on the text of his recently published book, "Conscience on Campus."

One hope of the two-day meetings, as expressed by officials, will be to stress co-operation between State College and Carolina. Coeds and men students from both schools will take part in the overnight retreat. According to YMCA President Bill Sugg, this will mark one of the biggest gatherings of the two schools in the past few years.

Dr. Beach, one of the nation's top authorities on Christian ethics, is, according to YWCA program chairman Suzanne Mosteller, "one of the most sought after speakers for university gatherings in the county and we feel it a great privilege to be able to host him for our fall conference."

Tentative plans call for students planning to attend the event to leave from here after the UNC-South Carolina football game. Upon arrival at Quaker Lake, the group will eat supper.

During the remainder of the evening, there will be group discussions, conferences on various YMC-YWCA positions and functions, a speech by Dr. Beach and a vespers service led by Jack Lewis.

Sunday morning the students will be occupied with further discussion groups on Dr. Beach's speech of the night before and an 11 o'clock worship service. Following the noon meal, Dr. Beach will speak again. Further discussion will follow and the conference will dismiss at 4 p.m.

Y officials have urged any Carolina student interested in participating in the overnight retreat to go by the Y building.

Miss Mosteller said that costs of the overnight conference are not definitely fixed but will be released some time next week.

Persons Follows Adams In Chief Assistant Post

By JACK BELL

WASHINGTON — UP — President Eisenhower yesterday picked Wilton B. (Jerry) Persons of the White House staff to succeed Sherman Adams as his chief assistant.

The selection of Persons, a longtime close associate and personal friend of Eisenhower, appeared certain to be popular with members of Congress, the source of much of the criticism of Adams.

Persons, lean, graying 62-year-old deputy assistant to the President was chosen six days after Adams dramatically announced his resignation in a nationwide broadcast.

Persons starts familiarizing himslef with his new job as assistant to the President immediately. It won't all be strange territory. He has been on the White House staff since Eisenhower moved in. White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said Adams will remain long enough to assist in an orderly transition.

Adams quit under a fire of Republican and Democratic criticism of his acceptance of costly favors from Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine.

Eisenhower's choice of Persons was praised by Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress. A retired Army Major General, Persons has been chief Congressional liaison man for the Administration since Sept. 5, 1953. Before that he served as personal assistant to the President.

Hagerty announced also that Bryce N Harlow, who has been special assistant to Persons, had been named a deputy assistant to the President for Congressional affairs, a new title. In effect, this is Persons' old job.

Fraternity Rushing Starts This Afternoon

By DAVIS B. YOUNG and JAMIE HOLMES

(This the first of a series by Jamie Holmes and Davis B. Young, members of The Daily Tar Heel editorial staff.)

Fraternity rushing for 1958 officially kicks off at 2:30 this afternoon when hundreds of Carolina's new men students spruce up with their best Ivy League attire and set out to look over the social side of campus life.

This will break a period of silence between fraternity and non-fraternity men that has existed since the first day of class.

Comments on fraternities and their rush programs came from all over the campus on the eve of this year's festivities. President William Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina had this to say: "The administration looks to fraternities with the confident hope that they will provide a high standard of scholarship and leadership, not only for their respective chapters, but also for the entire student body of the University."

Chancellor William Aycock said, "Should you become a member of a social fraternity which undertakes to influence its members to measure up to the highest standards of the University, you will not only profit individually, but also you will have found an ideal small group through which you can make a maximum contribution to the larger community — your University."

Comment also came from Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver, who said, "the associations and fellowship of fraternity life are intended to heighten the value of the college experience, not only socially, but educationally."

Rushing will continue until Saturday when bids will be distributed to those freshmen who have passed the various ch ters.

Monday through Friday rushees will be active starting at 7 p.m. Most of the rushing periods will end at 9:30 p.m.

Friday will be designated as shake-up day when freshmen and fraternity members will make binding committments. Saturday is Pledge day when those who have decided to pledge will be given pledge pins at ceremonies in all houses on campus.

Rushees have been reminded that they must visit each house from which they receive an invitation on either Sunday or Monday. Furthermore, rushing hours must be observed.

Freshmen must be out of fraternity houses by 5:30 Sunday afternoon and 10 Monday night.

Except during the regular rushing hours, strict silence shall be observed between rushees and fraterntiy members until 12 noon on Saturday, Oct. 4.

IFC President Issues Open Letter To Rushees

Interfraternity Council President S. Tucker Yates has released the folowing open letter to fraternity rushees. Yates said he wrote the letter on behalf of the entire I.F.C.

"This afternon most of you will embark upon another new experience at Carolina. Rush week will certainly be a busy and perhaps even hectic week for you, but it can also be enjoyable and profitable.

"Fraternity life is an invaluable experience in group living. The man working his way through school has the same opportunity for development, for attainment and for holding office as the man who gets a fat monthly check from home.

"A fraternity looks at you, or should look at you, for yourself. So introduce yourself always; a false front is easy to spot.

"Remember also, that in order to be eligible to pledge a fraternity when rush is over, you must abide by all IFC rushing regulations. Most important to remember at this stage of rush is that each of you must go to all houses that you receive bids from on either today or Monday, so it's wise not to spend too much time at any single house on these first two days.

"Don't feel bad about leaving a house that you like as the fraternity men know the rushing regulations and will understand that it is necessary for you to visit other houses.

"When you do visit a house, however, make it your business to be sure you talk to all the men in the house. If you are only allowed to talk to a few — friends from home, big-name athletes, chapter officers, etc. — be suspicious.

"Also, be suspicious of a house that uses high pressure on you, that runs down other fraternities, or that violates any of the IFC rushing regulations. For example if a fraternity man attempts to visit you in your dormitory room after regular rushing hours, both his fraternity and you, the rushee, would be violating rushing rules.

"Such 'dirty rushing' could possibly lead to your losing pledging privileges as well as the fraternity losing theirs. Remember, if a fraternity can't get a pledge class by following the rules set up, something is wrong with that house.

"In each fraternity, ask about scholarship, your financial obligations and the financial position of the chapter, participation in University activities, both as a house and individually, and about pledge obligations and duties.

"Above all, however, choose the fraternity with the kind of men you like; choose a group that is ambitious and energetic enough to take part in all phases of college life, is friendly — but not false, and has the same interests, goals, and general likes as you do.

"Look over as many fraternities as you can just as long as you can. There's no necessity for an early decision and if you cannot reach a decision during the regular rushing period, by all means wait a week or a month before finally accepting an invitation to pledge a fraternity.

"Again, the IFC wishes you good luck in rush and hopes you find it a pleasant and stimulating experience."

To The Rushee

You, during the next week will have an opportunity to visit every fraternity on the campus. Your view will be somewhat obscured by the sales techniques used in order to get people to join a particular house.

You will be shuttled from one house to another and herded in at each house. During the time you will be subtly grilled as to your likes, dislikes, beliefs, prejudices, appearance, girls and the like. You will ask some questions, but most will not be the pertinent ones.

Most of you will probably pledge a fraternity, if asked.

Most of you shouldn't pledge a fraternity at this time.

For most of you, the two weeks of classes you have attended are inadequate to give you an idea of the academic responsibilities that face you at the University.

For many of you, the time during the beginning of your first year that pledging takes up will be too much for you. Your participation in any other form of extra-curricular will be lost in duties toward the house.

Your academic standing may not suffer, but for the beginning your freedom of action will be curtailed.

Most of you do not know why you are joining a fraternity outside of the obvious social advantages that the fraternity affords. This does not square with the academic and participating responsibilities that are on your shoulders.

You are free to join, but if you're wise, you'll wait.

This does not mean that you should not join at any time. This means that if you have the slightest doubt about your responsibilities, if you are unsure as to what pledgeship is and what fraternity life means, and if you value your initial independence, then to pledge a fraternity at this time would be for you foolhardy. For any people in this situation, it would be advisable to go through rush, meet some people whom you can discuss fraternity life with later when you have some background knowledge.

If you at the present time have your heart set on a fraternity, and are sure that this will not interfere with your intellectual development, join. But beware, doubt first. If you have doubted and all reservations have been set aside, join. If any reservations remain, there are seven other semesters when you can pledge.

Don't jump, wade. He who hesitates is not always lost. He sometimes finds wisdom in his meditation.

Fraternities

The Daily Tar Heel during the next week is undertaking a fairly thorough study of the fraternity situation at the University of North Carolina. During the week there will be editorial comment, much of it critical of the present fraternity system, some will be praiseworthy, and still others will press for things that fraternities want to have.

The editorial series needs a preface. It needs to be said that fraternities have the right of existence. To abolish fraternities would be to deny the right of assembly, and anything that will appear in this column will be to better the system rather than to deny their existence.

It is hoped that they, the fraternities, will take what is said here during the next several days under advisement and perhaps do something to help out the campus situation.

THE WORLD NEWS IN REVIEW

Ed Roland

This week's news has been filled with stories of strife from all corners of the globe. From Little Rock to Lebanon, from Adams to Algeria, these stories pushed even the spreading hula hoop craze off the front pages.

In contrast the Carolina campus was comparatively quiet as sorority rush and combatting the ot weather and lamentations about football occupied most students' time.

In tense Little Rock, violence erupted Wednesday as private corporations made plans to reopen Central High as a private school. Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas said if the federal government blocks his plans it would be their responsibility for keeping the schools closed. The violence occurred when a group of Negro youths beat three white ninth graders.

Gov. Faubus called a special election to let the residents of Little Rock decide the school question, and on its eve conflict between white groups on opposite sides of the question made the city as tense as it was last September.

Groups of ministers have come out on both sides of the question and angry words have been exchanged. Newspaper ads have appeared with black borders.

Gov. Faubus said he thinks there will be more violence, "Most people think so," he said. He declined to say whether he would put the Arkansas National Guard in the streets again.

Contrasting with Little Rock was Van Buren, Arkansas, where eight Negroes re-entered Van Buren High amid only minor demonstrations by whites. Segregationist leaders immediately called a conference.

Students supposed to attend closed schools in Norfolk and Charlottesville, Virginia, issued pleas asking the re-opening of their schools. The petitions circulated made no mention of race or integration but merely said the students want an education.

In Newport, R. I., President Eisenhower wound up his seaside vacation with a round of golf.

Formosa Crisis

The shooting in Formosa Strait went into its second month this week as the top American commander in the Pacific conferred with Chaing-Kai-Shek. The discussion centered around the problem of supplying the Nationalist garrisons on Quemoy and Matsu under the muzzles of Red guns on the Chinese mainland.

Red China failed once more to gain a seat in the United Nations as the United States successfully prsuaded the General Assembly to sidetrack the issue. The U. S. victory was not so decisive as in previous years, however.

The decision came after a two-day debate in which the United States fought almost single-handedly against mounting pressure by the Soviet Bloc and Afro-Asian countries for action now. A large majority of the Latin-American and Western European nations sat through the debate in silence.

The army seized power in Burma in a bloodless coup in an action aimed at preventing Burma's shaky government from falling into the hands of the Communists. The army said it was acting to preserve democracy and law and order.

Army leaders had reportedly issued an ultimatum to two warring factions in Premier U Nu's party before the coup. The party was split into pro-western and neutralist groups. The army has promised to hand power back to any government which can keep Burma on an even keel and guarantee the nation's security.

Middle East

Lebanon's new militarist President, Gen. Fuad Chehab, rolled out heavvy tanks and troops on the second day of his tenure to stop speading gunfights that had killed more than 20 persons in Beirut. U. S. troops were placed between clashing Christian and Moslem factions in the hopeful role of peacemakers. Lebanon is about half Christian, half Molsem.

Chehab is officially Christian but there is also some Moslem background in his family. He took office succeeding a Christian, Camille Chamoun.

In Algeria French authorities said the mutilated bodies of 400 to 500 Algerian Nationalist rebels have been found in a mass grave in a mountainous region some 100 miles east of Algers. The French said the dead were members of a rebel unit slain for plotting to betray the cause of the anti-French revolution.

Adams Resignation

Back in the United States Sherman Adams resigned as presidential assistant in a nationwide television address, and Democratic Chairman Paul Butler replied the following night. Adams asserted again, "I have done no wrong." Butler restated the Democratic accusations against Adams and added that he believed high members of the Republican party dumped Adams as a political liability.

Adams was accused of accepting favors from Boston industrialist Bernard Goldfine and exerting influence on federal agencies in Goldfine's behlaf. President Eisenhower was described as anxious to name a successor to Adams quickly.

The man most often mentioned was Alfred M. Gruenther.

Labor Talks

On the labor front the United Auto Workers started negotiations with the Ford Company after shelving talks with Chrysler and General Motors. Local disputes with the union idled more than 30,000 workers. The UAW has shown signs in increased irritation at the slowness of the companies to come to an agreement, and they faced continuing internal problems among skilled workers in Ford plants.

Chrysler was hardest hit by walkouts as 9,400 quit at seven plants in Indiana and Michigan. GM had 10,000 out in five plants.

Another large union, the United Mine Workers led by Johtn L. Lewis, was reported about ready to nail down another fat pay boost and welfare fund royalty hike for the nation's soft coal miners.

At the same time the government announced a 50 cents an hour wage boost producers must pay to be eligible to sell coal has the effect of raising labor under a federal contract. This costs of non-union producers and of making union producers more receptive to giving Lewis extra union concessions.

The United States blasted a "weather-eye" satellite into space from Cape Canaveral, but it is not certain whether the attempt was succesful. Four U. S. satellites are in orbit in addition to one Sputnik.

Three hours after the launching no tracking" stations had made contact with the satellite. Earlier officials were elated after word that the first three sections had performed flawlessly.

Southern Declaration

(The following was introduced at the Eleventh Annual National Student Congress at Delaware, Ohio this summer. It was introduced under the title of "Declaration of Southern Student Leadership on Desegregation" to the five sourthen regions represented at the Congress. It was passed wholeheartedly in three of those five regions and was not defeated in any. The editor feels that this is the type of leadership students and governmental people should assert in order to bring about integration and avert violence.)

We are proud of the Southern community. We are, however, painfully aware of the tremendous problem that faces our respective states in the realm of constitutional desegregation of segregated schools.

We are also aware of the great national problem of establishing democratic race relations, but we realize that perhaps in our community the problem is more acute because it involves statutory discrimination while the basic problem elsewhere is basically one of sociological and policy implementation.

We are in complete agreement with the USNSA Resolution on Desegregation which states that segregation in education by race is incompatible with human equality. We also realize that segregation in education is now unconstitutional and is at cross purposes with the American way of life and body of law.

Though we are proud of the Southern community's way of life, we do not feel that a system that denies equal opportunity to some southern citizens is either necessary or desirable as a part of that way of life.

We are personally opposed and will work to defeat all actions, legislative or otherwise, which in effect frustrate and prevent the obligation and right of local communities to progress toward compliance with the decision of the Supreme Court. We do also stand unalterably opposed to any demagogery or attempts to use the highly emotional issue of desegregation for personal social, financial or political gain.

Finally, we are deeply cognizant of the tremendous obligation that we as Southern sutdent leaders personally bear to supply intelligent and forward looking leadership to our home communities in squarely meeting the problem of constitutional inous obligation that we as Southern student leaders in the South in developing an intelligent program of leadership in this area, and involving all other students possible in our local academic communities and schools throughout the South in meeting the problem.

The Meaning Of Education At Carolina

Fred Weaver

Charles Van Doren said that when he was a student at Columbia he read over a thousand books a year. He would go right into the library stacks and read, read, read. I asked myself how anybody could read a thousand books a year. I tried to figure out how many books that would be a month, how many a week—a day. How dill he read? Did he "taste," "swallow," or "chew and digest"?

Do you know how to read? Let me make a specific suggestion. Go to the Library and call for a book by Mortimer J. Adler entitled How to Read a Book. Mr. Adler is the man who in collaboration with Robert Hutchins and Stringfellow Barr worked out the Great Books curriculum at St. Johns College in Annapolis—the hundred books that constituted the whole curriculum at St. Johns. If you think you know how to read you will be surprised at what you have yet to learn about reading, the skill of getting into the mind what is communicated on the printed page. If you are taking notes make a note of that title: How to Read a Book by Mortimer J. Adler. (Mind you, I said Mortimer J. Adler, not Teddy Nadler.) He calls it "a light book about heavy reading." And it's not exactly a light book.

Recently there came to town a college friend of mine, Ferebee Taylor. Ferebee was the first winner of one of our coveted scholarships, the Herbert Worth Jackson Scholarship. He came to the University from Oxford, North Carolina, and in four years made just about all A's. Then he went to Oxford, England, as a Rhodes Scholar; then to Harvard Law School. And now he is an attorney in New York. I always enjoy hearing about Oxford. The preeminent university in the English-speaking world, I think of it in almost magical terms— a place all would-be educators should at least touch.

I was interested in Ferebee's account of his first visit to his Tutor. (At Oxford a Tutor is something like a General College Adviser, in one respect, at least.) Ferebee asked the Tutor to advise him which lectures he should attend—you might say which courses he should take. The Tutor in a manner and accent which I cannot affect spoke rather indifferently about the lectures. "Oh, yes," he said, "I see that Billings will be giving his lectures on contemporary English philosophers and Joshings will lecture on the Soviet Economy. It might be worthwhile to drop in on these occasionally, but I don't believe if I were you I should waste too much time on lectures. You will want to save your time for reading." Of course, this is not Oxford and you are not all Rhodes Scholars; but there is a lesson here for us. We attach too much importance to the lecture. We are too passive in our approach to learning. We depend too much on the professor.

Read, read, read. That is the thing. Go to the Library. That is where our treasure is. That is where the greatest professors of all time and all nations will come to lecture to you at your own convenience, any time of day or night. They are ready to come to you privately, at you call. You are at the water's edge. The ocean is before you.

My point number two is that education should build character. For this I take my text from Robert Frost, the wise and wonderful poet. Mr. Frost said that if he were a dictator and could say the word and know that it would be obeyed in all the schools and colleges of America he would say to them, "Build character!" And they of course would ask, "How?" How do we build character? "The secret of building character," said Frost, i"is knowing how and when to put young people on their own." Knowing how and when to put young people on their own is quite a trick. But I will say this. Carolina is a place where you will be more completely on your own than ever before in your lives. You will be the judge of what time you get up in the morning and what time you go to bed at night, and whether you eat breakfast or go to class or go to the movies or go home for the week end, or whether you study or fritter away your time and your opportunity.

It is not as if you have been abandoned—far from it. The place abounds with teachers, coaches, advisers, deans, people who can help you—even inspire you. And there is nothing wrong with being helped. The math professor can explain things to you that you might not be able to understand by working entirely on your own. The coach can teach you a great deal about form and technique, about a backhand stroke or a hook shot and much more besides. But one thing that we all know is this: there is no substitute for working something out for yourself, whether if be an algebraic equation, a line of poetry or an exercise in English composition. As a matter of fact, we are never quite sure of anything until we do work it out for ourselves; never quite as pleased as when we do something on our own. Watch any baby when he first learns to walk; or ask any aviator who has made his first solo flight.

It will be profitable to ask yourselves as you go along how much you are doing on your own and how much you are doing as a matter of routine, of habit, of sheer compliance with directions and assignments. Study, like anything else, is neither enjoyable nor profitable unless you put your heart into it and find in it a sense of personal achievement. It is by going after problems with determination and perseverance until they are solved that we develop character.

THE ACKLAND MAUSOLEUM

On the road to sacrilege it should be noted that the tomb of Mr. Ackland (deceased) in the building which bears his name is one of the most ludicrous and tasteless objects around. As such, it is quite in keeping with the rest of the building.

The plaque above the sarcophagus informs the inquisitive sightseer that Mr Ackland died at the age of eighty-five; immediately below this information, atop the sarcophagus, is a statue of the reclining Mr. Ackland in his twenties, dressed in a neatly starched stone suit, vintage 1958 from Milton's.

Death has done wonders for him.

CONTRACEPTION AND THE CHURCH

The Catholic Church has never been noted for a liberal attitude, or for allowing much deviation from its arbitrary, but infallible, rulings. It follows, then, that the Church comes into official conflict with the rest of the world in cerain areas — i.e. certain movies, books, medical practices.

In such cases of conflict the Church usually stands alone, particularly in a relatively enlightened and more-or-less democratic country where authoritarian strictures are not welcome. When, as is often the case, the Church's dictates to its adherents threaten the freedoms of non-Catholics, the result is often that the non-Catholics take justifiable offense.

The case in point: The New York City board of hospitals last week lifted its blanket ban on birth control therapy in city hospitals. This action was taken after a long debate toughed off when a doctor in a city hospital was forbidden to fit a Protestant patient with a contraceptive device. In the doctor's opinion, pregnancy would endanger the woman's life.

As soon as the case hit the New York press, the local Archdiocese came out firmly on the side of the official who had forbidden the treatment. Just about every other church group and public voice in the city came out against the discriminatory policy.

When the ban was lifted last week, the Catholic officials stated that the new policy, which makes contraceptive devices and advice available to those who need and want them, "introduces an immoral practice in our hospitals which perverts the nature and dignity of man."

Perhaps soon some Catholic woman, being told in a clay hospital that her life will be forfeit if she conceives, will wonder why in all probability she must die, while others in the same situation will be saved by medical science.

IN HILL HALL

Dr. Tillich To Speak Twice

Dr. Paul Tillich, Harvard University professor, theologian and writer, will present two lectures here this week under the sponsorship of the Wesley Foundation.

The lectures will be delivered in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. on Friday and Saturday, Oct. 3 and 4. His first leture is entitled "The Present Encounter of Religious and Secular Faiths."

A native of Gemany, Dr. Tillich served for four years as chaplain to the German army during World War I. During the interim between wars, he taught at the universities of Berlin, Dresden, Leipzig, Frankfurt and Halle.

A leader in the Christian Socialist Party in Germany at the time of World War II. Dr. Tillich was forced by Hitler to leave the country. He came to Union Theological Seminary in New York to teach and also began conducting seminars in philosophy at Columbia University.

In 1955 Dr. Tillich accepted an invitation to join the faculty of Harvard and was named to one of Harvard's six distinguished service professorships. Since the end of World War II, Professor Tillich has returned several times to his native Germany to teach in some of the leading universities.

During the summer of 1956 he taught at the University of Hamburg and at the University of Berlin. He is the author of several books publised in Germany on pilosophy and the philosophy of religion that were written before his coming to America which have been translated into Italian, Dutch and Japanese.

He is currently writing the third and final volume of his life work, "Systematic Theory." During the past 10 years his other writings include "The Protestant Era," "The Shaking of the Foundations," "The New Being," "Love, Power and Justice," "Biblical Religion and Ultimate Realty," "Dynamics of Faith" and "The Courage To Be."

Dr. Tillich has been recognized for his contributions to the field of theology and philosophy by many scholars and writers in leading magazines. An article in Newsweek stated about Dr. Tillich: "He is now by every concensus, the great philosopher-theologian of modern U. S. Protestantism, and the idol of thousands of thinking ministers."

Virginia Tops Duke Blue Devils And Maryland Upsets State

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., (AP) — Duke, favored by at least two touchdowns, never found a consistent punch against the thin but stouthearted Virginia line until the fading moments of action. Then the Cavaliers weakened in the face of the hammering of the flood of Duke substitutes — but it was too late for the Blue Devils to avert their second straight conference lacing.

Twice in the opening period the Devils got inside the Virginia 10 only to be held for downs. Their second-quarter touchdown came at the end of a 42-yard advance in which junior halfback Dan Lee was the big gainer.

Lee contributed a 20-yard run to the Duke march and took the ball from the four to the goal line on the touchdown play. Here he fumbled but end Bob Spada pounced on the ball in the end zone for the six-pointer.

In the last quarter the Blue Devils went 69 yards in 11 plays and excursion that ended with halfback Wray Carlton running nine yards to score. But after that the Blue Devils never got another offense started.

Duke itself showed a surprising punch in the air. Quarterback Bob Broadhead did most of the pitching in a 9-for-15 performance good for 96 yards. The Blue Devils added 229 yards aground, 84 by Carlton and 63 for halfback George Dutrow.

Duke's last chance came with one minute left when the Blue Devils got possession on their 46. Broadhead took to the air. His pass was intercepted by Whitley on the Virginia 48 and the Cavaliers then merely ran out the clock.

When it was over the Virginia team, which hadn't beaten Duke since it entered the Atlantic Coast Conference in 1953 and in the last thre years had seen the Blue Devils register 40 points or more, was mobbed on the field by the elated crowd.

MARYLAND

RALEIGH, N. C., (AP) — Halfback John Forbes scored two touchdowns and set up another with a recovered fumble as Maryland's Terps struck with hurricane force to upset North Carolina State 21-6 here Saturday in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game.

A crowd of 11,000 watched under menacing skies as Forbes tallied from the 4 in the first period to end a 73-yard drive. In the third quarter, Forbes, 190-pounded from Basking Ridge, N. J., took a screen pass from quarterback Dickie Lewis and scored on a brilliant 71-yard play in which he lost his left shoe.

Maryland, bounding back from the humiliating 0-34 loss to Wake Forest last week, added its third touchdown early in the final quarter when Quarterback Bob Rusevlvan knifed over from the 1. Then he ran over the two extra points. Forbes recovered a fumble by halfback Claude Gibson on the Wolfpack 25 to set up the score.

N. C. State punched across its touchdown midway in the final period on a 15-yard pass play from Gerald Mancini to Randy Harrell. N. C. State launched its drive after Harrell intercepted a pass on the Maryland 41 and returned it to the 20.

Asked to comment on next week's Maryland-Clemson game, Mont said, "All we hope to do is beat them."

Mont, whose team lost to Wake Forest 34-0 in the season opener, was loud in his praise of halfback John Forbes, who scored twice against State and set up another touchdown with a recovered fumble.

He also singled out quarterbacks Bob Rusevlyan and Dickie Lewis, as well as halfback Gene Varardi.

Mont bemoaned the loss of Forbes, who suffered a shoulder separation in the closing minutes.

"He wil be out of action the next week or two," Mont said. "We have very little backfield depth."

Too Much Dawkins?

Army Overwhelms S.C. Footballers By 45-8

By JACK HAND

WEST POINT, N. Y., Sept. 27 — (AP) —Pete Dawkins scored four touchdowns and Bob Anderson passed for two today as Army uncovered an eye-popping offensive to clobber South Carolina before about 20,000 rain-soaked fans.

Earl (Red) Blaik, starting his 25th year as a head coach, had about everyone but the fullback throwing passes in the cadet's impressive opener. Using an unbalanced line with a wide split end on the strong side—called a "lonesome end" formation—Army outclassed a team that beat Duke a week ago.

Dawkins, captain of the team, brigade commander and head of his class, slipped through from the 4 in the fist period, dashed from the 26 in the third, took a pass from Anderson for a 22-yard scoring play, and a 10 yard toss from Joe Caldwell. Anderson also threw 3 yards to end Don Usry in the third period for Army's third score within six minutes.

Not until the final period did South Carolina manage to mount a solid threat. Moving against Army's reserves, with King Dixon and Alex Hawkins doing most of the work, South Carolina scored on a 1-yard plunge by quarterback Bobby Bunch. The Gamecocks went for the two points and made it on an end run by Hawkins.

Army tried to run it twice for extra points and Maurice Hilliad coveted on three of five placements.

line, and fullback Don Coker cracked over left guard for the score. Phil Blazer split the uprights for 1 point, and the score stood Carolina 21, Clemson 20 with 12:56 left in the game.

The teams exchanged the pigskin, but then the Tigers started from their 18 yard line, after a Coker punt was downed, and made the touchdown that made the difference. Once again splitting both ends, the Bengals mixed up passing and running successfully as they moved 82 yards down the field. Usry's 3-yard score put the Tigers ahead to stay 26-21 with only 2:52 left in the ballgame.

After the kick-off Carolina began their desperate passing game, but couldn't make it click and the Tigers took over on downs then ran out the clock.

Two injuries were suffered by Carolina players in the hard-fought contest. Fullback Bob Shupin had lime kicked into his eye, and Ronnie Koes sustained an injured leg. Shupin's eye wil probably be all right, but it is feared that Koes' leg may be broken.

Frankie Albert

PHILADELPHIA — (AP) Frankie Albert, San Francisco 49ers coach, has apologized to Norman Van Brocklin, the Philadelphia Eagles quarterback, for that needling in last Sunday's game out West. The Eagles won 31-28.

Bert Bell, National Football League commissioner, received a copy of Albert's apology Saturday and promptly said:

"I am gratified by this. I am delighted that this kind of sportsmanship exists in football."

THE NICEST CLUB ASKS NO DUES

Evenings in Chapel Hill's famous old book emporium are something to look forward to.

On the shelves are the finest thinkers, and the most entertaining talkers of the centuries. Scattered along the aisles are the most interesting people in North Carolina today.

You'll find students from a half dozen colleges, a goodly sprinkling of co-eds (we wish we could tell you of some of the romances that have started over a book), faculty members, and intelligent people from surrounding towns who have driven over for an evening's pleasure.

In the Intimate, neighbors chat and advise each other. Nobody high-pressures you for a sale, and nobody cares if you laugh out loud at a joke. It's more like a club — a club without dues.

Maybe you're a prospective member. An evening's browse will tell you — and we'd be awfully happy to wecome you.

Frosh Booters Lack Players

By Alber Stirianni

Plagued by library lectures, lab periods and lack of players, Coach Fred Soviero's freshman soccer practices have been slightly disrupted.

The practices, held from 2:45 p.m. till 4:00 p.m., have been conflicting with some of the boys lab classes and library responsibilities. Though these two situations should remedy themselves in the coming weeks, there is still the fact that not enough boys are turning out for the sport.

Unlike the other freshman sports such as basketball and football where previous knowledge plays a prominent part, a boy needs absolutely no experience to play soccer.

Branch Clarifies Policy On Room Rent Refunds

By STAN FISHER

University Business Manager J. Arthur Branch yesterday clarified the administration's stand on the present policy of no refund to students moving out of dormitories.

Branch and Head Cashier M. E. Woodard outlined the policy with the following exceptions:

(1) A student desiring to move out of a three man rooming situation will be granted a refund. (This policy will continue through the ninth week after classes started, or Nov. 19. After this date, in keeping with past policy, no refunds are made.)

(2) If a student desires to move from the dormitory and has someone who would like to take his room, both of them should, according to Branch, go by the housing office where the change will be recorded. The University would then make the refund to the student leaving, and the student moving in would pay. This arrangement was made so that the University will have a record of all monetary transactions.

(3) Refunds will be made to all students leaving because of illness a death in the family or disciplinary reasons.

The reason given by Branch for the new policy was that a loan had been received from the federal government for construction of the new campus dormitories (Parker, Teague, and Avery). To obtain this loan, he said, a statement had to be signed that revenue from all UNC dormitories including increased room rent, above the maintenance and operating costs, had to go toward payment on the debt.

In the past an estimated 150-200 students have been moving from the dormitories and receiving refunds. Branch stated that under the present financial conditions the University couldn't afford "that type of thing."

Branch said, "We rent rooms on two main bases. One, we allow upper classmen to retain their old rooms in the spring if they wish. The remainder of the rooms are rented to incoming students on a first come, first serve basis."

He went on to point out after all rooms were filled few still came, finding housing off campus but some were discouraged from attending Carolina at all.

Then if those who rented dormitory rooms started leaving, it was too late to accept those students who had been discouraged from coming. The University consequently lost money because dormitories were not filled to capacity.

Fraternities were considered in making the decision, but Branch stated that first consideration had to go toward housing accomodations on campus and the debt obligation.

English Help Given Students From Overseas

A class in which foreign students may improve their English will soon be held by the Y, acting on a suggestion of Dr. A. S. Howell of the English Dept.

The first meeting of students planning the special English class will be be held today at 4 p.m. in the Library at the Y Building. This group will discuss, among other things, a time and fee for the special class.

Foreign students may sign up for the class with Anne Queen at the Y Building.

Nan Robinson, in charge of arrangements for the class, said yesterday that most foreigners already have a basic knowledge of English grammar, so the class will deal with terms not ordinarily taught abroad, such as financial terminology.

Mis Robinson, a junior, will teach the first three classes. Foreigners needing further help outside the class will work with student volunteers, Ess Bruner, Nancy Grubb, Mary Cavlan, Parker Hodges and Dee Dunro.

The special English class will meet once a week for regular 50-minute class period through Christmas and probably later.

Caswell Named Co. Of Middy Battalion

MDSHP. CASHWELL
. . . NROTC Commanding Officer

Midshipman Richard Gordon Cashwell of Brevard has been chosen by Capt. Carl Tiedeman to be commanding officer of the NROTC Midshipman Battalion.

Other officers on Mdshp. Capt. Cashwell's staff include Mdshp. Cmdr. J. H. Reed, battalion executive officer; Mdshp. Lt.-Cmdr. D. K. McColl, battalion operations officer; Mdshp. Lt. R. A. Fusted, communications officer; Mdshp. Lt. J. T. Alexander, supply officer; and Mdshp. Lt. B. C. Herring, adjutant.

The Drum and Bugle Corps will be commanded by Mdshp. Lt. R. F. Blakely and the Drill Team by Mdshp. Lt. W. M. Fitts. Mdshp. Lt. (j.g.) J. C. Jordan will be executive officer of the Drill Team.

Commanders of the three companies are Mdsp. Lts. A. A. Hutchinson, A company; E. J. Kelly, B company; D. A. Floyd, C company.

Company executive officers are Mdshp. Lt. (j.g.)s W. E. Coenen, D. R. Biren, and F. E. Wirkus, A, B and C companies respectively.

Platoon leaders are Mdshp. Ensigns C. B. Metcalf, W. H. Lausing, F. G. Robbins, T. S. Kenan, R. F. Shuford, L. H. Phelan, D. A. Furtado, C. R. Coley, and H. A. Morgan.

Mdshp. Cashwell, a regular NROTC student, is enrolled in the Marine option. A Morehead scholar, Cashwell is a member of the Honor Council Commission and has served as an orientation counselor.

He belongs to the Scabbard and Blade and Semper Fidelis Society. A diver, he swims on the varsity team and is a member of the Monogram Club. He belongs to Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity.

Physics Colloquium Will Be Held Friday

The joint Duke-UNC Physics colloquium previously announced for Oct. 1 has been cancelled. Instead, a program on Oct. 3 will feature Dr. A. D. Buckingham of Oxford University.

Buckingham will speak on "Molecular Association" in Room 206, Phillips Hall, at 8 p.m.

G. M. SLATE

Activities scheduled today in Graham Memorial include:

Publications Board, 3-5:30 p.m., Grail Room; Women's Residence Council, 7-9 p.m., Grail Room; Panhellenic Post Office, 8:45 a.m. to 2 p.m., Roland Parker I and II; Debate Squad, 4-5:30 p.m., Roland Parker I and II; Social Committee of the IDC, 5-6 p.m., and Woodhouse Conference Room.

UNC Given Over $47,000 By Alumni Annual Council

More than $47,000 is being turned over to the University for "unrestricted" use at Chapel Hill, it was announced Sunday after a meeting of the Alumni Annual Giving Council.

The funds alocated by the alumni group will be used for nine different purposes.

The giving program is designed to raise money to be used for purposes needed by the faculty and for other activities in the Universtiy but not available from tax funds appropriated by the state of North Carolina. That is the reason for the designation "unrestricted."

The Alumni Annual Giving Council does, however, designate places the funds are to be used and the total of $47,548.50 made known today is divided into the following categories:

Faculty retirement	$ 2,564.75
Student Welfare	500.00
Classics Department project	500.00
Faculty Travel	10,000.00
Faculty Research and Publications	15,000.00
Band and Orchestra	1,983.00
Chancellor's Emergency Fund	2,000.00
Alumni Library Fund	5,000.00
Alumni Graduate Student Fellowships	10,000.00

The council, headed by E. J. Evans, mayor ofDurham, also set aside an additional $10,000 to be allocated for future use some time this year, as determined by the council.

Alumni of the University this past year gave more than $70,000 in a campaign headed by James W. Poole of Greensboro.

Since the annual giving program began in 1952-53, the University has been allocated a total of $182,000 for unrestricted purposes.

Fraternity Party OK's Now From Magill

The office of the assistant dean of student affairs, 206 South Building, will receive requests this fall for the approval of social functions from fraternities.

Formerly the office of the Dean of Women received the applications.

Asst. Dean of Student Affairs Sam Magill said the office of the dean of women would continue to approve the parties jointly with his office.

The applications will be received by his office and checked before they are sent to the dean of women.

The change is primarily an administrative one. "We are taking some of the work off the dean of women's office," Magill explained. The rules for getting a party approved "will be precisely the same as last year," Magill asserted.

To get a function approved it must be reported at least three days prior to the day of the function. Requests for approval will not be accepted after 12:30 p.m. on Wednesday prior to the weekend when the function is to occur.

The parties are approved for the convenience of the fraternities, Magill said. Carolina Coeds except for some students in Nursing School attend parties which are not approved, but other girls, schools require the parties be approved before their students go to them.

Phi Alpha Theta Awards To Grad Students

Richard Bienvenu, a graduate student student and Woodrow Wilson fellow at UNC, was recently granted the annual paper award of Phi Alpha Theta, national honorary history fraternity.

The paper was written while Bienvenu was an undergraduate at Southwestern Louisana Institute. It was entitled "America's First Play as an Historical Document" and dealt with "Androboros," a political play written by Governor Hunter of New York in 1714.

The paper shows that Governor Hunter realized that if the claims of the assembly, much like those current before the Revolution, were met the colony would be independent.

'59 Med School Entrants Urged To Apply Soon

Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, chairman of the committee on admissions of the UNC School of Medicine, yesterday urged all those applying for admission in September, 1959, to file their applications promptly.

He also reminded applicants that the Medical College Admissions Test will be given on Tuesday, Oct. 28, 1958. This test must be taken by all applicants for admission in September, 1959.

The deadline for signing up for the test is Oct. 14. Information on the test may be obtained from the Testing Service in Peabody Hall.

Polls Open At 9 This Morning For Selection Of Dorm Officers

Five Dorms Not Voting In Election

The polls open at 9 o'clock this morning for elections of dormitory officers in all men's dorms except for five that elected their officers last spring.

The balloting will be over at 5 p.m.

Members of the IDC will be operating the polls in the men's dorms. Joe Hurt is in charge of today's voting.

Candidates for dorm offices include:

Fall Election Date Not Yet Set; Board Working On Rule Revisions

No date has been set for the fall campus elections because the Elections Board is working to revise certain of its laws.

Meeting yesterday for the first time, the Elections Board, headed by Bob Furtado, made plans for going over the elections laws article by article.

Here are some things the Elections Board will be considering. The needs of new districts to take care of the three new men's dormitories, the problem of re-districting and re-apportionment in general, run-off elections and the judicial powers of the Elections Board.

Of special interest, the Board will consider the need for retaining the position of class officers.

Furtado said yesterday after the first meeting of the Board that recommendations for revising elections laws will be presented to Legislature after his Board has gone over each article.

All the loop-holes should be picked out and remedied, he said.

The fall elections date must wait until the Elections Board at least has made some provision for representatives from the new dorms, Avery, Parker and Teague.

Furtado and John Brooks are co-chairmen in charge of revising the election laws.

Fraternity Rushing Continues For 1,000 Is Undetermined

Fraternity rush continues today after two days of activities on Sunday and Monday.

The number of men participating in rush is between 900 and 1,000. Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, said yesterday the exact number of rushees can't be determined because 8,000 bids were distributed, with as many as 16 to the same person.

UNC Chess Club Plan Tourney For Everybody

The UNC Chess Club, winner of last year's North Carolina Team Championship, announced plans for a town-wide chess tournament at an organization meeting held recently.

Newly-elected officers of the Chess Club are Daniel Gallik and Henry Stockhold, president and secretary-treasurer, respectively.

Preparations were made for a "Swiss-type" tournament to begin tomorrow. The purpose of the tournament is threefold: to provide an opportunity for any chess player to test his strength and determine his relative standing; to establish the elegibility of members to play on the Club's team (or teams); and to determine the initial ranking of players on a permanent challenge-ladder. Prizes of $10 and $5 will be awarded for first and second place.

Albert Margolis, who was appointed director of this tournament, emphasized that it's open to all Chapel Hill chess players, including beginners, for whom a separate section of the tournament will be set up if enough entries are forthcoming.

Anyone wishing to earn elegibility on the Club's team may enter the main section, according to Margolis. One dollar membership dues are the only condition for entry. A sign-up sheet on the Graham Memorial Bulletin Board for entries will remain posted until 7:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Permanent possession of the North Carolina Chess Team Championship Trophy has been awarded to the Chapel Hill club, which besides winning last year's annual competition has been the most frequent winner of the trophy in past years.

Tuesday Evening Series Opens With Piano Duo

A two-piano recital tonight by faculty pianists William S. Newman and Wilton Mason will open this year's Tuesday Evening Series of UNC's Music Department.

The program, open to the public at no charge, will be in Hill Hall at 8 p.m.

Deadline Extended For Yack Pictures

The deadline for pictures of seniors, senior nurses and law students has been extended until Wednesday, according to Yack Editor Cameron Cooke.

Juniors will be able to have their pictures taken through Friday.

Sophomores, October 6 through October 10; freshmen, October 13 through 17; medical and dental, October 20 through October 24; and nursing, pharmacy and dental hygiene, October 27 through October 31.

Senior girls must wear black sweaters and one-strand pearls. Senior nurses must wear uniforms. All other girls wear black sweaters, the Yack office said.

Men must wear dark ties and dark coats with a white shirt, according to the Yack office.

BLACKBALLS, RUSH AND PLEDGE TRAINING

Fraternities Use Different Methods

By DAVIS B. YOUNG and JAMIE HOLMES

(This is the second in a series on fraternities being written by Davis B. Young and Jamie Holmes, members of the Daily Tar Heel editorial staff.)

Bound up in the intricacies of being accepted by a fraternity is the risk of being "blackballed." Because each fraternity will be rushing many times as many boys this week as it can possibly take in its pledge class, it is only logical that hundreds of boys will be rejected in this way from at least one house by the end of Rush Week.

One fraternity leader commented, "Do not worry if you are balled from many houses. This is something that we have all been through. There isn't a man on campus who has ever been through rush who hasn't been blackballed somewhere along the way."

BLACKBALLS TAKE MANY FORMS

Blackballing can be achieved through many different forms. One is to simply not invite a rushee back to the house again. Or, perhaps, an "ax man" has been chosen to politely inform an unwanted rushee he has not "passed inspection."

A third form is by vote of the actives: by a process of elimination a list of an average of twenty boys is compiled who have not been disapproved by any one active.

In most cases, "it is necessary to be accepted by every member of a fraternity house before you may pledge. This is to enable the fraternity as a unit to be satisfied with its selection of you."

RUSH CHAIRMAN IS BOSS-MAN

The fraternity member who is in charge of guiding his house through Rush Week is the rush chairman. Working many weeks before the final accelerated effort, he develops a tightly organized system of sifting each boy who visits the house through making certain each of these boys gets a fair-as-possible picture of the house.

It is his duty to obtain a list of all students who might be possible rushees through fraternity interest cards, alumni of the fraternity, chapter brothers, and general recommendations.

One campus fraternities makes it a practice to rush all Morehead scholars.

After this list has been compiled he must be sure that every person receives an invitation to visit the house during Rush Week. In some cases, fraternity rush chairmen also write to especially desired-for members during the summer months.

PLEDGE MASTER TAKES OVER

After a rushee has pledged he is under the jurisdiction of a pledge master. Although hazing is prohibited by the IFC, a pledge has certain "duties" to fulfill. A few examples from last year's pledge class of various fraternities is typical:

a system of scrutiny as well as

"Our duties were few. One morning, out of every month I was called upon to make sure that those boys with 8 o'clock classes climbed out of the sack in time for breakfast. Once every two weeks I was called upon to be delivery boy for everyone at the house who desired a midnight snack. I made a list and returned around 1:00 a.m. with some forty-odd requests."

Another now active member recalls this about his pledge days: "There is, of course, the disadvantage of being at the mercy of the brothers for the greater portion of your pledge year. In my fraternity, our pledge class had weekly meetings under the jurisdiction of a brother who acted as pledgemaster. His job was to introduce to us such things as the history of the fraternity, the active chapters today, and to familiarize us with the traditions of our own chapter."

Some campus fraternities are known for being more harsh on their pledges than others. "Rides" are not common though they do occur. In general being a pledge takes such forms as always having cigaretes and a light for an active, ready change, and so forth.

A Fad

The latest satire on man's intelligence is being sold at wholesale volume throughout the nation.

In Greenville, South Carolina toy stores, department stores, hardware stores, radio and television stores, five and dime stores, drug stores and other stores were selling hula hoops at the rate of one dollar per customer, and every person who walked into a store was a customer.

Girls outside the stores were hula hooping to attract the customers, stores were sponsoring hula hoop contests, and other stores were running sales of hula hoops at the rate of one on the regular cost of $1.

In the streets half the popuace was carrying at least one hula hoop, and small children were trying them out on the middle of Main St.

This is the epitome of ludicrosity. Those who are making the hoops, and those who have advertised the hoops are making money by the bushel, while the people are just following the leader to the store to buy something that would cost them half as much to make and be more worthwhile in the long run.

Moreover, everybody is standing in their lawns wiggling hula trimmed hips in a great show of dexterity that should only be applied to a reducer.

The country apparently can be captured by a simple hoop, when it cannot by an idea. It is a shame that America has come to this.

A Football Game

Every now and then a person experiences something that has to be evaluated on its own without placing it into any framework.

Such an experience was last Saturday's football game.

It was a magnificent experience. It was something that gave meaning to the game as a sport.

The game must be taken aside from all considerations of athletic systems and monetary expense. It was a game that had to be thought of in terms of hard clean play. It must be thought of in individual determination, in individual spirit, and in individual drive.

It must be measured in terms of two teams giving the most they had to give at a time when each needed to draw on every resource.

It was not an ideal day. The weather was too hot to be ideal, and the clouds obscured the sun in the second half, but that was all to mar a perfect football game.

There was an element of luck that figured in. One could almost say that the game hinged on two split seconds. The second before the end of the first half which gave Clemson one more play and a touchdown, and the split second that gave a lineman a chance to block a kick. There were others that went the other way, that also could have made the ditefrence and stretched those seconds into minutes.

In the heat, a trained group of players played not like trained seals, but like wide awake individuals. They tackled hard, they blocked hard, they ran hard, and they fought hard.

The score on the scoreboard at the end of the game mattered slightly. Two top teams played, one won, and one lost, but the game to those who saw it will be remembered after the score is forgoten in the myriad of scores that come each year.

This, for once, was football.

Not So 'Radicleer'

The following column is something of a retort to the article which appeared in last Saturday's Daily Tar Heel. The statements and opinions which follow are not intended to be malicious or to disparage the religious faith of the author of the aforementioned article in any way. I have not had the occasion to meet Mr. Edwards, so no personal animosity prevails. I merely wish to express my views on the matter discussed in his column.

Mr. Edwards deals with the matter of polygamy. He says that, "American society should change from a monotonous society to a polygamous society." In making this statement, Mr. Edwards is recommending that Americans change their whole way of living. To change to a polygamous society, we would be going against the Federal Government as well as our religious beliefs. The Bible states, in what is generally known as the "Original Law of Marriage," that "Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for incontinence and marry another, committeth adultery." Furthermore, in 1882 the House of Representatives of the United States passed an anti-polygamy bill. Ten days later the same bill was approved by the President of the United States. Are we then, as a nation, to forsake our God and His commandments which have stood for centuries, as well as our national laws and our heritage, of which we are supposedly so proud?

Further on, the author says that we do not have to change our laws, but "merely overlook the existing ones." If we were to overlook one law, why then could we not overlook the others as well? And if this were the case, we might just as well dispense with our armies, police forces, and all other law enforcement agencies and is this what the American people want? I doubt it very seriously.

To delve a little deeper, it is a well-known fact that, as the world became more and more civilized, the practicers of polygamy became fewer. Is this to say that anyone who believes in or practices polygamy isn't civilized? Certainly not. I am just saying that it is a practice which s not generally accepted in our modern society. Not only is it not accepted, but as I have previously pointed out, it is prohibited, at least in America, which is supposedly the most civilized nation in the world.

Mr. Edwards later states that "wife one" in his "Three-way System" would be allowed to chase the other wives away as well as beat them. Earlier, the author had made the statement that if this plan were incorporated, it "would keep most of the homes in America from breaking up." Yet, later, the author states that for wives two and three to advance in this system they would have to leave the home and marry another man. How many women would be content to play "second fiddle?" Not many, I'd go so far to say. Thus, Mr. Edwards is actually contradiciting his own arguments, for if either, or both, of the subordinate wives left, the conditions which would then prevail would certainly not make for a happy home.

The beatings and prevention of advancement along with other conditions of the so-called "Three-way System" also bring to mind a certain amendment to the Constitution of the United States that said something about the abolition of slavery. Need I elaborate?

I would like to say, in retrospect to Mr. Edwards' statement that men would, under this "system" have no "reason to get drunk and cheat on their wives," that if a man is driven to drink by just one wife, what would he be driven to by three wives? I shudder to think of it.

It also seems to this writer that the atmosphere for the children in such a home would be much worse than in even the worst of homes of today. With three women under the same roof, if any roof was left, there would no doubt be no little "feudin', fussin' and fightin'." This in itself would be enough to drive normal children, if there could be any in such a society, to distraction. And, too, what are the "wholesome" conditions that could exist in such an atmosphere?

Lastly, there is the problem of finances. Mr. Edwards says we should. "Let every man marry as many women as he can afford to support." How many men can support more than one? With the present-day inflation, too many have a hard enough time supporting a single wife, to say nothing of three wives and goodness only knows how many children.

In closing, I would like to know, purely as a matter of personal curiosity, the source of information for the statement that "80 per cent of our married males partake in extra-curricular motel sports." I will go out on a limb, so to speak, and say that this statement has no statistics to back it up. True, many married males do partake in such activities, but I'll venture to say that nothing like 80 per cent of them do so.

The new Ackland Art Museum is a very impressive little building with thre very impressive little rooms of pictures. Unfortunately, the common ordinary art lover is forced to adopt sort of a Super Market technique in viewing these lovely specimens. The slogan here is: Do it yourself, because nobody is going to help you.

In most exhibitions there is at least some kind of mimeographed sheet, if not a real live human guide, to inform the onlooked of a little back-ground material. Here, you are on your own but completely. And even if you manage to track down someone who works there, you are likely to get a brief shrug and the comment that "Such information is the back room but can't be given out."

Did Mr. Ackland "who wanted his fellow statesmen to have a better understanding of the arts" intend this better understanding to apply only to art majors?

It would be interesting to know: 1. The background of some of these paintings and why they are considered worthy of a museum. 2. What is next on the agenda come October 20?

In all fairness to Mr. A., the museum that bears his name should have a more corial atmosphere to welcome patrons of the arts.

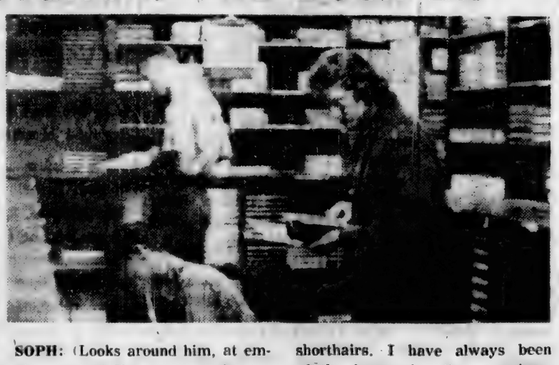
An Observation: The Book Ex

C. S. Young



It's the university booketeria again.

But let's change tactics a little. It seems that to get angry about something that appears to be an injustice is not the way to get anything across, and anyway most people find it difficult to remain angry at anything or anybody for any length of time, unless, that is, they are the ones who are directly affected, and are aware of it. So, in fairness, let's just look at the thing quietly and serenely.

This is an account of an incident that took place in the booketeria, on Monday of this week:

A sophomore enters the booketeria in the early afternoon. He has in his hand a book which he wishes to return, having bought it by mistake during the rush to get books before the weekend. For a change, the bookstore is uncrowded. The boy approaches the counter, and waits for the attention of one ofthe attendants. He is the only customer at the counter.

ATT: Yes?

SOPH: I have a book here that I bought on Friday, and I want to return it.

ATT: Why? What's wrong with it?

SOPH: Nothing, but I don't need it.

ATT: (Looks at book) English 21, isn't it?

SOPH: Yes.

ATT: Well, why don't you need it? You'll have to take the course. It's required.

SOPH: Yes, I'm taking the course, but the guy I live with already had the book, and I don't need this one.

ATT: (Regards boy for long moment) Well, it looks like you're stuck with it. (Looks through book again) We don't like to take up time making refunds when we're so busy.

SOPH: (Looks around him, at empty counter) You mean you're too busy now to make a refund?

ATT: Don't get smart.

SOPH: Look, the book is new, I haven't even used it. If you'll just give me what I paid for it, you can sell it again. Nobody loses that way.

ATT: You guys should know what books you want before you come in.

SOPH: I made a mistake.

(They look at each other for a moment)

ATT: (Looks through book again) Well, I'll give you your money, even though I know you don't appreciate it.

SOPH: I don't know what you mean. All I'm asking is that you give me a refund on a book that I bought by mistake. I just don't need it.

ATT: (Places money roughly on counter. Then turns away)

SOPH: I hope I haven't taken up too much of your time.

ATT: (Turns back quickly) Smarty!

Our sophomore leaves the bookstore, a bit irritated.

It would seem that whoever carries the weight around the booketeria has someone of importance in the administration by the shorthairs. I have always been of the impression that a university operates a bookstore primarily for the benefit of the students. That the proprietors are entitled to a fair profit for their labor goes without saying, and I am sure that those of us who have been around here for a while are aware that they are not being bankrupted. It remains, however, that there is a certain responsibility to the students in operations of this type, and I fail to see what justification there is for an attitude such as this toward any student. The public spirited proprietors of the booketeria always seem to have plenty of time for you when they are taking your money. Are they in such misery when they have to return the price of an ill-advised purchase? Is this a healthy attitude? Now I ask you.

Maybe it has something to do with the principles of business. Whatever it is, it has an unpleasant odor.

I can see no reason why the students here should let a thing such as this go unnoticed. If there is no one in the administration who is moved to a point that something can be done, then it leaves the thing with the students.

Meaning Of Education

Fred Weaver

My point number three is that education means action. This view of education is certainly not peculiar to Carolina. Most college and universities, including the very best, have lively student activity programs. But I think we may be fortunate above some others in this regard because of the peculiarly favorable circumstances of the founding. The University of North Carolina was born of the same historical impulse as the founding of the American nation. The motivating idea of the founders was that the survival of the new nation required an enlightened citizenry. In his Plan of Studies for the University Wiliam R. Davie wrote that the purpose of the University should be "to train useful and respectable members of society." It was doubtless the intention of the founders to establish a college that would train scholars: clergymen, teachers, lawyers, doctors. But the purpose they stressed above all others was training citizens for a democratic state.

Our beginnings as a state university ultimately proved favorable to the development of student self-government as a way of training for citizenship and service to one's fellowman. The function of the state university, said President Edward Kidder Graham, "is not only to search for truth, but also to set truth to work in the world of living mea and things . . ."

For those who are interested opportunities will abound for participation in extracuricular activities. At the same time you are free to refrain from participation if you so desire These are entirely voluntary and much of their merit as education consists in the fact that they are voluntary and free. Taken as an enrichment of study and not a substitute for it, their educational value is great. Since I have been taking texts tonight I should say a suitable one for this would be: "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only."

My fourth point, and the last, is more a sum of the other three than a new point. This is the realization, the flowering, of education - Let's call it liberation.

You are embarking on a four-year marathon. Shortly you will be caught up in the rapid-turning cycle of college years. You will find yourself dutifully signing up for courses, writing term papers, taking examinations — in the main, doing what the others are doing. One day you may pause long enough to ask yourself, "what it's all about?" What after all more than a social convention or a way to a job is the purpose of education?

THE DECLINE OF THE AMERICAN MALE. By the Editors of Look. 66 pp. New York: Random Hosue. $2.95.

In "The Decline of the American Male," the editors of Look Magazine have done something which looks simple enough, but is really extremely difficult and dangerous: they have taken a subtle and complex sociological syndrome and explained it simply and briefly.

The situation in question — the so-called "decline of the American male — involves the emasculation of said male by the American woman, the American economy, and the American social structure. The subject has been treated seriously and at length in such books as Margaret Mead's "Male and Female" and William H. Whyte, Jr.'s "The Organization Man."

In "The Decline of the American Male," the editors of Look have drawn freely from the above mentioned books and others, using Mead, Whyte, and the rest as a strong foundation for the more superficial approach of their book.

Happily, the format of the book as well as its content stay far from being pretentious or overbearing. Perhaps the overall effect goes a bit too far: the subpect matter is, after all, serious in it implications. But Robert Osborn's ever-clever cartoons, printed full-page in pastel colors, go far to make the book easy reading, even if they add little to its argument.

"The three articles in the book outline broadly three major areas of the decline of the American male: his domination by women, his urge to conform, and his willingness to overwork.

The first two areas of the decline of the American male — his dominaton by women and his urge to conform — are probably the most in evidence on this campus: the local males have not yet come into the sphere of "keeping up with the Joneses," etc.

There are at least two reasons why "The decline of the American Male" should be read on this campus. The first and most limited reason is that the male-female relationship in operation here is as abnormal and artifical a one as can be imagined: in certain of its aspects, the domination of the male by the female is in emphasis. Also, the urge to conform, widespread in the entire American population, is perhaps strongest in the current college generation — or so it is alleged by some commentators who label us "the silent generation" and consider us apathetic and intimidated.

The second and stronger reason for reading this book is that the decline of the American male is one of the most universally acknowledged and widely discussed of all American social traits. As it is the responsibility of every capable citizen to be at least generally familiar with all such subjects of discussion — those which concern the well-being of himself as an individual and of his society — the need for such a book as "The Decline of the American Male" is obvious.

There is little news here for the student who is fairly well grounded in current social theory and cocktail conversation; but even the thoroughly initiated will enjoy "The Decline of the American Male" as a bright once-over-lightly of his more academic concepts. And, as is often the case, the simple statement in a superficial treatment such as this is often a brilliant and effective summary of a complex argument.

A case in point occurs in UNC-graduate George B. Leonard, Jr.'s article "'Why Is He Afraid To Be Different": "True individualism . . . is the ability to love and to make moral decisions as an individual." Well said.

The major fault of "The Decline of the American Male" is its lack of consideration for the American female. Mr. Leonard's contribution deals with the influence of the "the Group" on the American male, but the other two articles in the book lay most of th American male's troubles directly at the feet of his women — mother, wife, etc. This impression is strengthened by Osborn's cartoons for these two sections. Osborn, like Thurber, sees the male-female relationship as definitely one-sided, and his suggestive drawings leave little doubt as to the sex of the culprit.

A more fruitful point of view would include the problems of the American woman as she accepts or tries to reject her new position. (c.f. Dr. Ashley Montagu's article in the Sept. 27 Saturday Review: "The Triumph and Tragedy of the American Woman." Dr. Montagu takes a more tolerant and understanding view of the situation of the modern American woman.) Perhaps it is not too much to hope that Random House and the editors of Look will once again collaborate as successfully as they have this time, their next joint effort to be entitled "The Dilemma of the American Woman."

Even as it is — a ruthor one-sided view of the situation — "The Decline of the American Male" is suggested reading for the whole campus, with the exception of the already sociologically sophisticated, for whom it is optional. It might even be a good idea to issue it to all new students upon arrival, as a companion piece to the various orientation handbooks. Certainly none of the vague platitudes and gushy sentiments of the handbooks (i.e. "When the chimes of the Bell Tower toll the melody of 'Hark the Sound' at dusk, and you pause a minute and feel a tiny chill play up and down your spine, then you, Carolina coed, are a Tar Heel." — from the Woman's Handbook) can compare in honesty or value to, "True individualism . . . is the ability to love and to make moral decisions as an individual."

Cause Of Death Of Grad Student

UNC graduate student Mary Frances Kangley, 24, of Goshen, N.Y., died at 8:30 Saturday morning in North Carolina Memorial Hospital.

The cause of death has not yet been determined, according to the hospital staff. She arrived unconscious at the hospital Friday night. Police said yesterday that she had been taking sleeping pills. The coroner's report is pending results of an autopsy.

An economics major in the graduate School of Business Administration, Miss Kangley held a Julian Price fellowship last year. Her local address was 307 Rosemary Street.

Funeral services will be held in Goshen, N.Y.

The body returned there last weekend.

Basketball Tournament Schedule Announced

The Carolina basketball team this winter will participate in three tournaments and appear in three games at the Charlotte Coliseum, it was disclosed by the schedule announced by Director of Athletics C. P. (Chuck) Erickson.

In addition to their regular dates in the Dixie Classic and Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, the Tar Heels will play in the Blue Grass Festival at Louisville, Ky., Dec. 19-20. Last season they competed in the Kentucky Invitational.

The other long trip they will make will be to Chicago to meet Loyola on Feb. 14.

Notre Dame, met is Chicago last season, will be played in the Charlotte Coliseum on Jan. 3. The Tar Heels will have a two-day stay in Charlotte Jan. 30-31, when they meet Clemson and South Carolina there.

Tatum Comments After Game

"Disappointed, but not ashamed."

Those were the words of Sunny Jim Tatum after his Carolina football team had been beaten by the Clemson Tigers last Saturday in Clemson.

In the lockeroom after the game, midst a hushed atmosphere of players quietly getting undressed and preparing to leave for home, Tatum was surrounded by a group of sportswriters.

"Well, what can you say," he started. "We played a great game out there today, but the best team won. They came from behind and kept their heads, and that took poise."

"I can't say if it was the best game we have ever played, but it was certainly one of the best. I'll tell you one thing — I hope we don't play anybody better than Clemson."

When asked if he was surprised at the performance of the Clemson second unit, Tatum replied, "No, we weren't surprised by their second unit. After all, they beat Virginia last week."

Tatum stated that the Tar Heels were hurting specifically at fullback. Bob Shupin was out some 19 minutes when lime was kicked into his eye. He said that the Clemson spread formation with split ends hurt Carolina in the second half.

"They have two of the greatest fullbacks I have ever seen." But I think our boys did a great job of containing both of their quarterbacks, who are fine runners."

Someone asked Big Jim if he thought the Tar Heels were at all fooled by the Clemson split end formation, or any other. "We were at no time fooled by this or any other formation. We just had to play it that way," he remarked. By playing it "that way" he explained that the linebackers had to pull in to stop the running of the Clemson fullbacks, which set up the Tiger passing game.

"I'll tell you something else," Tatum said, "Clemson might not have looked good last week, and they may not look great next week, but this afternoon they were a great football team."

Later on, Tatum climbed the stairs of the field house, in search of Frank Howrad whom he wished to congratulate. In Howard's office he stated, "I don't think it's a good Clemson team. I think it's a great Clemson team."

Coach Howard told Tatum that, "You got a great football team, Jim."

Tatum told Howard he thought he had made excellent use of the material he had available. He also remarked that the coaches were surprisd at the Clemson tackles, both on offense and defense.

Howard replied, "Last week week when Pat Preston scouted us, he told the press that we had a great backfield, but he had seen better lines coached by me. I put that up on the buletin board. What that statement did was make a bunch of sluggish linemen un-sluggish."

When asked if he was happy about beating Jim Tatum for the first time, Howard cracked, "Of course I'm happy to beat old Jim for the first time. But you can bet on this —I don't think Jim Tatum will lose no more."

The Carolina Tar Heels have lost their second football game in two weeks. The first week they fumbled the game away, looking anything like a football team only in spots. The next week they were a sharp, co-ordinated unit.

The next week they played a truly great game, and lost. Against Clemson the Tar Heels fought on even terms throughout the afternoon. The statistics at the end of the contest bear this out. Is Clemson a better football team than Carolina? Saturday they were.

COULD HAVE GONE EITHER WAY

The Tar Heels could have won the game as easily as they lost it. Ask any one of the over 40,000 fans who jammed their way into the new Clemson Memorial Stadium.

Who got the breaks? As it turned out, nobody. Carolina recovered one Clemson fumble and intercepted one Tiger pass. The Tar Heels did not fumble once, nor did they have one single pass picked off. Clemson's first two touchdowns came on rather odd situations, some would call it getting the breaks.

FIRST TD ON BLOCKED KICK

The first touchdown came as a result of a blocked quick kick. As Don Coker started to kick the ball, Clemson's left guard, Jim Paine, crashed through the line and deflected the ball. Teammate Jim Padgett grabbed it on the fly and ran the remaining thirty yards for the score.

The second Tiger touchdown, which enabled them to go into the dressing room at halftime tied up 14-14, was scored just at the end of the half. The Tigers had run steadily toward the Tar Heel goal. On the preceding play, the fullback had tried the center of the Carolina line from 1 yard out and was thrown back. As the seconds ticked off on the clock, the Tigers hurriedly broke from the huddle and called the play.

LESS THAN A SECOND

Doug Cline went over from less than a yard out. Some said the clock had run out. It appeared that this wastrue from the press box, and Jim Tatum was one of those who thought so. This much is for sure — there was less than one second left when the ball was snapped.

The other two touchdowns the Tigers scored were on sustained drives. The last, and winning, score came with just 2:56 left in the ball game. The Tar Heels never caught up.

We are not crying over the first two Clemson touchdowns. We are stating that the Tar Heels played a great game, and deserved to win as much as did the Tigers.

There was no one player who stood out above all others on the Carolina side of the ledger. They all played well. For this reason there is no Athlete of the Week in this issue of The Daily Tar Heel. To single out one man in such a game would be to slight many others.

EVERYONE WAS GOOD

Sophomore John Schroeder, who caught the first touchdown pass, played well. So did sophomore Sonny Folkomer, who threw it. Both Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe called an excellent game. Backfielders Bob Shupin, Don Coker, Moe DeCantis, Wade Smith, and Jim Schuler all performed with equal talent.

Ronnie Koes, Phil Blazer, Al Goldstein, Mac Turlington, and Fred Swearingen played a great game in the line, and this is only to mention a few names at random.

One thing is certain—if the Tar Heels play the rest of their games as well as they did against Clemson, the opposition can watch out. Southern Cal furnishes the opposition this week, and the Tar Heels have lost two straight. Somebody's going to get burned.

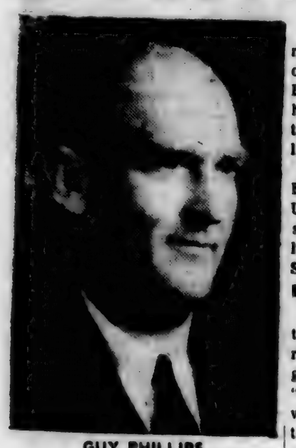
Education Leaders Warned Of Two Pitfalls By Phillips



GUY PHILLIPS
. . . warns education leaders

HICKORY—Educational leaders must beware the pitfalls of mediocrity and conformity, Prof. Guy B. Phillips of Chapel Hill warned here Tuesday at a 10-county district meeting of the North Carolina Education Assn.

A member of the State Board of Education and former dean of the UNC School of Education, Phillips spoke before a Principals Assn. luncheon on "A New Look at School Administrators."

ENEMY AND TEMPTATION

"Satisfaction with mediocrity" is the educational leaders most serious enemy and' 'conformity his greatest temptation," Phillips said. "The leader must be one who is willing and able to experiment intelligently in the processes of organization and management in teaching and supervision, and in human relations."

Education work also requires "courage tempered by wisdom," the UNC professor said. "It is not a profession for a timid soul, neither is it the opportunity for the radical reformer."

Emphasis on the operational techniques in school administration has given way to stress on the development of leadership qualities, he continued. Not only "know how" in the mechanics of educational management, but they must possess the "know what" and "know why."

BEST PREPARATION

Phillips added that a combination of course work, field experiences and a satisfactory internship is best for preparing public school leaders.

"The school administrator must stand ready to answer the old Biblical question, 'Is it well with the child?' Phillips said.". Over one million North Carolina children are today looking to him or to her for the answer. It is not well with the North Carolina child when:

1. "The state, the community and the nation fail to cooperatively provide and guarantee safe space, qualified staff and a comprehensive program which is in keeping with the modern world.

2. "The taxpayer and his representatives fail to put the full value of the property and taxing power behind the child.

3. "The state allows a child to remain in a building which is a fire hazard, has a basic structural defect or lacks the modern facilities of light, heat and sanitation.

4. "The child is denied the challenge to high quality of performance either by misplacing him in the group or by the absence of creative leadership.

5. "The child is not given adequate guidance and direction for his journey into a new and highly competitive world.

6. "The school program allows too much undirected freedom during a period of immaturity.

7. "The pressure of the community and of the school schedule take away from the child large periods of school time for related activities valuable as outside experience but not substitutes for significant learning."

Larry McElroy Plans To Run For YDC Post

Larry McElroy, UNC law student from Marshall, has announced his candidacy for the office of treasurer of the North Carolina Young Democrats Club.

McElroy has served in the YDC for several years and has been a delegate to the 1955, 1956 and 1957 State YDC conventions. In 1955 he was chosen co-chairman of the Democratic workshop.

He graduated from UNC in 1956. While an undergraduate he was president of the Di Senate, Student Party floor leader and parliamentarian of the student legislature and a member of the Amphoterothen Society.

On campus McElroy has served on the executive committee of the Carolina YDC for two terms and is the present club treasurer. He was elected to the state Democratic convention from his home county, Madison, in 1958.

In announcing his candidacy McElroy said, "I feel that I will be of service to the many young Democrats in North Carolina, and if I am elected it is my desire to attend as many local YDC meetings as humanly possible, and I will do my utmost to be of assistance to any Democrat and to any local YDC

SAYS UNC PSYCHOLOGIST

Wise Call Can Do More Than Reference Letter

One judiciously-placed telephone call checking up on a job-hunter can do more good than six letters of reference which have been inspired by the applicant.

This statement was made by Dr Dorothy C. Adkins of the UNC Dept. of Psychology at the International Conference on Public Personnel Administration in Chicago.

Declaring in advance her "prejudices" in selecting people for government jobs, Dr. Adkins submitted a plan for a modern program of personnel selection.

The new plan suggested by Dr. Adkins includes initial applications at the end of high school, or business course graduation or graduation from college—and repeated checks afterwards, by inquiries, investigations and examinations.

Batteries of tests would include verbal comprehension, computational ability, one or more space factors, verbal reasoning, nonverbal reasoning, mechanical comprehension, perceptual speed and possibly a memory, factor, she added.

Interviews, achievements tests, telephone inquiries, and other tests including physical examinations "at the point of hiring" were advocated.

Audit Board Discusses Plans For More Use Of Fund Office

The Student Audit Board, at a meeting Monday discussed the possibility of increasing participation in the use of the Student Activities Fund office. Plans were made for a form letter and a brochure.

This office currently handles the over-all accounting for many campus groups. But the Audit Board is urging other organizations to bring their general accounting needs to the Student Activities Fund office.

The fees for auditing work are comparatively small.

Erwin Fuller, a member of the Board, said Monday, the Audit Board is currently preparing a letter telling of the facilities available in the Activities Fund office. The Board is also working on a brochure of the office's operation.

The Student Activities Fund, provided for in the student constitution, handles nearly -120,000 a year for campus groups.

Chairman of the Audit Board is Don Gray. Other members, in addition to Fuller, include: Bob Carter, John Owens nad John Brooks. Faculty adviser is Dr. Harold Langenderfer of the Business Administration School.

Rain Expected Today; Clear This Weekend

The off-again, on-again showers of Tuesday are expected to continue today, according to a report from the Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham airport.

Thursday will bring probable clearing and cooler weather.

The Weather Bureau reports predicted cool, clear weather through Saturday and Sunday.

news in brief

Russia Resumes Testing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russia has resumed its nuclear weapons tests, the Atomic Energy Commission said Tuesday night.

"Two detonations were detected," an AEC announcement said. "Both took place north of the Arctic circle and were of moderate to high yield."

Russia announced on March 31 that they were suspending such weapons tests, but they left the way open for a resumption if the United States and Great Britain did not follow suit.

U. S. Calledl nsincere

TOKYO, (AP)—Red China's Premier Chou En-Lai has accused the United States of insincerity at the Warsaw talks aimed at easing Formosa Strait tension.

Speaking at a reception on the eve of Red China's ninth anniversary, Chou rejected a cease-fire—calling it a' 'preposterous" U. S. demand. He demanded a complete withdrawal of U. S. forces from the Formosa area, Radio Peiping said.

Chou's speech contained nothing to warrant optimism over the Warsaw talks.

Almond May Reopen Sc

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said Tuesday he hopes to move within the next few days to reopen Virginia's integration-closed schools.

His forecast to a news conference coincided with a request from the City Council of Norfolk—where six of the nine affected schools are located—that he reopen and operate the schools under the police power of the state.

U. S. Ready To Negotiate

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States once more declared its readiness Tuesday to discuss proposals for German reunification.

It offered to take them up at a summit meeting, or in a separate four-power group as suggested by Western Germany.

Britain and France took the same position in answering recent notes from West Germany and the Soviet Union.

Professors From Munich To Talk Thursday Night

A specialist in German philosophy, history and folklore from the University of Munich will give a public lecture here Thursday night at 8 o'clock in the Wilson Library Assembly Room.

Prof. Helmut Motekat, who is spending several months in the U. S. giving university lectures and attending conferences, will speak on "Recent Trends in Contemporary German Literature (1945-1958)."

All interested persons have been invited to join UNC faculty and students for the lecture.

The UNC Dept. of Germanic Languages and Literature, headed by Prof. John Kunstmann, is sponsoring Professor Motekat's lectures here.

Elections In Men's Dorms Draw Good Voting Turnout

VOTING FOR DORMITORY OFFICERS—Tuesday's cloudy and rainy weather didn't prevent some UNC students shown above from stopping to vote for dormitory officers. The election was held in all dormitories except for five that elected officers last spring.

BoardElects John Minter Treasurer

The Publications Board yesterday approved The Daily Tar Heel plans for revising its advertising department, and elected John Minter business manager of The Carolina Handbook and Daily Tar Heel assistant advertising manager, to the position of Publications Board treasurer.

In other action, the Board elected Walker Blanton to serve in Minter be unable to serve. Blan-Minterb e unable to serve. Blanton is business manager of The Daily Tar Heel.

The Board discussed the possibility of having profits made by student publications revert back to the publications or the Board.

The new newspaper advertising set-up provides for salesmen on a commission basis to cover various routes including downtown Chapel Hill, Durham, and the outlying sectors of Chapel Hill and Carrboro

The system places the advertising manager in a coordinating position, and provides for maximum saturation of the advertising area around Chapel Hill.

According to business manager Walker Blanton and Editor Curtis Gans, this system ought to provide for a larger paper eventually and put the paper on a sound financial footing.

Bridge Winners Named

Twenty-seven couples participated in Monday night's regular duplicate game at Graham Memorial. Following is a list of student winners:

North-South: Dan Duke and Malcolm Clark, first place; Mary Fortune and Dick Potthoff, second place; Anne and Gray McAllister, fifth place.

15 Dorms Vote For Officers

A large turnout was reported in the balloting for offficers of 15 men's dormitories yesterday.

Rudy Edwards, president of the IDC, said last night that 97 per cent of the residents in Lewis dormitory had voted.

Elected to head the three new dorms were: Harvey Wilkinson of Avery, Robert J. Covington of Parker and George Mayo of Teague.

Other officers and dorms include:

AYCOCK, vice president, Bill Norton; secretary-treasurer, Wayne Summer; intramural manager, John Frye;

AVERY, vice president, Joe DeBlasio; secretary, Stanley Tucker; treasurer, Bill Dunsten; IDC representative, Jeff White; intramural manager, Stanley Nelson;

Plans Discussed Here For Relations Meeting

Plans for a southern students conference dealing with race relations were discussed here this weekend by a group of students and other individuals, including the immediate past president and the incumbent head of the National Student Association.

The group meeting here, known as the Steering Committee for the Southern Human Relations Conference, scheduled a race relations conference for the weekend during Thanksgiving at Pfeiffer College. Representatives from approximately 75 colleges throughout the South are expected to attend.

During the formal meeting of the committee Saturday in the Grail Room in Graham Memorial, Pfeiffer College in Misenheimer, N. C., was selected as the location. Other business included organizing a program of workshop and discussion groups and deciding on procedure at the conference.

FIVE SPEAKERS

The committee also decided to secure the following speakers: Weldon James, journalist; Benjamin Mayo, president of Morehouse in Atlanta; James McBride Bebs, author; Will Campbell of the National Council of Churches; and Warren Ashbee of Woman's College.

Final arrangements for the conference will be in the hands of a interior committee selected from the Chapel Hill-Durham area.

"The Southern Students Human Relations Conference was first proposed at the NSA Congress held last January. After this regional session, meetings were conducted in the South in which representives were chosen to meet in Atlanta for the first planning convention.

PHILOSOPHY

The philosophy of the conference was setup in five points:

1. To be an open conference, with no predetermined commitments to one view;

2. To provide a more full understanding of the total problem;

3. To provide knowledge for the solution of specific problems by getting campuses to share ideas, and methods of meeting situations;

4. To stimulate post-conference concern for race problems which would manifest itself in responsible student action;

5. To help open continuous channels of communication.

Members of the Steering Committee at the meeting here included representatives from such sponsoring groups as YMCA, YWCA, National Council of Chruches, United Student Christian Council, National Student Association and Hillel.

AIM IS TO HELP PLEDGES ADJUST

Several Practices Confront New Members Of Fraternities

By DAVIS YOUNG and JAMIE HOLMES

(This is the third in a series on fraternities by Jamie Holmes and Davis B. Young, members of The Daily Tar Heel editorial staff.)

After pledging a fraternity a new member is confronted with several practices which each house has to help the pledge adjust to a scholastic and social life.

BIG BROTHER

Soon after he has been signed the new pledge is assigned a Big Brother whose purpose is to help the "plebe" with any personal problem concerning school work or fraternity relationships. This is handled by a committee to whom the pledge has indicated his preference for Big Brother after he has become well acquainted with all the chapter actives.

To further insure an adjustment to scholastic life the fraternity house sponsors a collection of past tests which have been given for finals by university faculty members. Several house-managers have reported that their house scholarship-chairmans are anxious to improve these "quiz files" this coming academic season for the benefit of fraternity members.

Each fraternity holds a "house" or "lodge" meeting every Wednesday night. Though this meeting is attended only by initiated brothers the pledges usually have a similar meeting at the same time in a different part of the house.

Normally a pledge class will have its own set of officers and an executive committee which is responsible to the president of the house.

At these meetings ordinary parliamentary procedure is followed. Roll is called, minutes are read, committee reports are heard, and old and new business is explored. The main feature of the meeting is a discussion on "house good and welfare."

At this time pledges are discussed, complaints about the menu are heard, and chapter brothers' dates are either chastised or praised. Any disharmony within the fraternity is aired and debated among all members in search of a solution.

COMPULSORY STUDY

An issue on which fraternities have various policies is that of compulsory study halls for the pledges. Of ten fraternities questioned six have comypulsory study hours every evening Monday through Thursday. The others make provisions of some sort, such as waiting until med-term grades are announced, then stipulating study hours accordingly on an individual basis.

If, after the pledge has completed his pre-initiation period, he has been able to adjust to his fraternity policies and practices, he is given an opportunity to "de-pledge." Last year 16 out of a random sample of 160 pledges de-pledged (ten per cent) because of personal or financial reasons.

Jefferies Asks Students To List Correct Address

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, Tuesday asked all UNC students to put their correct return address on mail they send out.

Many students have not done so, he said, and "hundreds of letters" have come to the office of the dean of student affairs for delivery.

"The Post Office doesn't give directory service," he said, "and letters addressed simply to 'University of North Carolina' won't be delivered to the student here.

Jefferies said several people in his office have been working on getting the mail to the proper destination but that such delivery "sometimes takes a week or more."

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

George Wheeler Cox, John Nelson Hunter, Bodan Michael Zielnicki, Richard Curry Stoker, John Rainey Parker, Thomas Lee Isenhour, Robert McDonald Diggs, John Edwin Reeves, Jerome Robertson Adams, Richard Gordon Cashwell and Donald Grey Newlin.

On The Blackball

Some of the rushees have already been blackballed or not invited to return to a specific fraternity. Individual fraternity members have done this on the basis of a two minute conversation or on the basis of the individual's appearance.

This obviously is the longest time available for each individual member of the house to interview a student, since the total rush time is only about three hours a night, and there is more than one house to go to.

It seems slightly incomprehensible that in this short time, no matter how much information has been received about a freshman prior to rush, that a decision not to accept can be made. But it is, and although the time is a little longer by about five times, the freshman's acceptance is made in a similar manner with no real chance to evaluate a person's character, nor any real chance for the freshman to study the individuals that comprise a house.

Taken in the context that all this judging is done in the most stilted of circumstances—in rush parties where both the fraternity and the rushee are on guard to put their best foot forward and to see that no social vice is committed. An accurate appraisal of either the fraternity or the rushee is almost impossible. Yet, decisions are made under these circumstances — decisions which may radically alter the lives of many students.

The idea of the blackball is not wrong, since any fraternity has a right to selectivity, but the idea that a blackball can be placed on a person, that a person can be accepted, or that a person can differentiate between one house and another or even to join in the short space of a week under these adverse conditions is absurd.

The quick sale that fraternities put on at present is effective, but it is not giving the rushee an accurate picture of fraternity life. There is a remedy.

Election Laws

Two really significant changes are being contemplated for election law revision—the first being elimination of all class officers and the second, the holding of only one election each year.

These would represent significant changes for the better.

Class officers have served in the past only to supply students with lines under their picture in the year book. They have had no duties, they have done nothing constructive toward bringing anything to their class or the campus, and with the exception of the senior class president, they have done nothing even in a ceremonial way.

Obviously these are unnecessary offices. Obviously they clutter up a ballot needlessly, and equally obviously, the people who win these offices do not deserve them in that they have done nothing to deserve them.

The second change is more far reaching and perhaps of even greater merit.

Every year, the student body is beseiged twice by deluges of posters, material, and walking advertisements in the form of candidates seeking office. Many of these candidates have not been in school longer than five weeks prior to election, many will not stay in legislature more than two weeks after election.

The Student Legislature annually appropriates $120,000 of student money, and people need more than five weeks experience on this campus to do the job. Further, there would be no further difficulty of six months seats, and the programs of each party could properly be evaluated by the student body with the hope that their mandate at the annual election be reflected in the legislators that they chose. This is not possible under the present system. The problem of continuity in judicial offices is not a major factor, since this should be a function of proven competence and interest over the year. Re-election should and will occur.

Finally some thought should be put to revising the laws providing for replacement of legislators. Many times parties nominate electable people in order to enable them to gain seats. Then, these legislators drop out because of lack of interest and must be replaced. These replacements do not neces sarily reflect the point of view that the electorate originally voted for. Hence, the representative system breaks down.

It is hoped that those revising election laws will try to get a system working that will allow the parties to replace only a certain number of legisla tors with valid reasons for leaving the legislature, in order that a representative system be set up, and truly competent and willing people run. This might make campus democracy valuable.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Sunday, Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N.C., under the Act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

Chalk up one more novel about young girls discovering old devil sex. We will have to only chalk it up because there is hardly room enough to place it on the bulging shelves which are filled with its contemporaries.

The latest erotic masterpiece, entitled THE BEST OF EVERYTHING, was written by a 26-year-old Radcliffe graduate, Rona Jaffe. It is the day-by-day, season - by - season story of five girls who have graduated from their respective colleges and high schools and still remain empty-handed. One of the girls is a great deal similar in biography to Miss Jaffe herself and one wonders if this book is not slightly autobiographical — as are most novels by young girls.

So these girls all migrate to New York . . . and get jobs . . . and hunt men in their spare time. Out of the five, two land untouched young men. These two men are not the most desirable looking creatures in the world but at least they are available which seems to be the main qualification in Miss Jaffe's book. The third girl manages to re-domesticate a nice second-hand forty year old whose fingers are still inkstained from signing divorce papers. The fourth girl accidentally falls down a flight of stairs outside her lover's apartment — she had been leaning against the wall listening to her boyfriend make love with another girl on the other side of the wall—and dies. The fifth girl finally says oh the hell with it and goes to Las Vegas with a bedroom athlete from Hollywood and here our charming story ends.

Moral of the story: Little girls who don't watch out sometimes get sealed to mail before they are stamped.

I must admit that Grace Metalious' little effort seems extremely rural beside this leatest creation. Jaffe's characters are New Yorkers and educated at that. Therefore they can think of more original things to say while engaged in America's favorite indoor sport.

I suppose I will have to start reading Little Modern Library Classics if I am ever going to learn how to write a good book myself. Obviously nothing at all is to be gleaned from this new trend of fiction except lessons on bedroom technique.

As Edmund Fuller says: "Many writers today seem compelled to diagram precisely what is involved in the sex act, either to let the reader know, or to reassure themselves that they haven't forgotten. Some of their novels could be moved from the fiction section to the "Do It Yourself" shelf.

Letters

Dear Mr. Wolff,

Sunday's Daily Tar Heel you noted your agreement with the New York City Board Of Hospital's decision to lift the ban on birth control. I cannot concur, I believe with the Catholic Church that artificial birth control is unnatural and against the Will of God.

I wonder how many New York women will need further medical aid to relieve them from the nervous tensions and guilt feelings that the irresponsibilty of using contraceptives will produce?

Editor:

To the best of my knowledge the term existialism is defined as follows: "An introspective humanism or theory of man which expresses the individual's intense awareness of his contingency and freedom; a theory which states that the existence of the individual precedes his essence." I was somewhat jarred by Anthony Wolff's statement that B. B. appears in her films as a "kissing existentialist." Does he really believe this? If he does, I would be interested to know where he drew his inference. If he doesn't, which I am more inclined to believe, I think he was little free with his words. Poetic license is usually confined to poetry and, even then, there is supposed to be a reasonable excuse for it. .

Communist Rule Imminent; Concerted Action A Must

Joe John

Hidden in one of the dreary compartments of the Kremlin is a little black date book. The year 1973 holds the last of many entries. The slightly faded edges of the letters indicate age. Those graphic Russian symbols have been on that page many years.

In 1973, less than fifteen years from today, communist Russia will successfully accomplish world domination. That is the meaning of those illegible characters.

Within the next nine years, Soviet leadership expects to achieve consolidation of its progress in Asia and isolation of the United States. One may easily wonder if the latter has not already occurred.

With the intrepid determination and skillful organization of the Communists established facts, it is very difficult to regard the above statements without a touch of bewilderment, even fear. This must become more intense when we learn that in 1952, basic Soviet strategy renounced the inevetability of World War III.

The Kremlin considers military might merely as a stalemate. Under this hypothesis, Russian resources are applied more fully to propoganda, and political and economic warfare. Therein lies the great American failure in combatting the Communist goal of global conquest.

The United States is striving for victory almost wholly in a materialistic plane, particularly in its attitudes toward other nations. Our program budget-wise, consists of opproximately $40 billion for military weapons, about $3 to $4 billion for material assistance, and finally only a small fragment for purposes of information, education, and, if may use the term, spiritual warfare.

On the other and, the Communists while maintaining adequate aid programs, relentlessly pursue an idiological attack. This is primarily directed towards a most vulnerable area—that of the student intellectual.

The nature of the appeal is twofold. By association with the Communist Party, a student may first participate in the conquest of the world. Following this, he may be an agent in a program to change human nature, to perfect human character, and to populate the earth with a new quality of personality, infinitely superior to any ever recorded in history.

It is not impossible to sense the religiousity in the approach, in that a student's life may be utilized for the regeneration of all mankind, through the scientific Communist method. Unite this with the denial of all Natural Law, that results from Godlessness and the belief that morality exists only in any act which advances the Communist aim. The result is a dynamic appeal that a student infatuated with his own precosity and with techniques of science finds hard to resist.

What, then, can be done in the face of such adversity? The answer lies in the knowledge and comprehension of the nature of the threat that exists. From this must emit dedicated public character in all parts of the world against it.

Freedom-conscious people exist in every country. It is to them that the American government and its citizens must give encouragement and friendship; for it is they who must carry the message of individual worth and of the herilight of a personal faith. Dynamic tage of man, interpreted in the men, motivated by firm conviction, must be the source of right for—and the educators of—their own nationality.

The Communist advance in recent decades in terrifying; the possibility of the fullment of Khrushchev's boast, "We will bury," looms closer every day.

It's something to think about; but more than that, it's something to act against.

Meaning Of Education At UNC

Fred Weaver

If I could name the thing which I most desire for every student who comes to the University, it is that he be profoundly touched by the transforming and liberating power of learning and so affected by teachers, books, and college life as to become a self-motivated student, a self-sufficient individual. It is not reasonable to expect that this will happen to all; but it is possible for many and essential to any real understanding of the meaning of education.

Somewhere along the line something quite remarkable must happen, something so vivid that its impact is unmistakable. Perhaps you will take Franch literature, and if you really understand Voltaire, de Vigny, or Chateaubriand, you will find that you have entered a new realm of thought. Perhaps the meaning of "Dover Beach" will come across to you quite suddenly and you will discover that a poem contains the power to transform. "In a right angle triangle the square on the hypotenuse is equal to the sum of squares of the other two legs" you will recite. Possibly one day you will decide that memory is not sufficient authority for knowledge and strive to see the fact as Pythagoras himself saw it writing in the sand. Such experiences are rare and memorable. But they are the promise of learning more than a grade of A, more even than Phi Beta Kappa. John Keats at the very pitch of excitement from reading Chapman's translation of Homer wrote an ode which expresses the thrill of intellectual discovery.

Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken;
Or like stout Cortez when with eagle eyes
He star'd at the Pacific—and all his men
Look'd at each other with a wild surmise—

Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

No one can say all the meanings of education. But I have come as close as I know how to saying something of its quality.

To me the moment of dawning truth is at least the taste of Liberal Education, the witness of its intrinsic worth, the only admissible "proof" of education.

To be sure, you are under the necessity of choosing a vocation and preparing for it. I cannot emphasize too much the desirability of determining upon your life's work at the earliest possible moment, for success in one's work is a measure of education. But there is a meaning of education which is above and beyond vocation and which imparts power to any vocation. It is a liberating power. It is the meaning of the University moto: Lux et Libertas.

I have not of late years been much impressed by statements purporting to define or describe an educated man. I suppose it has been 15 years since I reacted with anything more than respectful attention to such efforts—that is, 15 years before this past June.

At Commencement this June our baccalaureate preacher was Dr. Albert Outler of Southern Methodist University. I was rather surprised when in the course of his sermon I heard him say, "Let me describe an educated person as briefly as I can." "What," I thought to myself," does he think he is doing? Will he be so foolhardy as to try to tell hte assembled graduating class and many of the faculty what an educated person is?" I have it here. I think you will agree that he was not foolhardy.

Statistics Tell Sad South Tale

Nick Bagdasarian

While browsing through "The Alumni Review" I came across an account of Dr. S. H. Hobbs Jr.'s book, "North Carolina: An Ecomonic and Social Profile."

What struck me as most unusual, was Dr. Hobbs' statistics concerning the "average Tar Heel." According to his book, the average North Carolinean has had only 7.9 years of schooling, while but a meager I out of 95 ever attends college.

In addition, North Carolina is 44th among the states in average income—1,236 per capita. When coupled with the fact that more people move out of this state than into it, a gloomy picture may be drawn as to the future of North Carolina.

However, it is said that North Carolina leads the South. But with the statistics mentioned above, can we honestly claim that distinction?

Ironically enough, we can, but only because the rest of the South is as backward as we are.

What the South needs today is leadership; leadership in politics, in education, and in agriculture. Gone forever are the Polk's, the Lee's, and the Randolph's. And in their place who fills the void? No other but the Leroy Collins', the Luther Hodges', and the Frank Clements: the retrogressionists of today's modern era.

Gone forever are the days of our political potentness, when the South was always represented by at least one presidential candidate. In its crumbled remains we find on election day the choice between a former governor from Illinois and a retired general from Kansas.

As we realize the state of our own inadequacy, one begins to wonder how and why we ever reached such a low ebb. There are many answers:: our own lack of initiative, poor living conditions, and a finger of guilt may even be pointed at our own federal government.

And where do we, the inexperienced future of today's South fit in? Are we to write a new chapter or shall we, too, continue in the downward trend of the 20th century.

Often quoted is Don Furtado's statement that "America cannot wait much longer."

Well, as far as that goes, neither can the South.

On Awakeing

P. W. Carlton

In today's riot of esthetic activity and scientific progress, it is indeed a vitally interesting scene that presents itself to the average American. It is therefore amazing that sleepers, having temporarily departed to the land of Nod, find it so difficult to return to this Valhalla of the universe, the consciousness of physical existence: in other words to get out of the rack.

Consider the many varied modes of awakening exhibited by the UNC student, for instance. My roommate is a touching example of sad reluctance with regards to arising. After the "sweet alarms" of our Big Ben, he promptly emits heart-rending groans and remains prostrate, sighing regularly every few seconds. No amount of coaxing and cajoling can sway him from his dedicated purpose, that of savoring the last wisps of Morpheus' soothing drug. Unfortunately, the rather ephemeral nature of this gaseous commound renders reclamation nigh impossible. Eventually he will be forced to arise and face ugly reality. (Rotten attitude).

Sleepers, or "sack rats," as they are commonly called exhibit many diversified mannerisms in their reveille activities. Some leap enthusiastically from bed, only to leap back with even greater alacrity as their feet touch the icy floor. There are those that struggle upright, eyes tightly closed and lumber to the shower, guiding their leaden steps by leaning against the walls. It is this group that is usually found standing around in the head staring at the walls, draped over the lavatories, or dead asleep under the showers. Their conversations are limited to friendly assertions like "Get the hell out of my way" and "go to the devil" when approached by others.

Most of these rebellious souls come alive after a shot of Lenoir's coffee. Tears of gratitude come to their eyes and they usually cough appreciatively as the first delicious swallow goes down, gently removing the lining from their stomach. They become quite animated, chatting volubly about almost anything until the approach of 8 o'clock class sends them into deep gloom. Then they resignedly depart in pursuit of intellectual improvement.

It is really quite unnecessary to make such a chore of rising. The world is so full of good things to do and experiences to share that we should be ashamed to dampen all enthusiasm with morbid irascibility. My matins are an example of the way to arise.

My clock gently shakes me into fuzzy awareness at precisely 7:00 a.m. I usually remain still for a few seconds, quietly studying the designs painted on the insides of my eyelids, and visible only with eyes closed and crossed. (What an advertising medium this would be—eyeball contact with your patrons.) Then, as I discover that the sounds I'm receiving are those of the clock accompanied by Roommate's cursing, I roll over and smash my nose on the little iron bar running across the end of my bed .Clutching my offended beak in one hand, I snap off the alarm with the other and slide over the side, landing on the floor with a thud, knees first. Remaining thus until the agony subsides, I rise to my feet and don shower clogs and washrag, and thus modestly attired proceed to the shower. My eye always brightens as I enter and see my buddy from down the hall. He and I have a perpetual shaving contest, matching the virtues of my safety razor against his noisy electric shaver. In our bouts I always win, but what price glory? I end up looking like an advertisement for Medic and he is unscathed. He usually helps me wipe the gore off my face, however and we part fast friends. Immediately afterwards my Roommate and I depart, I to the consideration of things esthetic and he to the contemplation of the pleasures of the flesh.

You see, there's really nothing distasteful about waking up, so why not take the initiative, face the sun boldly and receive thereby a richer portion of the wonderful gifts of life and being. For life is good and living is an intoxication fit for kings. What more can mortal man desire than existence and the love of his fellows.

Letter On The Islands

Editor:

There has been a lot of hand-wringing about the hopeless drift toward war in the Far East. Actually, we can get out of the trouble the same way we got into it. The original mistake, as your columnists have pointed out, was to "unleash Chiang Kai-shek." We allowed him to take an advanced position that would involve us in a war with Red China. Although this war would suit his interests, it would not suit ours. It would certainly be long and costly of lives, and could easily turn into an atomic world war.

The way to avoid such a mess is to leash him up again. We could force him to abandon the offshore islands, and then the 100 miles of ocean between the two Chinas would enforce a truce. We could, at the same time, station a division of troops on Formosa to serve notice that we plan to sacrifice neither principles nor peoples to a conqueror. It is already clear that these actions would not be viewed as appeasement by the rest of the world, but as a wise step toward peace.

The ticklish question is how to force Chiang to withdraw. This could be done, I should think, by a series of threats. We would first threaten to announce publicly that we will not participate in the defense or supply of the islands. If Chiang defies us, then we do just that. The next threat would be to recognize Red China and her title to the offshore islands. Chiang would know by this time that we were not bluffing, and would certainly withdraw, unless he were genuinely interested in leading a mass suicide. Even the latter contingency would be better than to start fighting World War III.

WUNC Operas Scheduled For Fridays At 8 P.M.

Fridays, 8 p.m. — that's the time the UNC Extension Division schedules opera on WUNC FM (91.5), with Norman Cordon as commentator.

The 1958 fall opera season features the following in Oct.: "La Tosca" by Puccini, "Lucia Di Lammermoor" and "L'Elisir D'Amore" by Donizetti, "Aida" and "La Forza Del Destino" by Verdi.

"Faust" by Gounod will open the November opera schedule. Bizet's "The Pearl Fishers," "Lakme" by Delibes, and "Mignon" by Thomas are scheduled for the remainder of the month.

December's highlight will be the Christmas show with "L'Enfant Et Les Sortileges" by Ravel and "Amahl and the Night Visitors" by Menotti.

The season officially opened with Rossini's "The Barber of Seville" on Sept. 26.

YACK PICTURES

Senior picture taking for the Yackety Yack have been extended through Friday. All seniors are urged to have their pictures made before this time if they have not already done so.

This will be the deadline for senior pictures.

Ten New Books You'll Enjoy

Here are the books people will be talking about this year. You'll want to own some of them, and, fiends that we are, we've selected them especially to tempt you.

We might add that, if you're broke, looking is free at the old Intimate — just as free as the ice cream we give away at text time!

Around the World with Auntie Mayme, by Patrick Dennis. That rip-roaring whacky old biddie is at it again! Gird up your sides and prepare to laugh. $3.95

Doctor Zhivago, by Boris Pasternak. This controversial novel, smuggled out of Russia, promises to be the season's sensational best seller. You'll want it. $5.00

The Dharma Bums, by Jack Kerouac. The Beat Generation beats again! Beat it right in for your copy. $3.95

Lolita, by Vladimir Nabokov. Well gracious sakes alive! magine Lolita in stock! $5.00

The Lost Country, by J. R. Salamanca. The story of a boy growing up in Virginia. Nice, we thought. $5.00

On The Philosophy of History, by Jacques Maritain. The distinguished Thomist philosopher on a subject that has needed his restraint. $3.50

War and Peace in the Space Age, by Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin. The military point of view on our present dilemma. $5.00

The Russian Revolution, by Alan Moorehead. A masterpiece of organization and lucidity. $5.00

The United States Air Force on the Ballistic Missle. Contributors of great authority lend weight to this frightening picture of our Science-fiction future. $4.00

Inside the Democratic Party, by Jack Redding. An insider gives a fascinating account of what goes on behind the party facade during a political campaign. $4.50

Virginia Frosh Will Be Better

The freshman football team that the University of Virginia fields against the Tar Babies this Friday in Charlottesville figures to be a vast improvement over the squad which took a 32-6 pasting from the Carolina frosh last season.

Dick Voris, the new head coach of the Cavaliers, has hand-picked this year's Cavalier frosh in an attemp to build Virginia into a conference power. Voris has publicly stated that he was not satisfied with the recruiting job done by his predecessor Ben Martin and that he intends to do something about it.

HARDING COACHES

This year's Cavalieryearling coaching staff is made up of three former Virginia players. Charlie Harding is the head coach nad is being assisted by Joe Palurbo and Nelson Yarbrough.

Harding has three fine quarterback prospects in Stanley Fischer, Ted Kempski, and Ed Menzer. Fischer, from Bayside, Va., is the heaviest of the three at 190.

At the halfback positions Ted Denby, Hunter Faulconer, Jim Fiorelli, and Tony Sepp are being figured upon to deliver some punch to the ground attack. Landon Hilliard, the heaviest of the fullback candidates at 205, will be backed up by Tony Ulehla and Harold Rust.

HEAVY LINE

The Virginia frosh are expected to start an exceptionally heavy line from end to end. Tim Hapgood at 190 and Park Pinak, who weighs fifteen pounds more than Hapgood, figure to be the starting ends.

All three of the leading tackle prospects tip the scales at 220 or better. Ron Gassert, from Mt. Holly, N. J., is the heaviest of a trio which includes Henry Koehler and Milton Smith.

Tonight at 10 o'clock the Carolina Tar Heels will board a chartered airliner at Raleigh-Durham airport and head for the Golden State, where they will meet Southern California Friday night. The game begins at 8:15 out there, but 11:15 our time. It will be broadcast by WRAL, Raleigh.

The Stadium in which the contest will take place is the Los Angeles City Coliseum, with a capacity of 105,000. Two other fair-country ball clubs also play their home games in the coliseum—the Los Angeles Rams and UCLA.

TAR HEELS ARRIVE AT 6 A.M.

The Tar Heels will arrive in sunny California at 6 a.m. Thursday, our time 9 a.m. They will have made a brief stop in Denver for gas before crossing the Rockies. They will be housed in the beautiful Huntington-Sheraton Hotel in Pasadena, home of the famous Rose Bowl.

Thursday afternoon they'll work out in the spacious Coliseum. They are to have lunch in the Paramount Movie Studios. The workout is at 3.

FRIDAY'S SCHEDULE

On Friday the Heels will have breakfast, go for a walk, have a football meeting, lunch, a nap until 3:30, a snack supper, and then to the stadium for the game at 8:15.

Saturday the team will visit world-famous Disneyland in a group. Jim Schuler's parents, who live in nearby Santa Monica, have planned a small party for the players.

39 PLAYERS MAKE TRIP

Thirty-nine players, probably including the injured Daley Goff and Curt Hathaway, will make the trip. Goff's cast is scheduled to come off next Monday, and until that time nothing will be known as to his status.

The same starting line-up as usual will begin for the Tar Heels, although both Frank Riggs and Ed Lipski have been working out at fullback and looking very good.

LET'S HEAR SOME NOISE

Point of order—The controversial touchdown in the Clemson game which was scored just before the end of the half has brought up a question. Why isn't there a buzzer or whistle or some similar device to let everyone know when the half or game is over. Since the official time is kept on the scoreboard, and an official can't possibly watch the play and the clock at the same time, it looks like this would be a necessity.

The school of Southern California is located right in the heart of downtown Los Angeles, a sprawling city of some 4,000,000 inhabitants.

MESSED UP CONFERENCE

The Pacific Coast Conference, of which Southern Cal is a member, may be justly called the most messed up conference in America. Almost every school in the league has been caught for dirty recruiting and last fall most of the teams decided to pull out of the PCC for keeps. So, now they are going to form a new conference, which will include UCLA, Washington, Southern Cal, Washington State, California and possibly Stanford. The new league will be more independent than the old PCC, and will play more intersectional games. The old round, robin schedule didn't make enough money.

Heard in passing—It's rumored that some Duke alumni jumped on grid mentor Bill Murray about the way he dresses at games, namely sweat pants and sweat shirt. Is this possible . . .?

DEACS 19th . . . ?

Who would have thought it Department—Wake Forest ranked 19th by the United Press. This isn't surprising, it's amazing.

Although it was originally thought that center Ronnie Koes had a broken leg after the Clemson game; he is now officially OK and ready to go against Southern Cal. It seems that Ron had a bone deposit on his knee which he got in high school and the trainer didn't know about this, so assumed from the lump the leg was busted.

Cake Race

This year, for the first time in 20 years, the Intramurals Office will hold a cake race. This will be the 16th annual race, and the first held since it was discontinued in 1938. One winner with whom everyone is acquainted is Marv Allen. He was one of three winners in the 1903 race.

The course will start at Fetzer Field, and finish at the place of start. The entire distance is 1.55 miles, and the starting time is 4:15, October 9.

Persons may enter by reporting to Fetzer Field for 2 practice sessions between Sept. 29 and Oct. 8. All entrants must show their medical rating card.

There will be 2 divisions, an Open and a Novice division. Those who have been working out on the freshman cross-country team must enter the Open division and all others must enter the Novice division.

MURALS

The entries for the fall golf tournament are due no later than October 4. People who are interested in entering must play a qualifying score cards to Ed Kenny at the golf shop. The tournament will be on a match play basis, single elimination. The fee is 50c and entrants will be placed into flights according to their qualifying score. Students, faculty, towns people and all University officials are eligible. Play will start on October 6.

All entries for the fall tennis tournament are due on October 2. They will be based upon single eliminations in both singles and doubles divisions. Play will start on October 6, and trophies will be awarded to the winners.

Old Rancher Speakin

Wanted to tell you more about that there RANCH HOUSE. I got in there and a feller says had I saw the Mater Dee O'tell and I says no but I stayed at the Bilgewater Bungalows oncet. He says no that is a feller . Mater Dee. Funniest name I ever heered of excepting' Jugwater John that I knowed one time. I don't blame him for lookin' for somebody . . my it was dark in there! I stepped on this good-lookin' woman's foot and the feller with her says are you lookin' for somethin'? And I says nothin' but a crippled steer warmed over some charcoal so he says you've come to the right place. Come to think of it all the women looked good in that there place. Romantic as a barn-warmin' or a moonlight hog-butcherin'. The lightin' in that RANCH HOUSE would make Sophie Sizewater look like Clara Bow. And a feller come by and I thought he was selling' newspapers but it wasn't that . . . it took a paper that big to list the vittles they had. You git a chance go on out there to THE RANCH HOUSE, on the Airport Road, Chapel Hill. Real enjoyable.

Ike Says Country Has Duty To Comply With High Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower said Wednesday it is the duty of all Americans to comply with the Supreme Court's decrees on school integration rulings.

"Any other course, as I have said before," Eisenhower said in a news conference statement, "would be fraught with grave consequences to our nation."

The President didn't spell out the extent to which his administration might go in backing up the Supreme Court's decrees with more than words.

Nor in discussing the most pressing foreign policy issue of the day did he spell out what practical steps might be expected to follow any cease-fire in the Formosa Strait area.

"We shall have," if we have a cease-fire," Eisenhower said, "an opportunity to negotiate in good faith and that, I think, is about all you can say."

As a soldier, Eisenhower said, he believes it wasn't a good thing for the Chinese Nationalists to concentrate such large forces in the offshore islands of Quemoy and Matsu. But he also said he was not so sure demilitarization of the islands would solve the Far Eastern problem.

"As you well know," the President said, "the basic issue, as we see it, is to avoid retreat in the face of force.

"I don't know why the human is so constructed that he believes that possibly there is an easier solution, that you can by feeding aggression a little bit, a teaspoonful of something, that he won't see that they are going to demand the whole quart."

Eisenhower hadn't held a news conference since Aug. 27—five weeks ago.

Looking ruddy and robust after a vacation at Newport, R. I., Eisenhower walked through a drizzle from the White House to the news conference room in a building across the street.

At the start, he volunteered three brief announcements:

He is going to Walter Reed Army hospital this weekend—not because of any new illness but for his annual check-up.

This was a national day of prayer and he hoped newsmen would remind the people of it. (The President and Mrs. Eisenhower attended services later at National Presbyterian Church.)

The atomic-powered submarine Seawolf "has now been submerged continuously for 54 days and is still going strong." The old underwater record was 31 days.

Di Backs Bill On Recognition Of Exile Algeria

By ELLEN STEIN

The Dialectic Senate Tuesday night unanimously approved a bill advocating that the United States recognize the exile government in Algeria.

The bill presented a short history of the question to date. It stressed the imposition of French domination in Algeria which has resulted in violence and a denial of "inalienable rights" to the Algerian people; these acting as an incentive for revolutionary attempts and finally the establishment of an exile government by several Algerian leaders.

The initial argument for the affirmative was that "It is the responsibility of the United States to recognize this government in order that our advocacy of the principle of 'Government of the People' be adhered to."

Curtis Gans acknowledged that the exile government which was established in Cairo will be "allied with Nasser who wants economic self-sufficiency and will continue to play Russia against the United States."

But Gans also pointed out that France is certainly not powerful enough to make a difference.

Further elaboration was given to the subject of the injustice of Colonialism, which denies self-determination and national rights.

The argument for the negative side was developed upon the theory that Algeria does not want to be free. David Matthews supported his view by referring to the recent Algerian vote overwhelmingly in favor of the De Gaulle constitution.

However, Gary Greer, speaker for the affirmative, reported that the vote had no relation to Algerian freedom. Furthermore, he stated that the people of Algeria expressed their desire for freedom "by giving their lives to combat fascism, totalitarianism, and force."

State Student Enters Race For YDC Office

RALEIGH (AP)—The president of the North Carolina State College student body Wednesday threw his hat in the ring for forthcoming state Young Democratic Club elections.

James B. (Jimmy) Hunt Jr. of Rock Ridge announced his candidacy for college vice president in elections at the state YDC convention in Greenesboro on Saturday.

Hunt is a senior in agricultural education. He helped organize the State College YDC chapter in 1956, and now serves as its membership chairman.

TV Sets In New Dorms To Be Ready For Series

IDC President Rudy Edwards made a "very important" announcement yesterday:

TV sets in three new men's dormitories will be ready for use for the World Series games, which start today.

Working in conjunction with Student Body Treasurer Charles Gray, Edwards was able to get TV sets for Avery, Parker and Teague dorms in time for the baseball contest.

SOUTHERN CAL GAME

The Southern California-Carolina football game will be carried by WRAL radio in Raleigh by remote pickup. The game gets underway at 11:15 our time Friday night.

HONORED BY ARGENTINE ASSOCIATION—Two UNC Political Science professors have been made members of an academy of political science in Argentina, partly because of their recent book, "Government of Latin America." The joint authors are Professor Federico Gil, left, and Dr. W. W. Pierson.

Tillich Talk Is Tomorrow At 8 In Hill

Speaking on campus tomorrow and Saturday will be Dr. Paul Tillich, Harvard University professor.

Under the sponsorship of Wesley Foundation, Dr. Tillich will lecture in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. each evening.

Topic of his first speech is "The Present Encounter of the World Religions." He will speak Saturday on "The Present Encounter of Religious and Secular Faiths."

Besides being a professor, he is well-known as a theologian and writer.

This past summer he was featured in Look magazine for writing articles pertaining to the world religions.

A native of Germany, he was forced by Hitler to leave the country during World War II. Fleeing to America he began to teach at the Union Theological Seminary in New York and to conduct seminars in philosophy at Columbia University.

Since then he has returned to Germany several times to teach in leading universities.

At the present time he is completing the final volume of his life work, "Systematic Theory."

German Professor To Speak Tonight

Prof. Helmut Motekat, a specialist in German philosophy, history and folklore from the University of Munich, will give a public lecture here tonight at 8 o'clock in the Wilson Library Assembly Room.

The topic of his address is: "Recent Trends in Contemporary German Literature (1954-1958)."

All interested persons have been invited to join UNC faculty and students for the lecture.

The UNC Department of Germanic Languages and Literature, headed by Prof. John Kunstmann, is sponsoring the lecture.

Traffic Committee Discusses Changes

The Joint Traffic Reorganization Committee met yesterday to discuss plans for complete reorganization of campus traffic system.

Headed by Bob Covington, chairman of the University Traffic and Safety Committee, the group presented a number of ideas which will go into a reorganization proposal.

Under the reorganization suggested the traffic violations would be handled by a campus security office and violation fees would be collected by the University instead of the Chapel Hill police.

Failure to register a car would net a suggested fee of $10 and failure to display registration sticker would involve a fee of $5. Ray Jefferies, assistant dean of student affairs, pointed out that mere registration is not sufficient. A registered car must display the registration sticker, he said.

Under the reorganization, false registration would remain a violation of the Honor Code. Appeals would be permitted for other violations.

Use of Emerson Field for commuters through the day time hours was suggested as a temporary relief. Underground parking facilities and parking buildings were mentioned as possibilities in future construction.

The committee will meet again Monday at 2 p.m. to draw up a proposal which will be presented to Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver.

Furtado Says Former Policy On Rent Better

Concerning the new policy for the room rent refund in the men's dormitories, student body president Don Furtado said yesterday he prefers the original policy which allowed any student moving out of his room before the ninth week of school to receive a partial reimbursement.

However, he conceded, "I think I can understand the University's desire to have a more stable housing plan."

Furtado commented, "It is my present understanding that a student in a three man room, which was designed for two men, may leave that room and receive the appropriate reimbursement."

He believes that it should be this way as such an attempt will relieve to an extent the "present crowded conditions."

Student Brass May Still Enroll In NRO School

New student officers are still being enrolled in the 1958-59 term of the Chapel Hill Naval Reserve Officers School, according to School Director, CDR James E. Wadsworth.

The local NROS offers the opportunity for officers in Naval Reserve to increase their service proficiency while earning credit toward promotion and retirement.

"We are anxious to contact all new Naval Reserve officers who have recently moved to Chapel Hill and inform them of the local reserve program and the advantages it offers," Wadsworth said.

The Naval Reserve Officers School meets every Monday night throughout the school year from 7 until 10 o'clock at the local Naval ROTC Armory. A variety of courses are offered for officers of all ranks and designators.

Interested Naval Reserve Officers should contact CDR Wadsworth at 9-2566 during the day and at 2621 after 6 o'clock in the evening.

WUNC To Do Series On Nation wide Hookup

GREENSBORO — (AP) — The University of North Carolina's educational station WUNC-TV has been designated to telecast the continental classroom television course in atomic physics that is schduled to begin at 6:30 a.m. Monday.

Woman's College is one of the cooperating colleges and universities in the nationwide program and will offer academic credit for those officially registered for the course.

Winston-Salem's WSJS-TV, a National Broalcasting Company affiliate, is one of the scheduled telecasting stations.

The NBC network, the American Assn. of Colleges for Teacher Education, the Ford Foundation, and the Fund for the Advancement of Education, along with several large corporations, are sponsoring and contributing to the financial support of the course.

Dr. Harvey White, Univesrity of California physics professor, will be the principal course lecturer, with top American scientists as special speakers.

Adams, Bond Given Offices In Book Group

Professors Raymond Adams and Richmond P. Bond of the Department of English have been appointed to the Regional Advisory Board (Southern Region) of the Bibliogrphical Society of America.

The purpose of the Advisory Board of which Professors Adams and Bond are members is to encourage greater local interest in bibligraphical matters and in the Society, to stmiulate locally the writing of articles for the "Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America," and to advise os the policies of the Society, particularly as they pertain to the South.

Date Tickets Available For S. C. and Md. Games

One thousand date tickets for the South Carolina and Maryland football games are now on sale for half price.

Don Furtado, student body president, said this week that the Athletic Council has agreed to sell 1,000 tickets to each game for $2.25.

The South Carolina game will be played here Oct. 11, and the homecoming game with Maryland is set for Oct. 18.

Night Editors' Meeting Scheduled For Monday

The Daily Tar Heel night editing staff will meet Monday afternoon at 2:30 in the managing editor's office. All night editors have been requested to attend this meeting.

Grads Get Grant Study Information

The Advancement and Placement Institute has compiled complete information for graduate students on how to obtain graduate study funds from $200 to $10,000 in the second volume of the World Wide Graduate Award Directory.

Over 250 state universities and 100 foreign universities have volunteered information about fellowships, assistantships, scholarships, loans, prizes and self-help programs. The information included candidates' pre-requisites, place of application and descriptions of the study programs.

The Directory is the only comprehensive global compilation of graduate awards devoted entirely to American scholars, educators, librarians, scientists and social scientists. Copies of both volumes may be examined at the graduate schools, university placement service, dean's offices and libraries.

The volumes may be ordered from the institute, Box 99H, Greenpoint Station, Brooklyn 22, N. Y. The price is $3 per volume or $5 for the two volumes.

The Advancement and Placement Institute is a non-commercial professional and advisory service in the education field. They are the publishers of Crusade, a monthly, non-fee teacher placement journal, and of the annual World-Wide Summer Placement Directory, a comprehensive guide to summer employment for college students and educators.

Clubs Asked To Observe Daily Tar Heel Deadlines

Campus organizations wishing to have their meetings and special events announced in The Daily Tar Heel have been asked to turn their notices into News Editor Anne Frye by 2:30 p.m. the day before it is to appear.

Managing editors Clarke Jones and Charlie Sloan said yesterday that announcements have a better chance of being printed if they are submitted at least two days in advance.

Copy should be clearly marked with the date and day on which it should appear in the paper, the managing editors emphasized.

DEFERRED RUSH

Delay Has Advantages, Problems

By DAVIS B. YOUNG and JAMIE HOLMES

(This is the fourth in a series on fraternities by Jamie Holmes and Davis B. Young, members of The Daily Tar Heel editorial staff.)

This year, as in previous years, rush week raises the recurring question of whether or not UNC should initiate a program of "deferred rush."

Seven prominent fraternity men who have taken a definite stand on the question were asked to express their views for an analysis of this topic.

Deferred rush would mean that formal rush week would not take place until the spring semester instead of occurring at the beginning of the school year.

The Interfraternity Council last year released a several page statement on why they felt deferred rush was impossible on the UNC campus.

The statement was released at the time that Gary Greer, Student Party legislator, introduced a bill in the student legislature advocating the establishment of deferred rush. Greer's bill was defeated.

SEVEN LEADERS AGREE

The seven fraternity men all agree that the main advantage to a plan of deferred rush would be to the rushee. Under the present system he is "subjected to college life and fraternity life simultaneously and the college freshman cannot help but let one interfere with the other.

"The freshman has no sooner begun serious classwork when he is petitioned by several fraternities and lectured on the glories of fraternal life. Impressed by the well-phrased and essentially truthful arguments for his joining a fraternity and a particular house, he does join.

PROCEDURE LACKING

"The present procedure is lacking in that it does not allow a freshman enough time to carefully and intelligently appraise his situation. . . . He has not had enough experience to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of non-fraternity life. Thus, by juxtaposition, the goals and allegiances of a freshman are altered and his intellectual curiosity may be stifled."

A different source, still speaking in favor of deferred rush, stated an advantage for the fraternity: ". . . it will enable only students with a "C" average or better to pledge. Freshmen will be able to better obsreve the different fraternities before pledging, and the fraternities can observe them."

Another leader said that by adopting a program of deferred rush "we can insure a happier, more desirable relationship between the fraternities and the potential pledge."

Though, from the rushee's standpoint, each of these seven leaders would approve of deferred rush they point out many problems they feel such a system would impose upon their fraternity chapters.

Chief among these is the supposed financial danger involved.

BUDGET PROBLEMS

As was pointed out, many fraternities operate on a rigid budget which can only stay in the black if the house is full. One man interviewed stated that in a normal year his fraternity could not afford to lose fifteen to twenty boys through graduation and then have to wait until spring to fill these vacancies.

The only way to combat this, one house president said, would be to pledge twice as many to insure a full house in the fall and then move some of the boys out into dorms come spring. Such a plan, he asserted, would sacrifice all reasons for belonging to a fraternity, that reason being to "join a compact and intimate group."

Another said the fraternities "would have to have ample time to adjust their finances and programs. But the change should be made."

In concurrance another repeated: "The economic problem presented by this plan is to me not a critical consideration for the simple reasons that if one grants that the deferred rush policy is superior to early rush then it only

INFIRMARY

To Be A Pledge

Pledging at the University's twenty-four fraternities is not as degrading in general as pledging at most college fraternities. However, most still start with the end in mind of rounding off the pledges so that they may "fit in" with the fraternity.

In some fraternities menial tasks are cut to a minimum, but many pledges are their brothers' bootblacks, lackeys, and are generally treated as the brothers' personal slave. Occasionally, but not as a rule, moderate forms of hazing go on, such as being driven off the campus and left to find one's way back or all night scavenger hunts.

Throughout the period, pledges are taught the best of social graces as the fraternity sees them, and encouraged to study through such devices as compulsory study halls and quiz files. To each pledge is assigned a brother whose responsibility it is to see that the pledges are encouraged to run for offcie to better the prestige of the house and themselves.

This is the factual appraisal of a situation a pledge normally finds himself in, but the horrible part of this is that this process destroys individuality, and changes a person's goals so that his fundamental loyalty is to the house rather than to the world, the campus, and then the house.

In most fraternities, when pledges enter they are treated as inferiors, as neophytes. In putting them to chores for the brothers, they are not accepted on an equal footing but are said to be inferior to the brothers on the sole criterion that they are new. This criterion is inadequate, and a more genuine fellowship could exist if they were treated on an equal basis, and shared the work load that makes a house operate. Unfortunately this is not so, and gradually a person's worth comes through the fact that he has been accepted by the house as being like them or going through all his pledge duties without serious complaint, rather than being respected for his individuality and for his difference of point of view on crucial issues.

The fraternity, unfortunately, serves to shatter ideals because it makes the pledge's goal to please his brothers rather than pleasing himself. To those who live in the house this system becomes oppressive, until whatever identity the individual has is lost in the values of the others he has constantly to please to gain acceptance. This again serves to stifle individuality and make the individual dependent on others for his values.

Moreover, in many houses, the "big brother" system works to the individual's disadvantage in that instead of the big brother opening the gates for an individual to develop his own standards, they try to superimpose their standards upon them.

It is further unfortunate that the motivating factor toward scholarship is the house average rather than individual achievement. The compulsory study hall is a denial that individuals do from individual study habits and that they should do so.

The quiz files that many fraternities possess can be great for a quick review, buot more often than not are used as a substitute for doing the work and thought necessary in any course. It is in the position of an encouragement to short cuts that a quiz files find itself in.

Finally, the encouragement to run for office for the prestige of the individual or house is not a good reason for anyone to run for office. If a person runs for office, he should have a definite program of action that he wants to put across, and he should want it for what he can accomplish for the campus. In many cases, there is no thought other than the office put into action, and to run for the sake of running is foolish. To encourage this on the criterion of electability is destructive.

The fraternity at present succeeds well in smoothing out the rough spots of a persons social acceptability, but the sacrifice of some of the more important values is too high a price to pay.

It is hope that in the future the fraternities which do not, will take an interest in developing a person's individuality and creativity, rather than overbalancing the scale towards conformity. This may take modifications in the present system, but it would be well worth it.

On Planning

Jim Jordan and the YMCA staff are planning something for freshmen, that should have been started a long time ago.

In a five meeting and a trip program of bringing issues to the forefront for freshman and encouraging participation and action, the group is doing a commendable job in trying to start some all-campus planning that will cut the ground under some of the student apathy that prevails on this campus.

The group is to be congratulated for their idea and effort and it is hoped that this will lead to more effective campus planning for all students. This perhaps will go a long way to bring about a better and more worthwhile campus.

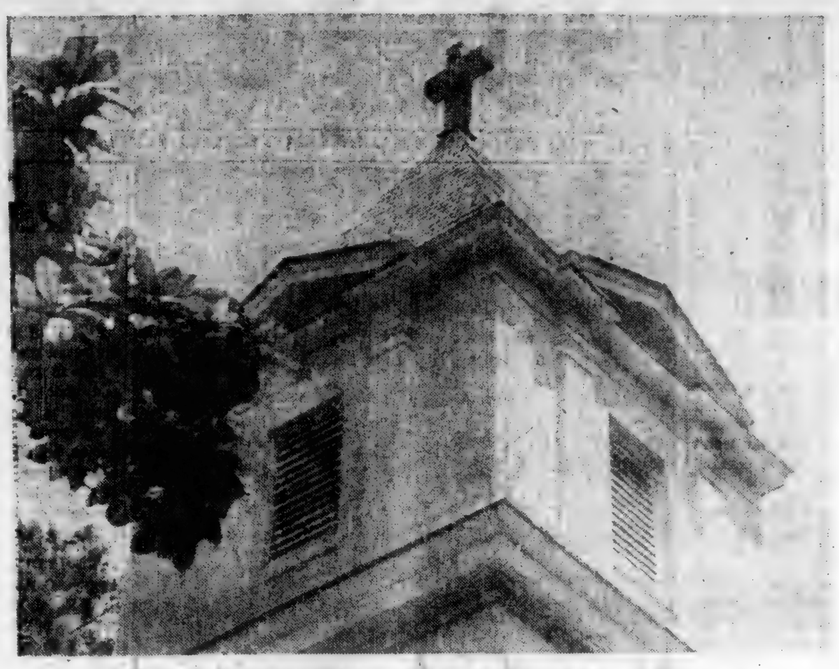
Contraception And Christianity's Meaning



Christianity: Anglican View

Bob Pace

Today the word Christian has many meanings. To persons of differing backgrounds it may mean certain beliefs or positions that are among themselves opposed. To the average person it simply means someone who is "a decent sort of a fellow, a guy you can depend on." With this and other positions I am not here too concerned. I write as a Catholic Christian of Anglican obedience, in other words — as an Episcopalian.

To the early Church, the word Christian meant one thing primarily — it meant one who believed the Christian Faith. And this Faith was very definite in its teachings. It affirmed belief in Jesus Christ as God and Saviour. "The Word was made Flesh" was the core of the Faith. It affirmed that "man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil." It did not affirm a doctrine of total depravity. It remained for Calvin in his rebellion against the Church to set forth this evil doctrine. It affirmed that our Lord is "very God and very Man; who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men." It joyously proclaimed — as does every Episcopal priest at every Mass he celebrates — "If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and he is the Propitiation for our sins."

It proclaimed a triune God: God the Father, the Creator; God the Son, the Redeemer; and God the Holy Ghost, the Sanctifier. It proclaimed that the Incarnation, the coming to earth of Jesus Christ, was the final and complete revalation of God to men. "I am the way, the Truth, and the Life," He had said. This the early Church held to be the absolute. In no uncertain words it taught: "Whosoever will be saved, before all things, it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith . . . the Catholic Faith is this; that we worship one God in Trinity . . . the right Fiath is, that we believe and confess that four Lord Jesuus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man . . . he shall come to judge the quick and the dead . . . except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved."

What I am saying is simply this, that the Christian Faith is that which is taught by the One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church It is "taught by the Church, summed up in the Creeds, and affirmed by Holy Scripture." It is, Rheinhold Niebuhr to the contrary, for all men, in all times, in all places. It is the "Good News" for this is the very meaning of the word "Gospel." It can be experienced. But first it must be believed. It is the Faith of the Cross. But it is also the Faith of hope and love. A committed Christian is a joyous person. Baptism is not only into the death of Christ, it is also into his resurrection — indeed it is into very sonship of God.

What is the Christian Faith? It is clearly summed up in the Nicene Creed to be found on page 71 of the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. It is the Faith affirmed at every Mass. It is the Faith of the Church.

EDITOR:

I am a member of the Roman Catholic Church, a group which came in for criticism at the hands of Mr. Anthony Wolff in the September 28 ediiton of The Daily Tar Heel.

In his "View and Preview" column, Mr. Wolff questioned the Church's stand on birth control. Despite his well-written article, he unfortunately failed to express the entire story in question, thereby suggesting the Church to be ruthless in its indifference to the physical well-being of mothers.

The case (again): Dr. Morris A. Jacobs, Hospital Commissioner in the City of New York, and not a Catholic, forbade a local doctor to fit a Protestant woman, suffering from diabetes, with a contraceptive device. When this was made public, the New York Catholic Chancery issued one statement supporting Mr. Jacob's action and explaining the position of the Catholic Curch on birth control. This contained no threats of infringement on the right of other denominations for suggestions of base motivations in these groups.

From this single commentary, there resulted a plethora of deunciation from varoius religious and civic sectors. It was surprising to note that most of these contained wide misrepresentations of Catholic thought and imputations of undue pressure. Ultimately, the Hospital Board voted to reverse its decision, Dr. Jacobs not voting.

One of the stipulations of the reversed regulation was that medical personnel having ethical objections to the practice would not be forced to take part in such treatments. Immediately the voices which had been raised in praise of individual decision and free choice howled in anguish at this "concession" to a minority of individuals.

Upon publication of this decision, the Church issued another statement. In this, it explained that morality is subject neither to individual choice nor majority vote. It is neither whim nor caprice. Morality is founded upon the unchangeable nature of God and man, and upon their interrelationships in the Natural Law.

The primary purpose of marriage, according to Catholic doctrine, is the proceation of the race. This does not exclude secondary aims, among them the mutual expression of love and helpfulness on the part of the married couple. The very physical makeup of a man and woman, however, implies that the chief reason for union is the begetting of children. Even a pseudo-intellectual like Mr. Wolff cannot deny that.

Mr. Wolff, quoted, and then scorned, the Archdiocesan statement that the use of contraceptive devices "introduces an immoral practice into our hospitals which perverts the nature and dignity of man." This view is not confined to Catholics. George Bernard Shaw described contraception as disgusting and termed it "mutual masturbation," a very apt description, indeed. Is masturbation natural and dignified, Mr. Wolff?

The sex drive and its satisfaction may be compared to hunger and eating. Both have their inherent purpose: The one—continuation of the race; the other—the preservationof individual life. The fashionable Roman had his Vomitorium, which needs no explanation, I am sure. This, however, denied eating its particular and rational purpose. Is not the employment of contraceptives highly, if noe exactly, similar?

Christ was uncompromising and forthright in his denunciation of moral evil, regardless of the disapproval of His contemporaries. For example, He said. "You have heard that it hath been said, 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth . . .' But I say to you, love your enemies: do good to them that hate you." (Math. 5: 38-44)

The Catholic Church has fearlessly denounced suicide, euthanasia and craniotomy, equally with contraception, when others remained silent. No matter the sentimental reasons which may be adduced to the contrary, if the Catholic Church is correct in classifying all of these as intrinsically evil, then they may never be made justifiable by any pretexts, since they run counter to human reason and the will of the Creator.

In a suicide case, for example, a man is not going to permit another man to take his own life just because he wants to. Such an action is irrational. As such, it remains always and everywhere wrong.

Inevitably, the question must arise concerning the case of a sick parent, even as it did in New York. The Church is not negligent towards the physical well-being of anyone, much less those who profess the belief of Christ. This can readily be attested to by the innumerable charitable agencies supported, manned, and directed by members of the Church and her dedicated religious communities.

In the case of an unhealthy parent, where physical harm is feared, the position of the Church is that abstinence, complete or periodic, is the proper course. This is not as inconsiderate as it may seem; it is certainly more within the natural capabilities of man, and serves more to ennoble the love between a man and a woman than resorting to artificial means and the commitment of a degrading act.

The early Christians, universally renowned for their heroic martyrdom, could have easily saved their lives with a simple denial of faith.. This would only have been blasphemy. Were they wrong? Has not their Church survived persecution and petty attacks?

What do you think, Mr. Wolff?

Student Leadership

Larry Schiff

(The following is a reprint from the CCNY Ticker. The writer is president of the student body at CCNY and was present at the United States National Student Association Congress this summer.)

I have been doing much thinking of late about the student, you and me, and just what he is capable of and responsible for. One hears much about education these days, but I wonder how many of us have stopped to give it any thought on the personal level. Essentially, though, it seems almost a truism to say, the quality and effect of education depends primarily on the student, what he demands, absorbs and makes use of. It seems to make sense, therefore, to take a good look at ourselves, what we are getting and asking out of our education, and how our school shapes up in giving us the training and background to meet the demands of society.

First, I think, we would do well to take ac ursory glance at this society of ours. Contemporary America finds itself in a unique position in its and the world's history for two reasons. Our globe and particularly America (for one thing itself in the middle of any major physical conflict) faces, for the first time, the possibility of complete annihilation. Though we have all heard this many times, our consciousness of the awesome implications of this fact should never be diminished. The second, and less well-understood phenomenon, which contributes to the substance of our existence, is that FOR THE FIRST TIME IN OUR HISTORY AMERICA IS LOSING. Make no mistake about this; the unchallengeable verification can be found by a quick glance at the world's political line-up of ten years ago and that of today. The conclusion is inescapable — where there were uncommitted nations, there are now enemies; where there were friendly nations, they are now uncommitted ones.

The future looks even less optimistic. The colored peoples of the world have risen against the white minority which has long been their oppressor, and we in the United States find ourselves in the untenable and uncomfortable position of being a major symbol of this oppression. The "frightening historical parallel" recently presented by Senator William Fulbright, and long before that by most serious scholars, of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, seems very vivid and pertinent. Even the History I student cannot help but be aware of history's law of change — for one nation has been able to even approach permanent superiority. In these accelerated times, when changes that used to take a century now occur in a matter of years, the myth of American "divine" superiority cannot afford to be given any serious credence. To put it mildly, the situation calls for a sense of urgency, a sense of profound awareness that the problems we face today must be considered and met before we are no longer around to do anything.

If we examine our reactions, both personal and national to this predicament, we can readily appreciate that they have fallen far short of the mark. From our national leaders on down to the man in the street, we can find no inclination to do anything but drift. The almost histrionic, panicky preachments of the Walter Lippmans and James Restons are read daily — and ignored daily.

This brings us back to the American student, you and me, for we are the only hope our nation has. Our elders have pretty much forsaken their responsibility — the evidence for this is far too obvious and numerous to enumerate here — and the burden is ours. Are our college providing, and are we seeking out the kind of training which is patently demanded?

Judging by the results I have seen around me, the answer is clearly "no." It has been my good fortune to represent our school at two conventions of the United States National Student Association, where I have had an opportunity to observe "student leaders" from all over the country. They have shown themselves to be passive, disinterested, uninformed and painfully unaware. They are neither conservative nor liberal, nor have they shown any committment to their intellectual responsibility. They drift.

At our school the situation is much the same. As you and I are both aware, apathy and lack of concern mark the pervading atmosphere throughout our hallowed halls. Look around you in your classrooms today and see if you do not see, as I do, the seeds of disaster. What are you and your neighbors talking about — jobs, dates and the summer, or Quemoy, Little Rock and Eisenhower?

I think the point is clear. America, if it is to survive for long, is desparately in need of people who are aware of its plight and have the personal depth to care about it. I think you chould be one of these people. Why? Because you are a college student with enough intelligence to grasp the complex problems. Because you are in a school which has in its faculty, though admittedly not in excess, the resources which are imperative if rational solutions are to be found. Because you are young enough to still admit of flexibility of mind. Because, in your college years, there is nothing more useful for you to do, both for yourself as an individual and as a citizen with responsibility, than to examine ideas and form and promulgate opinions. Because, if you as an individual are possessed of any sensitivity you cannot do nothing while the world around you demands that something be done.

Action must be preceded by thought. It is imperative, therefore, that our education provide us with background and stimulation. Right now, with some exceptions, it does not. Student Council is attempting, this year to bring about a change in this direction. As thinking individuals; it is your fight too.

EDITOR:

Sunday was the first time I have ever seen anyone's religious beliefs ridiculed in a college newspaper. Your columnist Anthony Wolff's remarks about contraception seem to me to be quite convincing evidence that he possessess many of the traits he so gratuitiously attributes to the Catholic Church, wonder if it ever occurred to Mr. Wolff that what might seem "arbitrary" to him might be perfectly logical and reasonable to others. I always thought liberalism implied a healthy respect for the convictions of others ergardles of whether they agree with our own or not.

Mr. Wolff seems to put himself in the position of saying that the only value that should have a bearing on public policy is that no moral values should have a bearing on it. I believe, however, that the great majority to Americans believe that moral values cannot and should not be entirely separated from public policy. Who would suggest, for example, that our nuclear policy be formulated without relation to our moral values?

When, as is often the case, there is no concensus on moral values, compromises and adjustments that do not unnecesarily violate the rights of those involved must be made. At such times, Catholics like all responsible citizens not only have a right but an obligation to express themselves on questions of public policy and these expressions must of necessity be guided by their moral principles. I often find myself in communities where I am unable to purchase alcoholic beverages or engage in games of chance in public, although I personally have no moral objection to these activities. I naturally am opposed to such laws, but out of deference to the convictions of those responsible for them and in recognition of the fact that my private rights are not restricted I find it possible to live with such laws.

The issue mentioned by Mr. Wolff is a typical example of such a conflict in values. He, however, omitted some crucial facts and therefore presented a rather distorted picture. The New York City hospital policy pertaining to contraceptives was made not by the Catholic Church but by a Jewish public official. This policy had the support not only of most Catholics but also the Association of Hospital Boards of New York and some Protestant and Orthodox Jewish groups.

The dispute was not over whether contraceptive devices and advice would be available to those who need and want them. There have been and are private agencies in New York City that stand ready willing and able to provide such services free of charge to anyone unable to pay. The question was whether public funds, partly contributed by persons who believe these practices to be a violation of the law of God, should be used to finance this service. Mr. Wolff mentions the rights of the woman who insists on having her contraceptive device fitted at a city hospital rather than a private clinic, but ignores the rights of the taxpayers fo Now York who find this objectionable who might be forced to cooperate in the performance of duties that they consider immoral.

Unlike Mr. Wolff, the Catholic Church does not believe that the woman who is advised that another pregnancy would endanger her life, is doomed to die unless she resorts to an artificial method of birth control. The Church has enough faith in hte intelligence of man to believe that self-discipline and self-control are not beyond his reach.

Two English Professors Return From Research

Dr. O. B. Hardison Jr. and Dr. W. Bernard Fleischmann of the UNC English Department have returned from summer research projects to their fall semester teaching duties.

Dr. Hardison, assistant profesor of English, conducted research on Renaisance criticism with special emphasis on the early history of poetics at the Folger Shakespeare Library in Washington, D. C. His study was financed by a grant from the Folger Library.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1957, Prof. Hardison has recently published his own verses in the fifth volume of Scribner's "Poets of Today." He has also discussed Keats' poetic technique in an article entitled "The Decorum or 'Lamia'" in an issue of the Modern Languago Quarterly.

Dr. Fleischmann, instructor in English, spent the summer at Widener Library of Harvard University. His research which concerned the influence of Lucretius on English literature was financed by a grant from the American Philosophical Society.

Two Changes On Faculty Announced

Chancellor William B. Aycock last week announced faculty changes, including the appointment of an assistant professor of economics and the resignation of an assistant professor of political science.

Joining the Dept. of Economics in the School of Business Administration is Mrs. Dell Bush Johannesen, a native of Charlotte, now living in Sanford. She will also be assistant to the editor of the Southern Economic Journal.

Leaving the UNC faculty is Robert E. Agger of the Dept. of Political Science, who has been named associate professor at the University of Oregon. He was at Oregon during 1951-53, where he held a Carnegie Teaching Fellowship and completed his Ph.D. degree in 1954.

Mrs. Johannesen holds B.S., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from here and taught here and at N. C. State College last year. Her job experience includes personnel and counseling work with General Electric at Asheboro and as job analyst with Atlas Constructors in Casablanca, North Africa. She lives in Sanford with her husband and two children.

She will assist Prof. G. T. Schwenning, professor of business administrtaion, in editing the Southern Economic Journal, a quarterly published jointly by UNC and the Southern Economic Assn. Dr. Schwenning has served as managing editor of the journal since 1935, with the exception of four years during the 1940's when he was away from Chapel Hill.

The faculty changes were announced by Chancellor Aycock following approval by President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University.

follows that the adjustments necessary should be made. To some who would say that this is impossible at Carolina I would challenge them to look at the large number of other schools throughout the nation who have licked this problem."

DIRTY RUSHING

Aside from the financial considerations of this problem several said they believed deferred rush would create disharmony among the different fraternity chapters through increased "dirty rushing." One leader said, "Nothing would keep a group of actives from privately entertaining a prize rushee during the first semester."

All agreed that "strict silence" for one semester would be impossible to maintain. On the other hand, they thought, the IFC would necessarily have to pass some sort of restrictions. Their general opinion was that the enforcing of these restrictions would be one of the inherent problems of deferred rush.

Several pointed out advantages which early rush has for the pledge.

SOCIAL LIFE

"The social life of non-fraternity freshmen is woefully lacking," one stated. "There are almost no freshmen women; the student union, because of its size, cannot begin to provide an adequate program; freshmen do not have cars; the town of Chapel Hill seldom provides a social outlet; and there is no dormitory visiting agreement."

Another commented that "rush during rush week is chaotic and cut-throat enough without having the pains and miseries of six months of "unofficial" rush to go through."

In closing, most of these leading fraternity men noted that if the three principal problems connected with deferred rush—finances, possible "dirty rushing," and social disadvantages for freshmen—were solved they would support a plan of deferred rush.

The issue would then seem to be whether or not these problems can be met.

Braves Draw First Blood

By JACK HAND

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 1 (AP) — Billy Bruton stroked a line drive single to right against fireballing Ryne Duren to give Milwaukee's Warren Spahn a 4-3 victory over the New York Yankees today in a tense 10-inning opening World Series game.

Benched at the start because left-handed Whitey Ford was pitching for the Yanks, Bruton came in as a pinch hitter in the ninth but fanned. Given another chance after singles by Joe Adcock and Del Crandall in the 10th, he came through beautifully with a drive that probably would have been good for two bases if more were needed.

A year ago Bruton was in the hospital undergoing a knee operation while his Milwaukee mates were upsetting the proud Yankees in seven games. He didn't get gack into action until mid season and even now still has trouble with his knee.

Duren was the hard throwing speedster of early season when he first replaced Ford in the eighth. But the Braves kept after him and finally got to him in the 10th.

Hank Aaron, perhaps the Brave most feared by the Yankee staff, struck out, opening the 10th. Joe Adcock ripped a single to center and the fat was on the fire.

Wes Covington sent Elston Howard deep into left with the wind helping the ball but the Yankee outfielder caught his long drive. Del Crandall, a Duren strikeout victim on three pitches in the eighth, bounced a high hopper to short center for a single.

That brought up Bruton, who used to be a speed demon before he injured his knee. Duren threw a strike and then two balls before ever ad a chance to get close to it, to the fence in right center. Nobody Bruton lined the game-winning hit

It was an appropriate ending for the roaring crowd of 46,367 who watched this opening game on a chill, sunny afternoon. They were slow to warm up to the excitement of the game but loosened a throaty roar when Bruton came through.

Spahn, beaten by Ford in last year's opener at Yankee stadium, lived up to his season .333 batting average as well as his 22-11 pitching record.

When Ford suddenly ran into trouble in the fourth on a first-ball was Sphan who stroked the single to hitting flurry by the Braves, it the tie-breaking run.

center that scored Crandall with

Again in the ninth Spahnie tried to start his own rally with a single to right. He got as far as second when Duren walked Red Schoendienst but both were left when pinch hitter Frank Torre and Eddie Mathews failed.

Four of the eight hits off the 37 year old lefty came in the first two innings. He has been sharper but never better with the chips down.

In tomorrow's second game, Burdette, the Yankee killer of '57 will try to make it two in a row for the Braves. The 20 game winner who has been brilliant since the All-Star break, will be opposed by another right hander, Bob Turley. Turley was the Yanks big winner with a 21-7 season.

Ford went to the eighth with a 3-2 lead on a pair of home runs by Bill Skowron and Hank Bauer. The chunky lefty had faltered briefly in the fourth when the Braves went on a first ball hitting binge that produced two runs.

It was apparent that Whitey was beginning to struggle. His famed curve was hanging and he walked Mathews on a 3-2 pitch. Aaron slugged a line drive to right. Bauer crashed into the wire fence attempting to make the catch — and possibly saving a home run. Hank couldn't quite make it and it went for a double.

Manager Casey Stengel came striding from the Yankee dugout with men on second and third and nobody out. The old professor didn't hesitate long. A few seconds of conversation with Ford and Yogi Berra, then a wave of the right hand to the bull pen.

That was the signal for Duren. The flame-throwing rightie with the thick glasses threw the first warm-up pitch so hard that Berra dropped it. Perhaps it was intentional. Anyhew, it was mighty effective.

Duren fanned Adcock on four pitches. Although first base was open, Stengel elected to let Duren pitch to the lefthanded hitting Covington. Wes rammed a curving fly to left center that Mickey Mantle caught after a hard run. Mathews tagged and scored the tying run but Aaron hung on at second. Duren then wheeled three straight past Crandall to retire the side.

The big item of discussion Tuesday at Coach Jim Tatum's press conference at the Pines Restaurant was a team called Southern Cal. Coach Emmett Cheek, who scouted the Trojans against both Oregon State and Michigan, gave out with the facts.

"Southern California," he began, "dominated the entire game against Oregon State. They scored all of their points in the first half. (They won 21-0.) They hit hard throughout the game."

SHOULD HAVE BEATEN MICHIGAN

"They should have beaten Michigan, but didn't. They lost 20-19. They had a 2nd and 1 foot to go at the Michigan goal line, but the halfback fumbled the ball as he crossed the goal line and Michigan recovered."

Southern Cal has three sophs who start every game, reported Cheek. They are left tackle Jim Ficca, who you would never know was a soph except for the program, and the McKeever twins, Mike and Marlon. Mike plays left guard, and does the kicking off. Several of his kick-offs went into the end zone in both of the Troajns' games. His identical twin, Marlon, plays right end and does the punting. He booted one 55 yards against Michigan.

EXPERIENCE—AND FIORENTINO

Other than those three, the rest of the team is a solid, experienced unit, mostly juniors and seniors. The most talked about player on the roster is big Frank Fiorentino, a guard. Fiorentino was picked by many in the pre-season All-America. He is big, strong, and fast, and they like to use him to lead the plays around end.

The first 2q uarterbacks, Willie Wood and John Maudlin, are excellent passers and play mixers. Wood is a little better defensively and so he plays first unit.

GOOD PASS SNATCHER

Cheek described the two ends, Hill and McKeever as two of the finest pass receivers in the nation. Both, he stated, will catch the ball if it is anywhere near them.

In the backfield is Rex Johnston, a player eligible only for the first five games, who is the best gainer the Trojans have. Wood likes to throw to him in the flats. At the other halfback is Bob Arnet,t brother of the famous Jon who is now with the Los Angeles Rams. Two fullbacks, Holden and Pursinger, share the load at that position.

The Trojans have not as yet used substitution by unit as Carolina does. They replace only 1, 2, or 3 players at a time. Their offense is basically split-T, and they like top ull the guards on wide end plays. They also use drop-back passing, and have thrown three touchdown aerials in their first two games.

Cheek reports that as yet the Southern Cal passers have not failed to hit a receiver who got behind the halfbacks. But so far the Trojans have only used the pass to keep the defense honest, sticking to the ground whenever they could.

SHIFTING DEFENSE

Their defense has to be good, since they have just played two multiple offense teams and stopped both with reasonable success. The keynote in the Southern Cal attack so far . . . hustle.

Finally, Cheek told of Carolina's chances. He remarked, "We'll have our hands full, but if we don't make any mistakes, as we have been doing, we stand a good chance."

PROGRESS REPORT

A progress report on Southern Cal—they won only one game last season while losing nine, but have 24 of 34 lettermen back. They appear to be much better organized this year, especially on defenes. Don Clark is the Trojan coach, and is in only his second year.

Radio station WRAL-Raleigh will carry the action Friday night beginning at 11 o'clock by remote pickup.

Dorms Get New Jerseys

Dormitories have received new jerseys, with the help of the Inter Dormitory Council, for use in the campus intramural sports program.

Directors of the Intramural program contacted officers of the IDC to consider what might be done to increase interest in dormitory intramural sports. It was decided that each dormitory should have playing jerseys with the names of their respective dormitories printed on the front. This would give the boys a deeper desire to want to participate in the activities.

The IDC agreed to pay for half of the expense if the dormitories paid the other half. Each dormitory ordered 15 jerseys at a cost of approximately one dollar each.

After the decision had been approved, the Intramural Office placed the order with Champion Knitwear Company. When the jerseys arrvied, each individual dormitory manager was put in charge of the jerseys for his dormitory. He issues them ot the players and takes them up after the game. Each dormitory pays for laundering their jerseys.

With the use of the jerseys interest in intramurals in the dormitory division has grown tremendously while good spirit and team co-operation has increased. With each dormitory having a different color jersey, a player or spectator has not trouble locating his team.

Tillich To Present First Talk Tonight

Dr. Paul Tillich, university professor at Harvard, will give the first of two addresses tonight in Hill Hall at 8 p.m.

His first talk will be on "The Present Encounter of World Religions." His lecture Saturday night will be on "The Present Encounter of Religious and Secular Faiths."

The public has been invited.

In addition to his public appearances, the noted Protestant philosopher, author and educator will meet in closed sessions with other groups on the campus.

Dr. Tillich's visit to the University is sponsored by the Wesley Foundation, a Methodist organization devoted to Christian education in the university.

PAUL TILLICH
. . . first lecture tonight

CAME HERE IN 1933

Dr. Tillich came to the United States in 1933, after the Nazis deprived him of his position at the University of Frankfurt.

After twenty-two years on the faculty of New York's Union Seminary, Dr. Tillich joined the faculty of Harvard University in 1955 as a University Professor. In this position, he is commissioned to work "on the frontiers of knowledge," without restriction to any department and without any specific teaching assignment.

His many bookssinclude "The Protestant Era," "The Shaking of the Foundations," "The Religious Situation," "Love, Power and Justice," "Dynamics of Faith," and "The Courage To Be."

Dr. Tillich's lifework is the three-volume "Systematic Theology," two volumes of which have already appeared.

Lecture Series On Radiation Set To Begin

The UNC School of Medicine will sponsor a four-month Medical Science Lecture Series beginning tomorrow.

The lecture series will cover many of the biological and public health aspects of radiation. Some of the speakers will lecture on such subjects as the effects of radiation on the embryo, the hazards of diagnostic examinations with medical and dental x-ray machines, chemical and biological protection against radiation, the peace time use of radiation and the disposal of radioactive wastes.

Dr. Warner Wells of the UNC School of Medicine's Dept. of Surgery will present the first two lectures. He will speak on "The Atomic Era—Survival or Extinction." The first part of this topic will be covered this Saturday, the second part will be given on Saturday, Oct. 11. on Saturday, Oct. 11.

All of the lectures will be given on Saturday mornings at 11 o'clock in the Clinic Auditorium of the School of Medicine. The public is invited to attend all lectures.

INVITED TO JAPAN

Dr. Wells is probably the best qualified to speak on the Atomic Era among all physicians in this area. In 1949 he was invited by the Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission to go to Japan to study the long range effects of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima.

Hiroshima was the very smybol of the law of war, but it also offered an opportunity to serve the law of peace. Dr. Wells gave up his private medical practice in Raleigh and his position as associate in surgery at the Duke Medical School. He went to Japan, where he remained for two years.

It was during his stay in Japan that Dr. Wells met Dr. Michihiko Hachiya, who had kept a journal covering the day of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and the two succeeding months.

TRANSLATED DIARY

Dr. Wells, with the help of Dr. Neal Tsukifugi, translated the diary. The work was published by the UNC Press and immediately became a best seller. It has now been translated into 13 foreign languages.

Dr. Wells was presented with the O. Max Gardner Award in 1957 for his work with the famous diary telling of the first use of atomic energy in warfare. The award was established by the will of the late governor and is given annually "To that member of the faculty of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, who has made the greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race."

Graham Memorial Employe Problem May Place Free Student Government In Jeopardy, According To Furtado

A relatively minor consideration could have tremendous effects on student government, or such is the opinion of Student Body President Don Furtado.

Furtado was speaking of this problem: University de jure control of determining salary and policy for student government employes.

Implications from this problem were aired out at a meeting this week of the Personnel Policy Committee of Graham Memorial's Board of Directors.

According to a ruling from the North Carolina attorney general's office, all employes of student government are employes of the University, classified under the state retirement system.

Under this system, there are a number of classifications, each of which carries with it a certain wage bracket.

Furtado outlined problems that may arise by the classification of student employes as University employes:

1) Misclassification because of the unique nature of some of the present jobs,

2) A loss of student control in the determination of salary and policy,

3) The possibility of losing the present healthy balance between professional and student participation in the student union program,

4) Difficulties of the cumbersome process of transferring student funds into University salary channels,

5) Payment of salaries to supposed "University employes" without the reciprocal control needed by appropriating source (the students),

6) Salary increments demanded by the state which would require an appropriation of student funds without student consent and, conversly, salary maximums which might prevent students from paying employes wages, that are in keeping with their talents and responsibilities.

UNC In 1970? Students May Total 12,000

What lies ahead for the University in 1970?

Prof. A. K. King, of the University School of Education, gave Kiwanis Club members a glimpse of possibilities for the future in a talk Tuesday night.

Prof. King discussed his experiences in editing the "Long-Range Planning Study for the University in Chapel Hill," which has been prepared for President William Friday to present to the Board of Higher Education.

The study has been completed since the latter part of June.

One projection, based on current trends, made in the study estimates that University enrollment could enlarge to 12,000-14,000 students by 1970. "This would mean doubling the size of the faculty," Prof. King said.

He also mentioned that after utilizing classrooms throughout the morning and laboratories throughout the afternoon, a need would be felt for additional space within two years.

Expected growth of the University would make it necessary to double faculty office space, according to the study.

"Indications are that all utilities, dormitories and parking spaces would have to be enlarged," Prof. King said.

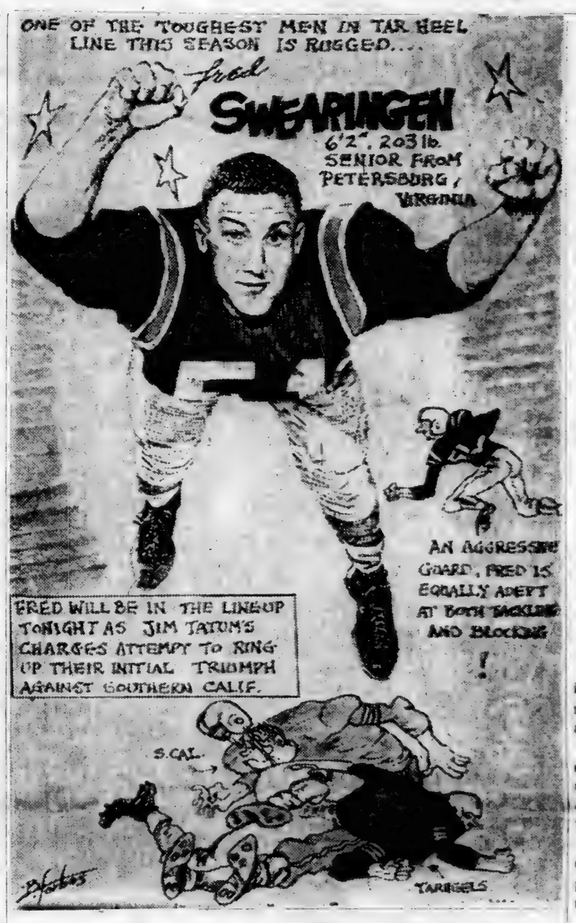
Regarding parking facilities, Prof. King reported that a study made last year indicated that 41 per cent of the present student population had 2900 cars registered with the Dean of Student Affairs office.

Faculty and staff members on the main campus have a total of 1846 parking permits, with 1500 permits issued to the Division of Health Affairs.

These figures show a total of 6246 cars on campus and a total of 3826 parking spaces. In other words there are parking spaces for 61 per cent of the cars, the report indicated.

If the enrollment should exceed 12,000 students, 9,090 parking spaces would be needed, Prof. King pointed out.

A full report from the long-range study has not yet been released until President Friday presents the project to the Board of Higher Education.



Yack Pictures

Today is the last day for seniors to have their pictures made for the Yackety Yack and also for juniors to have their pictures made without paying a fee.

The pictures of sophomores will be taken, starting Monday. Also during next week late junior pictures will be made.

The Yack staff has reported that the turnout for pictures has not been good so far. The staff has urged students to keep the deadlines in mind.

Individual picture-taking will be completed Oct. 31.

Reds Resume Bomb Testing, Tass Declares

MOSCOW—(AP)—The Soviet Union announced Thursday night it has resumed nuclear test blasting after a six-month suspension.

(The Soviet acknowledgement came within an hour after Washington announced detection of the second pair of Soviet blasts this week. The first were Tuesday).

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko announced before the Supreme Soviet March 31 the decision to stop the tests.

At that time, a Tass statement Thursday night said, the Kremlin said that if America and Britain failed to follow its example "the government of the U.S.S.R. would be free to act in the question of Soviet nuclear tests, bearing in mind the security interests of the U.S.S.R.

Burdette's Bat, Arm Drub Yanks, 13-5

MILWAUKEE —(AP)— Lew Burdette, the Yankee killer of 1957, did it with his bat as well as his right arm Thursday as he won his fourth straight World Series game. The rawboned gent from the hill country of West Virginia hit a three-run homer during a record seven-run Milwaukee spree in the first inning and the Braves made it two in a row in a 13-5 romp.

The fidgety hero of last year's series saw his 24-inning scoreless streak snapped in a jittery first inning. But 42 minutes later, when the Braves finally were retired in their first time at bat, he didn't have a care in the world. The Braves wound up with 15 hits and the Yanks had only 7.

Not since the 1921 New York Giants scored eight times in the seventh inning of a series game had the Yanks squirmed in such misery as they did in that long first frame. First Bob Turley, their 21-game winning ace, and then Duke Maas felt the raw power of the world champion's bats before Johnny Kucks finally ended it.

DYING GASP

After that it was strictly a matter of going through the motions until the ninth when a dying gasp Yankee rally against a tiring pitcher netted three runs. Mickey Mantle had hit a long home run over the center field fence in the fourth but Burdette was rolling along with a steadily mounting lead.

MANTLE NOW SECOND

Hank Bauer's leadoff homer in the ninth, a single by Gil McDougald and Mantle's 11th series homer over the left field fence brought action in the Milwaukee bullpen. Mantle's homer, incidentally, put him in second place for series homers behind Babe Ruth's total of 15.

After Norm Siebern also singled, Burdette steadied again and retired the last three batters to make it safely home with this most-important victory.

CWC Names 3 As Chairmen Of Committees

Three coeds were named chairmen of committees within the Carolina Women's Council at a council meeting this week.

They are: Misses Anne Eckerson, activities chairman; Mary Montgomery, publicity chairman; and Jo Britton, WAA chairman.

At the meeting the Council also discussed plans for homecoming displays in all women's dormitories. The University Club representative in each dorm is responsible for the display, but the Women's Council is cooperating by offering its services to the dormitories.

Members of the Council were told that elections are being held this week and next week in the women's dorms and the Chapel Hill Club to choose two juniors to the Dormitory Committee. From this committee, one junior representative will be selected to attend meetings of the Carolina Women's Council.

The next scheduled meeting for the Council will be Wednesday. Sue Ballantine is president.

TEN HOUSES QUESTIONED

Fraternities In Good Financial Condition; Active Members, Pledges Foot Most Bills

By JAMIE HOLMES and DAVIS B. YOUNG

(This is the fifth in a series on fraternities by Jamie Holmes and Davis B. Young, members of The Daily Tar Heel editorial staff.)

With possibly five or six exceptions, Chapel Hill fraternities appear to be in good financial condition. Budgets range from $20,000 to $46,000 with most fraternity houses probably falling into the $30,000-$35,000 category. This money comes almost completely from the pledges and active members which makes unfortunate that often the financial machinery of frattrnity life is not entirely clear to the rushee.

TEN HOUSES QUESTIONED

In order to present a precise, accurate impression of the general financial obligations concerned with joining a fraternity, treasurers and house-managers of ten houses, from common-knowledge "richest" to rumored "poorest", were asked to answer questions concerning their financial status.

One house of the ten refused to answer any questions or cooperate in any way, its treasurer claiming he was "following IFC instructions". The other nine demonstrated willingness in presenting their financial conditions and from these the following information is compiled.

'HOUSE BILL'

Each regular member who lives in the chapter house pays a month-social fee—$6, pledge dues—$5, and other dues, these figures being typical for the majority of fraternities.

Club treasurers report they are naturally reluctant to refund money ly "house bill" of from $80-$105. This includes room—$15, board—$60, but, in the case of room and board, will do so if the house is not occupied for the full month, as in September and December. There are no refunds except in extreme instances for the other fees which include pledge and social dues.

Further exploring the social fee of which every fraternity requires payment, a member is in this way entitled to attend all regular social functions, averaging one a week, of the fraternity without further cost. Should he not go he still must pay the same amount as those who do, liquor bill being usually excepted.

SIX ARE MORTGAGED

Six of the nine houses are mortgaged although in most of these cases the amount is reportedly decreasing yearly. Likewise, most houses operate in the black by taking more from their members in dues, fees, and house bills than they in turn spend. The $60 per month board bill, treasurers say, is the actual cost of preparing and serving meals. Their profit is thus derived from initiation, pledging, and room fees. No example was disclosed where chapter alumni assisted the chapter treasury to any appreciable extent.

USE OF PROFIT

One fraternity reported a net profit last year of $1500, which according to the present treasurer will be spent for future house improvements. Though this is doubtlessly an exception it is, on a larger scale, indicative of the financial standings of UNC's fraternities.

Those few houses that said they are having difficulty avoiding the red column are being forced to compensate by decreasing house appearance expenditures.

Rushees 'Exceptionally Impressed'

By DAVIS B. YOUNG AND JAMIE HOLMES

With Rush Week almost over fifteen rushees report they have been exceptionally impressed with the graciousness and affability of Chapel Hill's twenty-four fraternities. Their candid observations, though by and large lacking in sophistication, reveal that UNC freshmen realize the importance of choosing the fraternity into which they will best fit.

NERVE WRACKING NIGHTS

Sunday and Monday nights, these boys reported, were the most nerve-wracking of the entire week. Those with seven or more bids said they felt hurried trying to get to every house and felt they should have had more opportunity to meet more of each chapter's brothers. One boy remarked that he felt as if a silent machine were sifting him through a line of smiling executioners, this feeling being heightened by the not too discreet pad notations of one of the actives. However, he felt this fraternity was more genuinely cordial during subsequent visits.

"The greeters at all the houses lacked any tinge of 'professionalism' and seemed sincerely happy to see me and tell me about their chapter," said one boy. "The general atmosphere seemed to be more of pleasant, relaxed conversation than of judging me, especially after Monday night."

To this most boys emphatically agreed.

MANY DISAPPOINTED RUSHEES

There are many rushees who were a little disappointed in not being invited back to a specific house. One boy stated that he had been planning all along to join a certain fraternity, then got the 'ax" Tuesday night. Undaunted, he plans to join his second choice fraternity.

Being "axed" was not as embarrassing as first thought said several who had had this experience. Remarked one: "When I got there I felt just as welcome as before but soon after one of the members suggested we go see the kitchen. He then told me he was very sorry but one of the members thought that I would make too many pledges from my home town in their chapter, that I was welcome back any time, and if I decided not to pledge another fraternity this year they would like to rush me next year. He then thanked me for looking over their house and men and that was that."

NO HIGH PRESSURES USED

All of the boys reported that no high-pressure techniques had been applied to "sell" the fraternity to them. The rushing policy seemed to be a subtle stream of chapter propaganda although many freshmen said they did as much talking as their hosts.

When asked if they noticed any distinct variations between each of the fraternities they had visited nine said yes and six, no. Although they had only gone to an average of five fraternities each affirmative replier felt qualified to cite some differences.

One stated: I was able to see from the seven invitations that I received that some fraternities are my 'type' and some I just wouldn't be happy in. Fraternity A, for instance, seems to lay more emphasis on scholarship than Fraternity B although B definitely has the better house. Another fraternity was mostly jocks while one looked like Sunday was their big day of the week. Although I had heard that Fraternity C was all party boys they seemed more quiet and friendly than any I have visited."

LOCATION IMPORTANT

Another felt house location had something to do with individuality. "It seems to me that the houses in the two courts are pretty much the same with the exception of one fraternity. Although I would be happy in any of them, in fact I'm hoping to pledge one there, it seems that the guys that are more 'individualistic' are found at one of the more isolated houses. Living so close together has made some of them almost identical in personality, I sup-

Before You Pledge

Tomorrow, you will have an opportunity to pledge the fraternity of your choice. Before you do, think.

Think if you have taken stock of your academic responsibilities.

Think if you are not pledging a fraternity on the rebound from being blackballed at another that you would have liked better.

Think whether the fraternity respects individuality or will try to subvert this for the sake of the house.

Think whether you want to spend the bulk of your time in fraternity duties, and whether this is more important than the extra-curricular or academic pursuits that are more immediately vital to an education and to widened horizons.

Think of whether the social advantages of the fraternity square with the most important academic opportunities on the campus.

Think whether you want to be a citizen of the world or the campus or of three or two Greek letters.

Think whether you have answered all the questions you have had about fraternities.

Think whether you know all the members, and whether all respect you for what you are rather than for what they can make of you.

Think about all these things, and think about the question of whether you are prepared now to go into fraternity life.

If you've thought about all these things, and you still want to pledge, pledge. If not, wait. The opportunities to pledge in the next four years are many. The chance to get out is little. Be selfish with your individuality. Save it for that time when it is respected.

The choice is yours now. Make the right one.

Atomic Testing

The Russians have resumed nuclear tests, and although the United States may howl, they had every right to do it on the grounds that they claimed as valid — that the United States excercised bad faith with respect to nuclear tests.

The United States not only failed to suspend tests, but even in negotiations to bilaterally suspend tests, the United States has held out for tests for peaceful purposes including high altitude detonations and small arms weapons with not quite as lethal a punch.

The United States when it said it would suspend tests was careful to place the date after its current series of tests.

Back in 1956 their was a man roaming the country by the name of Stevenson. This man was an unusual fellow for he at that time advocated the suspension of nuclear testing. This proposal was laughed at, but in the meantime the Russians have cashed in on this proposal to place the United States at a propoganda disadvantage and to point out to the people of the world that the United States is the warmonster not Russia.

Back in 1956 there was nothing to lose and everything to gain by nuclear suspension. Still now there is nothing to lose.

With Russia starting a new series of tests, the United States can announce publicly that it is suspending nuclear tests on all fronts, and with detection equipment as it is at the present time, other nations would be able and should be invited to check. The United States could then propose a bi-lateral treaty with Russia that would bind the two countries. If Russia refused, the United States could claim bad faith. Moreover, the world would have somewhat less Strontium 90 in the air and the arms buildup would not be continuing at a pace which would almost inevitably lead to war.

The chance for the United States to score a major propaganda victory is gone, but the opportunity to salvage something from the wreckage is still there.

Allow me to introduce Theodosia to you. Theodosia is a skull. Not the ordinary garden variety of skull, mind you; not like the skull of an old friend you keep around the house as a souvenier. Theodosia is a special skull.

Two things make her standout in a crowd of ordinary head bones: she is colored in a delicate mixture of green, blue, black and pink, and she is made entirely of clay.

Formed by the sadistic hands of a friend and presented to me as a good luck charm, this ceramic cranium adorns my otherwise dull desk as a paperweight, glistens with many-colored baked-on gleam and flashes a jagged smile.

The donor of Theodosia said not only would she bring me good luck, but if I listened carefully she would advise me on the affairs of life. So far she hasn't said anything, but if she does it will probably change my entire outlook on the subject of consumption of alcoholic beverages.

While sitting the other day meditating on the important things in life (Formosa, the Supreme Court, proof markings and sex), I suddenly noticed that Theodosia was rather malformed. In fact she looks positively melted. Her lower jaw protrudes too far, and there's too much slope to her forehead. She more closely resembles the head of an ape than a gentle lady.

This realization could well have been the turning point in my life. From it has evolved an entirely new concept: The Theodosian Theory of Evolution!

The next sound you hear will be Charles Darwin spinning in his grave!

All these years we've been talking ol' Charlie's word for it that we advanced apes climbed down from trees and became people. (Some say the apes that never uite got their feet on the ground became Republicans.)

The Theodosian concept theorizes that people came first and that some of them melted into apes. After all, isn't it human nature to slump slightly and let the chin protrude on a warm day? And who can deny the popularity of bananas as a summer food?

Don't we all have a desire to "go ape" when we get a glow on? Isn't the native habitat of our furry, tree-swinging friends the tropical zones? You'll readily acknowledge that a golf course is a hot place to be on a warm day, and we all know who is making a monkey of himself with a golf ball.

The next time things start to get a little hot remember the Theodosian Theory and reach for a banana!

SAVE THE PETITES DRAMATIQUES!

From time to time in the past year and a half this column has been devoted to the organization known as the Petites Dramatiques. Usually what was said here was either in review or preview of one of its productions. The previews were always enthusiastic, the reviews more often than not were considerably less enthusiastic.

But now all backward glances—all considerations of past success or failure—must be dismissed in the face of a larger issue: should the Petites Dramatiques continue as a student-sponsored organization under the direction of Graham Memorial?

At the present moment, it seems that it is the purpose of Graham Memorial to continue its financial support of this student dramatic group, for the Petites Dramatiques is included in the present organization of the Graham Memorial Activities Board. The future of the group is in question only because the head of the GMAB Drama Committee, Seamon Gottlieb, has resigned his position, and nothing has been accomplished toward appointing a successor.

The issue is complicated by the fact that the Drama Committee has never been anything more than Mr. Gottlieb and a small budget. This has proven an unstable rock on which to found an institution of any permanence.

With Mr. Gottlieb's resignation, then, the Petites Dramatiques has become only a name on a list and a small budget with nowhere to go.

It would be unfortunate if the name should disappear from the list and the budget be reabsorbed into GMAB funds. The idea behind the Petites Dramatiques—an idea which was often obscured by irresponsible management and poor production—is a worthy one. The purpose of the organization (although it never organized) was to provide a chance for students interested in theatrical production to exercise their creative abilities without regard to faculty or finance; and to provide the student body with dramatic entertainment free of charge.

It should go without saying in an intellectual community such as this that such a purpose is worthwhile and should be supported—at least until it bceomes clear that it cannot be realized.

Certainly the Petites Dramatiques have not done well enough to merit unconditional permission and encouragement: after its initial success with "Caligula" over a year ago, its productions have been rarely good and often bad. Always, however, those concerned exhibited enthusiasm and untapped talent: what has been lacking, then, was neither a worthy purpose nor a will to succeed. What has been lacking is intelligent administration of the selection of plays and the assignment of directors and adequate attention to technical details and publicity.

It may seem that this indictment contradicts the assertion that the Petites Dramatiques deserves support; not so, for enthusiasm and purpose are redeeming factors, and administrative failure should not be permitted to condemn an artistic undertaking. Likewise, the resignation of the administrator should not doom the organization.

If, then, it is agreed that the Petites Dramatiques should continue to exist, but that its organization should be changed, two more problems arise: First, what should be the form of the new organization, and then, is such an organization available.

Without sufficient precedent it is impossible to specify what should be the exact composition of the Petites Dramatiques permanent organization. It is certain, however, that a permanent organization of more than one person is essential. A committee composed of students interested in production as well as aesthetics would insure the correction of many past faults: enough personnel would be committed to insure the successful and adequate management of each production, while it may be hopefully assumed that a variety of qualified personalities involved in policy decision would make those decisions more valuable; and it is obvious that a stable administrative body, whatever its composition, would insure the continuity of the organization.

It now remains to find in the student body several students who possess sufficient skill in the various aspects of the theatre to insure that the Petites Dramatiques will have at least reasonable artistic succes.

Perhaps such talent and dedication exists on this campus, and if so it should be sought out. But if there are not enough members of the student body at large with the necessary qualifications then an attempt should be made to secure leadership from the ranks of the group which is most certain to include such talents—the reference being, of course, to the Department of Dramatic Art. The problem involved in this otherwise obvious solution is that there has been little cooperation between the Petites Dramatiques and the D.A. Department to date, mainly because there was real or imagined animosity on the part of that department toward the student group. Whether the D.A. Department has an objection to the existence of the Petites Dramatiques or not, it would no doubt be interesting to all concerned to at least talk about some sore of conciliation. No such conversation has been attempted in the past, despite the difficulty and foolishness of a situation in which two campus groups with related purposes are not on speaking terms.

There is, however, something to be done before the Petites Dramatiues is reorganized, and that is for the students who are interested in its continuance to express their concern to the proper authorities—either to GMAB President Bob Carter, or to Mr. Howard Henry, Director of Graham Memorial.

SAVE THE PETITES DRAMATIQUES!

Letter On Fraternities

Editor:

The Editor of this paper has made a mistake. He has spoken on a phase of campus life which leads myself and other Greek letter fraternity men to believe that he is not qualified to issue opinions without the facts. In most cases, I would defend his right to say what he wants on his page. In this case I will not. Curtis Gans is so poorly informed on fraternity life that it is frightening to see that he is writing about this.

Before proceeding into my rather lengthy blast at "my boss," I would like to say that I greatly appreciate this space on the editorial page in the form of a letter to take issue with the editor.

In conjunction with his editorials this week, a front page series has been running, compiled by myself and another member of the editorial staff, Jamie Holmes.

Holmes and I have compiled this feature series in the sincere hope that it will enable the prospective pledge to choose more wisely the house to which he wants to belong. Speaking only for myself, and not for Holmes, there has been great dissention with Gans. I predicted over and over again that he would use this series to release long attacks on the Greeks. It now appears that my predictions are accurate. Obviously there are many areas of fraternity life which need to be corrected; however, Gans has continually torn down without suggesting changes.

In Sunday's issue of The Daily Tar Heel Gans said, "If you value your initial independence, then to pledge a fraternity at this time would be for you foolhardy." What he failed to say was independent individuals will remain so, in or out of a fraternity. Either a person is an individual, or he isn't. Joining a fraternity will affect this very little.

He went on to say, "Most of you shouldn't pledge a fraternity at this time." Here he may have a valid point. I have often spoken against immediate rush. However, I have yet to see a suitable alternative which will allow the Greeks to survive financially. If a freshman investigates the house which he wants to pledge thoroughly during rush week, there is no real reason why he can't make a smart selection.

The rest of Sunday's editorial had valid points which I cannot dispute.

In Wednesday's edition of The Daily Tar Heel, Gans States: "Some of the rushees have already been blackballed or not invited to return to a specific fraternity. Individual fraternity members have done this on the basis of a two minute conversation or on the basis of the individuals appearance." In some cases this is a true assertion.

Yet, Gans has never participated in a formal rush program as a fraternity man. He has never spoken in a lodge meeting for boys that he wants in a house. He has never seen it "from the other side."

I will be the first to admit that balling a person in many respects is cruel. But as Gans pointed out, this is a fraternity man's choice.

I have either seen or been through rush in close to fifteen houses on campus. I have always been impressed with the manner in which they attempt to get to know the many boys coming through rush. Naturally it isn't possible for each boy in each house to know each rushee. However, it is possible and in most cases probable that two or three or four or in many cases more, will know a rushee well by the time he leaves. The word of these men is then taken in a lodge meeting. If you can't trust the judgement of your brothers, then brotherhood doesn't exist.

Gans has not presented an accurate picture of the blackball system. Every house on campus has been in lodge up until four or five in the morning this week in an attempt to give every boy a fair shake. I think I would rather take their word than Gans'.

I am sorry that Gans and I have disagreed so much on this issue. In most cases the Editor of this paper uses great discretion before printing. His judgement is to be respected in most cases.

However, from his lofty pinnacle in the Daily Tar Heel office, he is not qualified to view fraternity life. I urge him to be more careful, before tearing down fraternities.

I hope he will accept an invitation to visit my house and others throughout the year. Of course, in many cases his judgement will not be changed. However, he will have a better chance to formulate accurate opinions.

Arthur Lessing

A pleasant if not particularly profound evening of two-piano music opened the Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series with a recital by William S. Newman and Wilton Mason, both members of the faculty. The program included the two-piano version of Brahms's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, the Sonata in D major, K. 448 of Mozart, and the Second Suite, Opus 17, of Rachmaninoff.

Both pianists revealed a complete technical control over their musical material, shown especially in their performance of the Rachmaninoff Suite. Unfortunately this work is, except for a melodic slow movement, as tedious and boring a work the composer ever wrote, and the artists' labor seemed wasted on music not worth the hard work which undoubtedly went into the preparation for the performance.

Hearing the Brahms Variations brings to mind the more popularly known orchestral version,a nd inevitably one compares. Whether it was the pianists' fault or not, the piano version struck me as colorless and quite muddy in registration. These shortcomings may be blamed on the peculiar difficulties which face the two piano ensemble. The individual tones of the pianos tend to merge, making it difficult to distinguish line and harmonic structure. Furthermore, the tonal ualities of two pianos can hardly approach those of a full orchestra.

What seemed to be missing was the familiar warmth that Brahms so lovingly creates with his sense of melodic content (admittedly an awkward concept) and rich harmonic flow. Also the slow tempi with which the artists approached the theme and its variations created a pedestrian even sluggish movement, which, in turn, hampered the clearly rugged rhythmic elements of the compositions. Variations 2 (piu vivace), 5 (poco Presto), and 6 (Vivace) sounded unconvincing for these reasons. The artists seemed at their best in the slower parts and the fourth variation (Andante con moto) was beautifully played.

The performance of the Mozart Sonata was clearly the most rewarding event of the evening. A totally sunny work, the composion rolls along with joy and happiness. It reminded of the Marriage of Figaro Overture—operatic and with a sense of anticipation for more wonderful things to come. The tempi here were all fast, as they should be; the tone light; and the ensemble playing miraculously clear and exact, especially amazing in view of the speed of the performance. Only an occasionally unnecessary pedalling hurt the clarity of the music. The slow movement was truly beautiful; and its endnig with the delayed cadences presented the audience with the haunting synthesis of dramatic impact and lyric grace—a unity of two almost opposed characters. The closing movement of the Sonata again was quite delightful, and played with deserving sensitivity and insight.

All in all, the series seems off to a good start.

Diana held a .22-caliber rifle in her hands as she watched television and waited for Robert. "When he walked from the kitchen through the door to the den, I shot him," she said. The blonde 16 year old girl, described as a brilliant high school senior, killed her brother last Tuesday because nothing exciting ever happened around their suburban home.—Raleigh News & Observer

Diana doubtlessly can be classified as a psychotic. What's more, since her intellect is superior and her behavior heretofore normal, she's probably suffering from a functional psychosis of environmental origin rather than organic psychosis (hereditary, from injury or from disease). She is being held without charge by juvenile authorities pending psychiatric tests.

Psychotics are distinguished as such because they react in extreme ways to anxiety-producing environmental conditions. LaBarre in "The Human Animal" points out that culture heroes—people whose names are recorded in history as initiators of great reforms or movements—react in generally unaccepted ways to these conditions, too.

Apparently the culture hero holds his highly regarded position solely because he has a better public relations program than the psychotic. If numerous people join in his madnes, he's no longer mad but a great leader or prophet. Hitler proved this point when more than half a hundred million Germans, spurred by his ravings, ignited the greatest conflagration the world has experienced. Undoubtedly the bewhiskered sages of the Sanhedran thought they had removed a dangerous psychotic from Jerusalem when Christ was executed until they discovered he had already become an invincible culture hero.

Then there are those who, try as they may, fail in their public relations program, are labeled psychotics, and sent to an appropriate institution. In one such asylum a visiting VIP asked one of the inmates his name.

The patient replied striking an appropriate hand-in-jacket pose, "I am Napolean Bonaparte."

"Impossible," cried the VIP, "Who told you such a ridiculous thing?"

"God did," was the answer.

An authorative voice from the corner of the ward interrupted, "I did not!"

The nation is shocked about Diana's bizarre behavior, and she didn't conduct a successful public relations program. It's doubtful if she can become a culture hero even among her contemporary fellow adolescents who make cultural paradoxes out of their young lives when they idolize Elvis Pressly and Jerry Lee Lewis (certainly neither specimens of classical manhood), when they drive souped-up hotrods (without regard for our hallowed rights of life and property).

Just what events in Diana's comfortable, suburban home life could have brought about enough anxiety to make her kill Robert? It was not events; it was lack of events. She wanted excitement. She was bored.

Is that what is the matter with the great American nation? Are we bored with too much leisure time culminating from a shorter work week and more rapid transportation, from automation in the home? Are we bored with unprecedented prosperity, with stuffing our fat bellies? Are we bored with the same old movies and the same old TV . . . . Diana was watching television as she waited for Robert.

And what do we do about our boredom? Some of us temporarily stifle it—drown it in alcohol, tire it out in athletics, suffocate it in sex . . . . or maybe we kill people.

Then there is a curious breed who seem to ignore boredom rather than continually trying to stifle it. You can see them over at Hill Hall or Ackland Art Gallery, at church vesper services on weekday evenings, coming out of the library with books—books actually not required in a course. They are for the most part a peculiar bunch. They are "pseudos" and probably sexually perverted, certainly not fit to associate with. Why, they aren't even bored with life!

Rush Comments By Fifteen Are Favorable

pose."

One freshman who had received six invitations stated: "Look. It's belonging to a fraternity that counts. I don't think it makes any difference which house you're in—they're not that varied."

Before Rush Week began a different group of freshmen were interviewed and asked "why join a fraternity?"

These answers ranged from Uncle Melvyn being president of Phi Lambs back in '38 to fraternities being a breeding ground for later contacts in the business world.

Twelve of the fifteen frankly expressed social activities as being the chief reason for joining a fraternity. They felt that dormitory life did not offer an opportunity to develop close and intimate friendships and also desired "more parties and a more enjoyable time" than would be possible, they said, outside of a fraternity.

Several thought they needed a fraternity to give them a "sense of belonging and identity" in a university of 7,200 students.

Tar Heels Battle Trojans Tonight At 11 In LA

Tonight at 8:15 Coast Time the twice beaten Carolina Tar Heels will be looking for their first win of the season in the gigantic confines of Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum against the power-laden Trojans of Southern California.

The Los Angeles school will go into tonight's game favored by most predictors, with a point spread ranging from 3 to 14.

Carolina stands to be the underdog in their second straight contest.

The game doesn't get underway until 11:15 our time, but will be broadcast by WRAL radio in Raleigh at that time.

The home-standing Trojans go into tonight's game with a very creditable 1-1 record. USC upset Oregon State, 21-0 in their first encounter, then scared the daylights out of powerful Michigan last week before bowing, 20-19. Southern Cal should have won the game, but lost a fumble at the Michigan goal line, which eventually spelled the difference.

Thus far in the young season, the Trojans have unveiled a devestating ground attack, taking to the air only to keep the defense honest. The SC lads have thrown only 10 aerials per game as yet.

The probable starting lineups:

Carolina		Southern Cal.
Don Kemper	LE	Hillard Hill
Phil Blazer	LT	Don Ficca
Fred Swearinger	LG	F. Fiorentino
Ronnie Koes	C	Ken Antle
Fred Mueller	RG	Mike McKeever
Don Redding	RT	Monte Clark
Al Goldstein	RE	M. McKeever
Jack Cummings	QB	Tom Maudlin
Wade Smith	LHB	Bob Arnett
Emil DeCantis	RHB	Rex Johnston
Bob Shupin	FB	Jim Persinger

Running from a predominately split-T offense, with flankers and an occasional slot back, Southern Cal completely dominated powerful Oregon State in their opener. The near miss at Michigan is just another example of the power the Trojans can boast.

The pattern the Horses have set offensively has been to get the yardage on the ground down inside the 20, then throw. They completed 3 touchdown passes in their first two games.

Carolina's record, 0-2, does not begin to tell the story of a really good football team. In their first two games, the Tar Heels haven't gotten the breaks. Although they handed State a victory on a silver platter, the Clemson game was a rough and tough battle from kick-off to final gun.

The Tar Heels, because of their record, are somewhat of an unknown quantity to most fans. They have shown what they can do only in spurts.

The game tonight will feature four fine quarterbacks, two from each team. Willie Wood and Johnny Maudlin from Southern Cal and Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe from Carolina should furnish plenty of offensive fireworks tonight.

The only inexperienced position on the Trojan team is in the line, where three sophs will start. Carolina has two good lines, which have been almost interchangeable so far.

The Tar Heels' problem at fullback should be made a little clearer tonight by the performance of several players. Don Coker, the starter, is being heavily pushed for his job by Milan Wall, Ed Lipski, Frank Riggs, and Bob Shupin.

Although Southern Cal certainly is a power to be reckoned with, Carolina fans across the state and nation will be hoping for a rebound toward the right direction tonight when the intersectional foes face off.

Willie Wood, Southern Cal's starting quarterback, will miss tonight's game with the Carolina Tar Heels due to a shoulder injury suffered in practice. His replacement will be the second unit quarterback, Tom Maudlin. No details were available as to the extent of Wood's injury.

On Campus with Max Shulman

(By the Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and, "Barefoot Boy with Cheek.")

HOW GREEN WAS MY CAMPUS

Don't tell me: I know how busy you've been! I know all the things you've had to do in the opening days of the school year — registering, paying fees, finding lodgings, entering a drag race, getting married, building a cage for your raccoon. But now, with all these essentials out of the way, let us pause and join hands and take, for the first time, a long, leisurely look at our campus.

Ready? Let's go!

We begin our tour over here on this lovely stretch of greensward called The Mall. The Mall, as we all know, was named in honor of our distinguished alumnus Fred Mall, inventor of the opposing thumb. Before Mr. Mall's invention, the thumb could not be pressed or clicked against the other fingers. As a result, millions of castanet makers were out of work. Today however, thanks to Mr. Mall, one out of every three Americans is gainfully employed making castanets. (The other two make croquet wickets.) Mr. Mall is now 106 years old and living in seclusion on a sea cliff in Wellington, Kansas, but the old gentleman is far from idle. He still works twelve hours a day in his laboratory, and in the last year has invented the tuna, the cuticle, and lint.

...the old gentleman is far from idle...

But I digress. Let us resume our tour. At the end of The Mall we see a handsome edifice called The Library. Here books are kept. By "kept" I mean "kept." There is no way in the world for you to get a book out of the library... No, I'm wrong. If you have a stack permit you can take out a book, but stack permits are issued only to widows of Presidents of the United States. (That lady you see coming out of the library with a copy of Girl of the Limberlost is Mrs. Millard Fillmore.)

Next to The Library we see the Administration Building. Here one finds the president of the university, the deans, and the registrar. According to ancient academic usage, the president is always called "Prexy." Similarly, the deans are called "Dixie" and the registrar is called "Roxy." Professors are called "Proxy" and housemothers are called "Hoxy-Moxy." Students are called "Algae."

Diagonally across The Mall we see the Students Union. It is a gay mad place, frankly dedicated to the fun and relaxation of we undergraduates. Here we undergraduates may enjoy ourselves in one of two ways—with filter or without. We undergraduates who prefer filters prefer Marlboro, of course. Oh, what a piece of work is Marlboro! The filter filters, the taste is smooth but not skimpy, mild but not meagre.

We undergraduates who prefer non-filters, prefer Philip Morris, of corris. It is a natural smoke, a clean smoke, a flavorful, restful, pure and peaceful smoke... Now hear this: Philip Morris and Marlboro each come in a choice of two packs—crushproof Flip-Top Box, or the familiar Soft Pack.

So now, as the setting sun casts a fiery aura over the spires and battlements of our beloved campus, let us hie ourselves to our tobacconist's and lay in a night's supply of Marlboro or Philip Morris, and then let us, lowing, wind slowly o'er the lea to our dormitories and sit upon our army surplus cots, spent but content, and smoke and dream and hark the curfew toll the knell of parting day. Aloha, fair campus, aloha!

IDC To Pay For Half Of New Dorms' Jersies

The Inter-Dormitory Council has announced that they will pay half of the price of the intramural jersies for the three new men's dorms — Avery, Parker and Teague.

The Council followed the same program last year and felt that it greatly stimulated interest in intramural activities.

Dorms interested have been asked to contact Tom Cordle in 312 Cobb.

Tar Babies Meet Va.

The members of Carolina's freshman football team will get their first taste of college football this afternoon when they go against a Virginia frosh squad at Charlottesville, Va.

With the Cavalier frosh greatly improved over last year, the Tar Babies can expect quite a battle. For Virginia varsity coach Dick Voris this game represents the first time that his hand-picked recruits have been tested under fire.

Tar Baby coach Bud Carson has been busy for the past few days trying to patch together a lineup to send against the Cavalier Yearlings Carson has been plagued with injuries to several key players in his starting lineup.

Hagarty and McMillan Sidelined

Tackle John Hagarty has been sidelined by a leg injury and will be replaced by Don Amos for the opening game. The other first stringer on the disabled list is guard Benton McMillan.

Carson's starting lineup for the game this afternoon will probably find Bill Lopp and John Runco at the ends, Amos and Ben Gallagher at tackle, Bill Taylor and Dick Fullam the guards, and Gary Truver at center.

The backfield will be led by Ray Farris at quarterback. Farris will be backed up by halfbacks Gil Carson, Gene Shuford, and Breck Regan and Joe Davies at fullback.

SURPRISE STARTER—Tom Maudlin will be starting at quarterback for Southern Cal tonight when the Trojans meet Carolina. Willie Wood, the original starter, will not see action due to a shoulder injury.

Tillich Asserts Secularism Religion's Biggest Battle

Dr. Paul Tillich, University Professor at Harvard University, asserted last night that the greatest modern challenge to religion in general and Christianity in particular is secularism, and promised to elaboate on this point tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

Tillich is the first Wesley Lecturer in an annual series starting this year designed to bring noted theologians to the University to speak on current theological problems. The speech was the first of two to be delivered by Tillich.

TILLICH SPEAKS—Dr. Paul Tillich speaks to an overflow gathering at Hill Hall last night, in the first of his two lectures sponsored by the Wesley Foundation. Tillich will speak tonight at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

In pointing out the differences between existing religions, Tillich made a sharp distinction between the Eastern religions, Hinduism and Buddhism, and the Western religions of Islam, Judaism, and Christianity.

Selecting these religions for his talk on "The Present Encounter of the World Religions" because they were the only ones which could really qualify as world religions on the basis of adherence and universality of message, Tillich described Christianity as being the most all-embracing.

Dividing the forms of religion into four types, he pointed out that prevalent in each of the world religions was a semblance of the sacramental type where the Holy or God is shown concretely either in some symbolic objects or scriptures or other overt manifestations of divinity.

The second classification into which the oriental religions largely fall is the mystical where the divine is universally present and permeates everything. The divine here transcends the universe.

He classified Judaism in the third block of religious typology; namely the ethical type or the religion of the "ought-to-be."

The fourth type in which Christianity finds itself is the type which encompasses all three.

He pointed out that whereas the Eastern religions are capable of assimilating much of Christianity by their very nature in that the divine transcends everything, the Western religions cannot admit the Eastern. Occasionally, he pointed out, some Protestants have sought to incorporate Eastern theology because of the strictness of their internal legal system or because of the rigidity of the moral code, but this was not in any sense a true religion but more of an escape to wider freedom.

To the question of whether a synthesis could be developed of the existing religions so that the product world be a universal religion for this world, Tillich had the unequivocal answer of "no." He pointed out that their fundamental precepts of Eastern and Western religions were so divergent in their concepts of man and divinity as to render this synthesis as a false creation with respect to the existing religions.

OF PLANETARIUM

Fall Show Begins Tenth Anniversary

A program timely and appropriate to the season opened the Morehead Planetarium's Tenth Anniversary Year Tuesday.

Titled "Autumn Constellations," the presentation included the heavenly objects now visible in the fall skies of North Carolina and neighboring states.

In addition, the versatility of the great Zeiss planetarium instrument is employed to show and to explain the forthcoming October 12 total eclipse of the sun, which will be seen in South American latitudes.

"Autumn Constellations" is a program about the groups of stars which the ancients named more than 3,000 years ago to commemorate some legendary hero or heroine or strange creature. They include the Royal Family, Cygnus the Swan, Aquila the Eagle, Hercules, Pices, Lyra, Ursa Minor and others.

The classical figures are outlined in the Morehead Planetarium sky in delicate lines of light from special projectors, and the stories of ancient legends will be told to enhance and give meaning to the names.

"Weather permitting, all the constellations in the program will be visible in North Carolina skies during the fall," Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano said. "All will be visible, regardless of the weather, in the Planetarium skies."

The constellations compose one field of astronomy, according to Jenzano, in which anyone from the young school boy or girl to the lawyers or housewife can become more proficient than the professional astronomer. It is one branch of astronomy, he says, which one can practice without any equipment on any clear night.

A pair of eyes and a clean sky are all that are necessary.

W. C. Studied By Trustees

GREENSBORO — (AP) — The complete picture of Woman's College varied operations as the state's only public supported liberal arts college for women, was presented yesterday to the Visiting Committee of the University Board of Trustees, holding its annual meeting on the campus.

Chancellor Gordon W. Blackwell and other administrative leaders, faculty members, and student representatives met with the visiting officials at Alumnae House. The meeting will be continued Saturday morning.

New faculty appointments and enrollment gains were discussed by Dr. Blackwell. Dean Mereb Mossman cited admissions testing, academic standards and academic programs for superior students.

Graduate programs and research were presented by Dean J. A. Davis. Placement of graduates in jobs and the college's religious activities for students were outlined by Dean Katherine Taylor.

Miss Peggy Duncan, Fairborn, Ohio, student government president, headed a group of students appearing before the committee.

The college's biennial budget request and its long-range plan of capital improvements were explained by Wendell Murray, business manager.

Clarification Of Coed Rules Issued By WRC

The clarification of freshmen women's rules was on the agenda of the Women's Residence Council at a meeting this week.

The WRC decided that a violation of the closed study rule would be a House Council offense instead of an Honor Council violation.

A motion for this rule change was introduced to the WRC by Katie Stewart, chairman of Women's Orientation.

In a discussion on whether or not freshmen should have an assigned campus night for lateness, the WRC decided that the present policy of an assigned Friday night campus shall continue unless decided otherwise by the dormitory House Council.

The WRC clarified the rule that freshmen are allowed to break closed study one night a week unless given special permission for such things as required sorority meetings and other campus activities.

Dewey Dance and Laurie Guard were appointed to the Handbook Rules Committee of the WRC.

Graham Adams Chairman Of GM Committee

Graham Adams, sophomore from Rocky Mount, has been appointed new chairman of the Drama Committee of Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Bob Carter, president of GMAB, announced Wednesday Graham's appointment to the post formerly held by Seaman Gottlieb, who resigned because of other campus obligations.

"He is indeed interested in drama and its function on this campus," Carter said, and I feel he will do a successful job in this endeavor."

Carter also announced that GMAB will conduct a poll to determine what particular activities and recreation facilities the students would like to have which are now not available. In addition the poll will ask what records and magazines students would like to see added to the Graham Memorial collection.

Any suggestion by students who are not reached by this poll will be appreciated, Carter said.

Other GMAB activities this week include free music in the Rendezvous Room Saturday night for all those wanting to dance.

A football contest is also planned well as a dance to follow the game.

Students are still needed for many of the Committees of GMAB, Carter said. All interested students have been urged to come by the GMAB office and fill out an application.

Tar Heels Top Trojans 8-7 On Great Line Play

Via WRAL Raleigh

Carolina's Tar Heels, led by savage blocking and tackling in a brilliant line performance, whipped the favored Southern California Trojans 8-7 last night in Los Angeles before a crowd of 43,000

The final score didn't begin to tell the story, as the Tar Heels completely dominated the game after the first quarter.

The tremendous line play of Fred Swearingen, Fred Meller, Rip Hawkins, Phil Blazer, John Schroeder and many others, was the featured attraction as the Tar Heels snapped a two-game losing streak.

The new two-point rule won the first game of the season for the Tar Heels. The Heels lost several goodscoring chances, but the stout defense made the 1-point lead hold up.

Southern Cal struck first, in the initial quarter, when Jerry Persinger recovered a fumbled Tar Heel pass at the Carolina 45. Then the big break came as Tom Maudlin pitched to Hillard Hill in the end zone. Hill missed the pass, but interference was called. The Trojans, with first and goal from the 1-foot line, sent Maudlin on a sneak into the end zone. Rex Johnston split the uprights to make it Southern Cal 7, Carolina 0.

Carolina came right back to go ahead 8-7 early in the second quarter. Jack Cummings intercepted a Trojan pass and galloped back to the Southern Cal 39. DeCantis cracked down to the 27; then Wade Smith cut wide around right end, picked up blockers and went into the end zone unmolested. DeCantis ran it over around left end for the 2-pointer, giving the Tar Heels an 8-7 lead.

Southern Cal threatened strongly on the ensuing kick-off, getting a first and 10 on the Carolina 28. But the Tar Heel line really got tough, as Fred Mueller broke through the Trojan line twice to smear Maudlin, forcing the Trojans back to their own 48.

Carolina got a big break near the end of the half when an Ed Lipski quick-kick was fumbled by Don Buford at the Trojan 12 as Moose Butler racked him up. But the Trojans staved off the drive when Madlin picked off a Cummings aerial and ran it back to the SC 15.

Although the Tar Heels didn't score in the second half, the defense was so strong that eight points looked like a million.

In the third quarter the Trojans netted only -1 yards on offense. They got only 18 yards in the entire second half. The Trojans never got beyond their own 40 in the final half.

The temperature was something like 85 degrees in a very hot night in Los Angeles.

The brilliant kicking of Jack Cummings in the second stanza put the ball out of bounds inside the Southern Cal 15 on three different occasions. Once Cummings hit a coffin corner inside the 1-yard line.

The quick kick was also used to great advantage with Ed Lipski and Don Coker doing the damage.

Coker, Lipski, Moe DeCantis, and Wade Smith are only a few of the runners who routed the Trojans at their own game. Carolina's main power came on the ground.

The Tar Heels ran from a prototype offense most of the night, using split-ends, flankers, and slot backs. Southern Cal also used varied patterns, but the Heels refused to be fooled.

L. A. Made It Hot For Tar Heel Team

LOS ANGELES—(AP) — The temperature scorched up to 101 in Los Angeles yesterday it hit 104 in San Pedro at the harbor.

This followed yesteday's 99.3 in a heat wave which the Weather Bureau stays will continue through the weekend.

Weathermen said it might have gone higher but for a smoke layer, mostly from a Monrovia brush fire.

The last time it hit 100 or higher in Los Angeles was July 4, 1957, when 102 was recorded.

Barnet And The Gladiolas Are Fall Germans Features

The well known rock and roll vocal group, the Gladiolas, will join Charlie Barnet's orchestra for the Fall Germans weekend concert and dance Oct. 31 and Nov. 1.

Appearing also will be the "Petticoats," another vocal group, and the comic impressionist, Bob McFadden.

The program will consist of a concert Friday afternoon, Oct. 31, in Memorial Hall, and a dance Saturday night, Nov. 1, in Woollen Gym.

The Carolina football game that weekend will be with the University of Tennessee at Knoxville. However, for football enthusiasts, Germans Club members have said that Duke-Georgia Tech game will be nearby in Durham.

"Due to rush," John McKee, president of the Germans Club, said, "time has permitted only one meeting of the Germans Club, but plans for the weekend are pretty well organized."

The Gladiolas, Charlotte's own rock 'n roll rage, are best known for their record of "Little Darlin'." They are being brought back after a successful appearance at last year's Germans.

Charlie Barnet is a well established New York orchestra with a style to watch, that of the popular jazz artist, Stan Kenton. Barnet has been touring the country this season and will have his own vocalist for the Germans weekend.

The "Petticoats" won the Arthur Godfrey Talent Show award several years ago and have since been in demand for public appearances.

Deferred Rush Okay, If Feasible: Furtado

Student Body President Don Furtado said yesterday that he would be in favor of deferred fraternity rush if it were feasible.

But Furtado does not think such a plan is feasible at the present time.

He said, "The primary reason for this belief is not a fear of so-called 'dirty rush,' but merely a recognition of the financial problems which would arise."

Furtado pointed out that at schools such as Duke University or even Wake Forest and Davidson some system of delayed rush might be practical. At these schools fraternities are not subjected to so many financial obligations, such as house upkeep, as the chapters here.

He continued, "I think that freshman sometimes certainly make mistakes in fraternity selection. But a partial solution to this problem may be to impress upon the potential rushee it is not mandatory that he pledge during the official rush period.

"I would like to emphasize by saying that I do think deferred rush is presently practical, I do not intend to say that it never can be."

In conclusion he expressed the hope that the IFC would continue to investigate every possible means which might possibly bring about a full solution or at least some alleviation to the problem

And It's Not Even Raining Violets . . .

Tired of the rainy, cold weather.

Keep your chin up and your raincoat on. The rain is expected to continue for one or two more days, says the weatherman.

The forecast — given by the Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport — is also for a gradual rise in temperature.

"The temperature could possibly be normal by Sunday," the weatherman said, "but there is still the threat of rain as we see it now." High readings for this time of year usually are above 55 degrees.

The cold air and rain are caused by a warm front to the south "overrunning" cold air in this area. The "overrunning" causes water to be squeezed out as if from a sponge.

Caravan To Be Discussed At University Club Meet

Student Body President Don Furtado will discuss the possibility of having a caravan weekend this year at Tuesday's meeting of the University Club.

Furtado will discuss the responses he has received from different organizations, both here and at the University of Virginia, concerning the caravan.

This year, for the first time in recent University history there was no definite date for a football holiday set in advance of the beginning of the school year. For this reason, University Club officials and Student Government officers have not had any concrete date on which to lay plans.

Present at the club meeting Tuesday night will be representatives of the UNC Band, UNC Cardboard, from major campus organizations, the entire cheering squad and the University Club representatives fraternities nad dormitories.

Club President Dave Jones said, in calling the meeting and in inviting the student body president to speak, "The Caravan has been a lot of fun for everyone who has taken part in one. We would like to have a successful trip this year, and show our opponents that we are behind our team 100 per cent."

UNC Faculty Men Attending Meeting

Three faculty members of the UNC School of Medicine will attend the meeting of the American College of Surgeons in Chicago Oct. 5-9.

They are Drs. Erle E. Peacock Jr., Colin G. Thomas and James F. Newsome.

Dr. Peacock will speak on "Biological Reactions to Collagen Transplants" and Dr. Thomas will give a paper on "Control of Free Tumor Cell Growth by Topical Chemotherapeutic Agents."

Mine Expert Speaks Tonight In Carolina Inn

Dr. John D. Morgan Jr. of Washington, D. C., internationally known mining consultant, will be guest speaker at the third regular meeting of the eastern North Carolina subsection of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers.

"National Mineral Policies in the Nuclear Age—The U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R." will be the topic of Dr. Morgan's talk, set for 8 p.m. Saturday in the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

The social hour will begin at 6:30 p.m., with a dinner to follow at 7:15 p.m., for AIME members only. The public, however, is invited to attend Dr. Morgan's lecture following the meal.

RACIAL AND RELIGIOUS

Discrimination Still Practiced At UNC

By DAVIS B. YOUNG and JAMIE HOLMES

(This is the last article in a series on fraternities at UNC.)

Of the twenty-four Chapel Hill fraternities involved in Rush Week, twenty-one have been rushing gentile boys and three have been angling for Jewish freshmen.

This distinction between Jewish and non-Jewish boys once again raises the controversial topic of discrimination as practiced by the different fraternities.

Negroes are rarely considered in the various discussions because the present minuteness of their numbers makes the colored pledging issue purely hypothetical. No Negro has ever applied for admission to a Chapel Hill fraternity.

This year as in previous years applicants to UNC had to state their religious preferences. From these applications the Office of Student Affairs, as a service to the fraternities, compiles a list of each boy and places a "J" before the names of Jewish students. They then send this list to every fraternity house on campus, both Gentile and Jew.

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, said several years ago a rabbi objected to this practice as discriminating against a race of people.

However, Jefferies said, both the Jewish and non-Jewish fraternities had requested that non-Christians be so designated in order to save embarassment during Rush Week to Gentile houses with discriminatory clauses, and to facilitate rushing for the Jewish fraternities.

Therefore the Office of Student Affairs continued including the "J" on their lists.

Jefferies says that this is the last year for such distinction, however as hereafter application blanks will not include the religious preference question.

Fraternity members of both Jewish and non-Jewish houses are collectively undecided as to whether "segregated" fraternities are healthy or not. Some members of Jewish houses prefer the system as it now stands while others seem personally offended at being "unofficially excluded" from other fraternities.

One Jewish student in favor of the status quo said: "Most fraternities on this campus were founded at a time when religion existed on a more formal, regulatory and demanding basis. Naturally the foundations of these houses were of religious brick."

"However, a more basic outlook of society in general upon religious difference is obviously responsible for the segregation existing in our fraternities today.

"Religion is more than religion per se. It indicates background, values, attitudes and many more intangibles. It is the exception rather than the rule when people of different faiths reach the closeness and mutual confidence that exists in a fraternity house.

"Mixed fraternities will work, as evidenced by their prominance on many an Ivy League campus. Still, it must be remembered that individuals make up fraternities and until a more liberal attitude prevails upon these individuals, the present system will exist, probably for the better, since a change of this kind should not be forced, but resolved."

A small number of Gentile fraternities have clauses in their by-laws which prohibit pledging a non-white, non-Christian boy. Several that don't have these discriminatory clauses have "gentlemen's agreements" concerning non-Christian boys. Most simply ignore those with a preceeding "J" when making out their rush list.

In a statement from a member of a non-Jewish house came these words: "The day is soon coming when we will take a Jewish boy into our house. The day is also coming when a Jewish house will pledge a Christian student. It will be healthy only if handled in a mature and adult manner."

But, said a fraternity member of a house with discriminatory clauses, "I feel bound to abide by the tenets of my house even though I personally feel the clause could be removed with no ill effects. The national fraternity however will never allow the clause to be removed.

"They have stated in no uncertain terms that the charter would be pulled first."

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday were:

Jean Patricia DuBose, Gail Gwen Grimes, John Samuel Pollock Jr., Edsel Monroe Odom, John Francis Mosher, Bryan Grimes, George Walker Bender, Lawrence Holland Snider, Donald Wofford Allen, Charles Robert Lee Jr., Ray Davis Fennell, John Perry Sossamon, Frank Bodie Netherland, John Edwin Reeves Jr., Herman Edward Tickle Jr. and Robert McDonald Diggs.

Fraternities

Many people have asked why is so much written on fraternities. Why, if you are opposed to them, do you not write that they should be abolished and have done with it. The answer is simple.

There is nothing inherently wrong with fraternities. Fraternities have the potential of being one of the genuinely creative organs on the campus whereby intellectual development is encouraged and a social outlet is provided.

The problem is that on the UNC campus for the most part fraternities subordinate the first for the second. This must be changed.

Instead of being the driving intellectual forces on the campus by virtue of their desire and ability to pledge intelligent people, fraternities are in the main conformist, sedentary, and inert with the exception of social activities.

Instead of demanding individual excellence, they largely demand that the individual be pleasing.

Instead of driving towards campus improvement, they drive toward fraternity protection and campus and world disinterest.

Instead of providing leadership, they provide reaction.

It is not necessary that they do this, but the present system with its encumbrances of archiac ideas and practices denies the creativity that fraternities can possess.

There is not one person on the campus who does not need a social outlet, and no one can really say that a Saturday night party even if it is a complete debauch is not healthy to relieve pent up tensions. It is only when people live from Saturday to Saturday that the trouble begins. By that token nothing is basically wrong with driking, except excessive drinking, and part of this is bred by some of the rules that fraternities have to live under.

To better fraternities several things are necessary.

The first and most controversial is deferred rush, not as a complete upheaval, but coincident with a new student union, campus programming, and a year for fraternities to financially prepare for the switchover, in order that they may take such measures as are necessary to keep the house from bankruptcy.

The program is necessary for the rushee in that he can make an adequate appraisal of his academic responsibilities, that he can be settled in the extra curriculars of his choice, that he can be sure of which fraternity and why fraternity, and so that he will have adjusted to Carolina life. For the fraternities this would be advatageous in that they would be dealing with a greatly matured product, that they would be able to know the boy and what he could do and be, and that they could be sure of his resolve.

If the IFC wants to assume a role of prominence, it can do so by bringing this about and implementing the appropriate procedures so that for six months or a year fraternities would not be rushing boys every night. Ideally, a year's delay with a stipulation that an individual can only visit a fraternity once during that time, with a not-so-rigid silent period, and with a limitation on fraternity spending would be the best program to have. If the IFC wants to assert itself, this is an area where it can do fraternities and the campus a great deal of good.

The IFC can also help bring about an atmosphere of freedom and individual respect in fraternities by eliminating forms of compulsion. Compulsory parties or compulsory study halls have no real benefit except that they heighten the drive to conformity, by 1) imposing social standards of dress and manners, including social technique on people who might want otherwise and who would want more freedom to choose their companions of the opposite sex, and 2) by inflicting study habits unnatural to some, making study a drudgery rather than a joy. A forthright stand in each individual house or by the IFC on these matters would alleviate at least some tansion.

The IFC could further take a firm stand on discriminatory clauses. There is no reason that a rush list should be marked with the letter J, next to a Jewish boy's name. Who knows, a Jewish fraternity might pledge a non-Jewish boy or vice-versa, and the idea of discrimination might have a chance of breaking down. A simple process of elimination of the letter J would help insure that each boy would more likely be judged on his individual merit than on a superficial designation such as religion. Further, those fraternities which have discriminatory clauses in their charters can work to take these out and if necessary, as happened recently at Amherst, disaffiliate from the national office, until the national accepts them with this change. This in no way denies any individual the right of choosing his own associates, but at the same time gives all students the opportunity to be judged on their own merits without the criterions of race, creed, and national origin entering in. It is inconsistent with the idea of equal opportunity on the campus, for a large segment of a great campus group to erect these petty bars to individual interchange.

The IFC and the individual fraternity can do much to better the pledgeship of each individual. They first can insist on a sane pledgeship — a pledgeship in which adjusts the pledge to the other members of the house without making him accept the values of the other members of the house. This pledgeship should be as mild as possible so that acceptance can come from mutual respect rather than individual subservience. This does not mean that occasional hell should not be raised, but that it be the exception rather than the rule. The pledge should be encouraged to seek his own values to differ on major things while conforming on the minor ones, and to do any of these things only as it is true to those principles which he has come to accept as true. The "big brother" should be a friend, not a mother.

The fraternities should encourage scholarship, not with the end in view to have the highest house average on the campus, because a C-plus average with some of the brightest boys on campus is not much of an achievement. They should encourage love of learning and open horizons of knowledge for the individual rather than closing them through superimposed competition. Scholarship, as most things are, is individual, and individual stimulation is the order of the day.

Miss Combes:

In a letter published on page 2 of the "Daily Tar Heel" on 1 Oct. 1958 you stated your opposition to birth control. This is, of course, your privilege. It is not your privilege, however, to deny to others who do believe in it such information as may be had concerning birth control and contraceptive devices and techniques, and the right to practice contraception. This, even by the remotest conception, only a majority of the voters in the U. S. could have any right to deny, and since the majority do not oppose birth control, the N.Y.C. Board of Hospitals took the only honest course open to it. To have done otherwise would have been the right of a minority to rule — and against that Western history records a long series of wars.

Secondly, you "wonder how many New York women will need further medical aid to relieve them from the nervous tensions suffered by millions of Roman Catholic and other women, who, not being married to millionaires, can afford only so many children, who live in dread of marital relations lest they produce another child for whom they cannot properly care, or those thousands of women for whom just one more pregnancy could be fatal — and who may thus be exposing themselves to leaving motherless growing families whom they love and who need them? What about their mental state? Are they first of all intelligent, responsible human beings, with a duty toward those whom they can safely bear and properly care for, rear and educate, or are they merely anthropid cattle, glorified breeding stock for political causes, autocratic or theocratic? In the million years of mankind on this earth, I should hope that we have made at least a little progress from the purely animal level.

In the book of Genesis (Roman Catholic Bible), chapter 1, verse 27, "God created man in his image. In the image of God he created him. Male and female he created them." Man (including the female of the species), created in the image of God, has, within the limits of this world, powers of thought, reason and creation (in the image of his maker), to enable him to better his lot on earth, to set himself above the purely animal level with some degree of security.

Animals have virtually no control over breeding and procreating, as they have none over food supply and as only a few have over shelter. Man, however, has learned to build houses, plant crops, irrigate land, etc., to assure a more stable existence. Why not also with his progeny? In the past human population was kept down by plague and pestilence, as well as by war. When Genesis 1.28 was spoken, the world was underpopulated and so continued up to even a few short centuries ago. The command was given to the Hebrews at a time when they were a small folk having a hard time raising an army to survive against the Canaanites. That day is over. Antibiotics and sanitation have reduced plagues and pestilences to the point of mere nuisances, and population in the past hundred years has swollen enormously, so much so that only 20 percent of today's world population are adequately fed, and at best, were the population static, we could scarcely more than double that percentage at the present time. Food supply techinques have not kept pace with procreative capacity.

Do you advocate that we, like the rabbits on the little California isle a generation ago, senselessly breed ourselves out of existence by completely outrunning the food supply? Or would you have us abandon sanitation and antibiotics, to bring back cholera, Black Plague, smallpox, childbed fever, etc.? Or were it more compatible with our God-given capacity to use our reason to control our own destiny, at least in part, and our godly duty to use this capacity to the best of our ability (to do less is to insult our Creator by misusing His gifts) for the purpose of making the world a little more secure for our descendants that we found it, just as our forebears strove to do for us?

It pains me, but I must characterize your attitude concerning birth control, that of the Roman Catholic Church, as foresightless, unreasoning, reactionary, unjust, inhuman, irresponsible and irreverent.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

The hippiest character on this campus is an evil little genius who spends his spare time contemplating: (1) his navel; (2) Quemoy-Matsu; (3) Jim Tatum. Last week however, while recuperating from half a dozen ridiculous viruses, this character got on to a much more therapeutic kick than the three I have listed above. In the belief that we have all been doing too much thinking about Mr. Dulles and his mad adventures that will probably kill us all, I'd like to share this new kick with you.

When I visited my friend a few days ago he greeted me with this shout: "GIDDY UP, GIDDY UP, GO WAKE THE CITY UP!" Naturally, I looked bewildered and I stayed that way until my friend played a new LP that he had just purchased and, in the vernacular, was flipping over. I flipped too.

The album is titled, "Sing a Song of Basie," and is on the ABC-Framount label. It is a collection of extraordinary vocal arrangements, copied note for note, from the old Count Basie standards, and reproduced via a multiple recording technique so that three singers sound not like a chorus but like a big band. Even the solos have been duplicated note for note. To give you some idea of the effect, this is a portion of one of the lyrics titled, "Little Pony."

REEDS: Hurry up, dig a little pony I know.
BRASS: Say that's so.
REEDS: I said, hurry up, dig and little pony will blow.
BRASS: Ride, ride, ride.
REEDS: Giddy up, giddy up, do me the ditty up. Giddy up, giddy up, go wake the city up.
BRASS: People pass word, he's the last word. That's the mass word, they don't dig till he's big—then they wig.
SOLO: Want to say a lot about litle pony. Want to celebrate the night pony booted up the big beat. I can't stop telling what he was doing to blow as though his heart was in it every minute—Singin' with a pretty kind of sound really giving every pound never acting like the greatest oat around. Everybody dug and he had them really drinking, like they did a lot of swigging from a gallon jug. Little pony went a riding, illustrating what a horn is really for, had them comin' back for more, when they added up the score, joy galore.

SOLO: Anywhere you go, they gotta saddle Little Pony with a solid reputation. People think of Little Pony as a real King, and his playing is a pleasure-giving thing. Blowing a horn and riding go t'gether and forever give the kind of thrill a lot of people never wanna end. But dig me telling about it, baby. And I'm merely going through it. He can figure it out and do it.

The guiding spirit behind this fantastic production is a jazzman named Dave Lambert who first became a cinder in the public eye in 1944 when he did a bop vocal, "What's This," with the Krupa band. He next appeared around 1947 when he coached a vocal group for Stan Kenton; this was the group that did "Across the Alley from the Alamo," and other well-remembered hits. In 1950 a Lambert group recorded four interesting sides for Capitol, and one of the girls in this group went to France and later organized the Blue Stars. In other words, Dave Lambert is an extremely important, though little known, figure in the world of jazz vocalizing. He has the reputation; this album should bring him the fame. Lambert of course must share the kudos with his talented associates, Jon Hendricks and Annie Ross. Hendricks was the cat who burned midnight oil for a year to write the lyrics.

Speaking of the lyrics, as I departed my friend was talking on the telephone with one of the cuter members of our faculty (Lorraine by name) to suggest that she give the following lecture to her freshman English class: "Here's a bit you should know. Yes, you love her so I know—I know that you love her so. But what you don't know is this. Your kind of loving is the kind women never miss." He thought the freshmen would be pleasantly surprised by the great flexibility and vitality of the English language, especially when used by hip people. (Freshmen are notoriously un-hip.)

Well, if you twist Kemp's arm hard enough, he'll order a copy for you. "Sing a Song of Basie." We're not kidding—DON'T PASS THIS ONE BY.

EDITOR:

I was rather amused by Mr. William Cheney's letter in the Wednesday Daily Tar Heel revealing that he had been "jarred" by Anthony Wolff's reference to B.B. as a kissing existentialist.

Surely Mr. Cheney is aware that while existentialism does not mean eccentric haircuts, turtle neck sweaters, oversized medallions, loud inferior jazz, and free love, this is what the term has, unfortunately, been perverted to symbolize to many of the intellectually sloppy among us as myself.

Although by no means a disciple of Mr. Wolff, I thought his analogy was particularly appropriate if, however, a bit trite.

I am impressed by the fact that Mr. Cheney is either a serious student of philosophy or is very adept at manipulating a Dictionary of Philosophy.

May I suggest that Mr. Cheney come down from his sanctimonious, pedantic position and familiarize himself with the contemporary situation, however, distasteful this situation may be to him, before continuing to enlighten us in matters philosophical.

EDITOR:

On reading Nancy Turner's letter criticizing Cort Edward's article advocating polygamy the following question comes to my mind. Why is it that around here the moment anyone even breathes one word about sex everyone feels it is their moral obligation to righteously object? Don't people have enough of a sense of humor to regard Edward's article as a witty piece of satire without feeling that their moral attitudes and codes are going to be uprooted? A number of years ago Swift modestly proposed eating the children of Ireland to get rid of excess population. The Irish, as far as I know, didn't run to their cook books to look up recepies for Human a La King or Homo Sapien stew. Do you suppose that all male students at UNC will start buying 2 or 3 fraternity pins? Hardly.

One trouble with students everywhere is that they don't know how or what to think. Once in a while there come along students, such as Edwards, who do come out with new ideas. One meets, instead of friends, squawking individuals who will not be moved from their own fixed ideas. I guess this is better than silence. It's time all of us woke up.

Sidelight

Ed Rowland

This column will be old hat information to upperclassmen and may seem a little exaggerated to most of the freshmen. But when the activities of rush week are over and each fraternity is celebrating the addition of their new pledges, the boys who went through rush will see that this is true.

Possibly half of them will have made mistakes.

This observation is not intended as support for any plea for deferred rushing, because the setup now is conducted at its logical time in the year. Neither is it anti-fraternity, because these organizations perform a valuable service to the campus and the students.

Rather I favor a modification in rush week, one that might keep the feelings of fraternity men and pledges from being hurt through hasty decisions. The haste and rush (literally) that characterizes the week is perhaps the weakest link in the chain that is fraternities at Carolina.

Rush should extend over a two-week period, with parties being conducted every other night. This plan, which the Pan-Hel council has adopted to some degree in sorority rush, would allow time for study by both the brothers and the rushees, and it might keep some freshman from making a decision that he will regret for four years here.

It is obvious that fraternities can make mistakes in a boy's character during rush. Later, when the boy is balled out of the house, he is hurt. Another circumstance that often occurs is when a boy's intelligence is overestimated and he fails to make his grades and then drops out of the fraternity if not out of school. Spreading out the activities of rush week probably would prevent these from happening.

The Interfraternity Council may oppose this idea and possibly they will be able to give excellent reasons why it won't work. On the other hand, if it is even considered, a big step forward will be taken.

The IFC is too conservative and hestiant at present. It is in the process of being shaken from its narrow view, but in the meantime the whole system of fraternities is deteriorating because its rush organization is poor and less effective than it could be.

Education At University

Fred Weaver

(This is the final part of a five part presentation of Dean Fred Weaver's talk to the freshmen at Y camp.)

He is a man who has come to love the truth and to live by it, he has learned how to learn and has acquired a real appetite for disciplined inquiry; he is a man whose learning has bound him to the common good and has loosed him from his natural bad habits of pre-judgment. He is a man whose courage lifts him above conformity to the crowd and compels him to a creative maladjustment in any "normal" society, and whose intelligence is the instrument of his love. He belongs to a family, a race, a class, a land, a nation—but he loves all these within a higher loyalty to God and the greatest good. He is a man whose morality springs from a source higher than his super-ego and flows up from a deep love of the right beyond mere calculation. This is what our schools are for: to furnish the nation and the nations with men and women of this spirit and this mind. This is what our churches are for: to call men of reason to the life of faith and to "unite the pair so long disjoined, knowledge and vital piety." The most important question before you now is whether your school and your church have prepared you for the Time Being and the crisis at its further end.

Now, to summarize, I have made three suggestions: read, think, act. I have said that if you do these things diligently something will happen to you whereby the meaning of education will reveal itself to you and you will know what the purpose of education is. That is a marvelous thing to have happen. And I think you have come to a good place to have it happen to you.

Fraternities (Cont.)

The IFC could further benefit the campus scholastically and judicially by advocating the abolishment of quiz files and term paper files. Existing as they are, they are an encouragement to short cuts rather than an academic stimulus. A real academic community cannot be built on short cuts.

Participation in activities should be encouraged not to bring glory to the house or to protect fraternities or for the individual's glory, but rather for the knowledge that may come from that participation especially in some of the non-elected positions.

Finally, the fraternities can engage in some programming for themselves. Discussion groups, speakers, panels, musicians, and other forms of intellectual stimuli can be had, and a major project of the IFC and of fraternities in general might be to have a program committee to bring the issues of the present day world and the issues that have been with people from time immemorial to the focus of fraternity members. To increase their awareness and stimulate a curiosity that may never be stimulated unless this type of action is taken, would be one of the greatest projects the fraternities could undertake. They might build, instead of destroy, constructive leadership on the UNC campus.

The administration can help also. They may help by ridding the fraternities of such regulations as the drinking rule which make hypocrisy an inevitability. This rule alone has done more to undermine the campus judicial system than any piece of legislation, and makes something forbidden out of something that might be taken naturally and in moderation, thus bringing on a desire for drinking to get drunk rather than drinking or non-drinking for the sake of personal enjoyment and for consistency with an individual's own personal scruples. Morality cannot be legislated.

Fraternities want to expand, but the administration should have an obligation on their shoulders to keep from aiding in their expansion drive, until the fraternities do something to better their own conditions, then making for expansion of a valuable part of the campus, rather than expansion of a campus parasite.

Fraternities are filled with great opportunities. They at the present time may be described as possessing potential, but very little kinetic. It is hoped that their potentialities may be realized.

A perfect system needs good men to be be really effective. But an imperfect system with the best of men cannot work. The need for improvement is obviously there.

Employees

Over a period of 170 years student government has carved out a small area where it is autonomous. This area has been fought for over and over again with the administration coming to the rescue on some occasions.

This autonomy is being threatened again, this time by a ruling of the attorney-general which places student employees in University employee status, and in its effect denies the hiring and firing power of student paid employees to the students.

No one in student government questions the ultimate say-so of the administration or the Board of Trustees, what students are fighting at the present time to preserve is the measure of autonomy they now have.

A Dean Fred Weaver will not always grace the chair of the Dean of Students office to see that student freedom is protected, for men like Dean Weaver are called upon to assume even greater roles of responsibility.

Hence, to perpetuate student autonomy there needs to be a certain separation of student paid employees from University employees, for with a man with less sensitivity to student needs than Fred Weaver, the system could degenerate into an administrative control of student finances.

The grounds for separation are clear. Students pay these people and students levy the payment upon themselves. With administration backing a ruling favorable to the students probably could be found.

It is hoped that those in the administration, particularly the Chancellor will be able to recognize the educational value of student autonomy in that area where students are fit to govern and see that this is perpetuated.

ZBTs Report $175 Theft From 2nd Floor Rooms

By CHUCK FLINNER

Items valued at $175 were reported stolen from second story rooms of the Zeta Beta Tau house Sept. 20.

A complaint filed with the Chapel Hill police Dtpartment yesterday reported stolen items that included a sunbeam razor, a dark blue blazer, a Parker pen and pencil set with name engraved and a Tissot watch described as silver with a gray face and with a black leather band.

According to Gerald Freedman, a ZBT, other men in the fraternity had items of lesser value stolen. One man, he said, reported that his identification bracelet stolen.

The items were taken from the ZBT house sometime during the evening after the State-Carolina football game, while a number of guests were present down stairs for a party after the game.

Freedman said he had taken off his watch and placed it on his dresser in the early afternoon. The watch was still there as late as 8 p.m., but was missing Sunday morning along with the other items mentioned.

Freedman had waited before reporting the missing items to police because he thought it might have been a joke.

Officer Herman Store of the Chapel Hill police department was notified of the alleged theft.

Administrative Team Visiting Middle East

Five midwestern universities are being visiting by a UNC administrative team to compare notes on operational procedures in admissions, record-keeping and accounting.

Charles C. Bernard, acting director of admissions; H. L. Ferguson Jr., director of accounting and budgets, and Raymond E. Strong, asistant director of Central Records Office, form the UNC travel team.

Through Oct. 10 they will visit the campuses of the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Michigan State University in East Lansing, Purdue University in Lafayette, Ind., Indiana University in Bloomington, and Ohio State University in Columbus.

Strong will study the academic record-keeping systems, particularly methods of handling registration at the beginning of terms. Bernard's special interest will be in technical processes and services in the admissions offices.

In his observation on accounting procedures, Ferguson will be especially interested in those adapted to punch card equipment.

GETTING READY FOR OKLAHOMA—The Carolina Playmakers will present "Oklahoma" Oct. 24-26 in Memorial Hall. Playing leading roles in the production will be Hunter Tillman as Curly, Carolyn Myers as Laurie, and Dan Liuney as Jud Fry. Others having starring roles include Darwin Solomon, Margaret Starned, John Sneden, Donna Hastings, and Jimmy Potter. Cast members shown above are rehearsing the show's finale.

Panel Discussions And Talks To Keep High Schoolers Busy

president of the 1958 institute.

Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the UNC School of Journalism, will welcome the visitors to the campus. Institute director, Prof. Walter Spearman of the Journalism School, will outline the day's program.

High school representatives at the Institute will attend one of the following meetings in the morning: news writing, sports writing or advertising.

Sue Snow of Greensboro Senior High School will preside over the session on news writing which will feature Floyd Hendley, managing editor of the Greensboro Record, as consultant, and Ann Frye, UNC journalism student and staff member of the Daily Tar Heel, student newspaper.

Bob Quincy, sports editor of The Charlotte News, will act as adviser at the sports writing discussion, which include Rusty Hammond of The Daily Tar Heel, and Avery Love of Charlotte Central High School as chairman.

Conrad R. Hill of the UNC Journalism School, Margaret Hedgecock of High Point and Fred Katzin ofthe Tar Heel will be on a panel to consider advertising. Presiding will be Sandra Ridge of High Point.

"Organizing and Producing a High School Newspaper" will be discussed by a panel from Lexington High School. The following students with hteir adviser will conduct the demonstration: Becky Godfrey, Jerry Ann Beck, Julia Berrier, Ann-Marie Gattegno, Pamela Swing, Mary Elizabeth Waters, Mitchie Andews, Ned Carter, Bill Hilton, Lindley Honeycutt, Gail Lanier, David Lopp and Danny McGinn.

A similar session on organizing and producing a high school yearbook will be presented by students from Greensboro High School under the direction of Miss Virginia Powell, adviser, Carolyn Dahlfuer, Anne West, Nancy Williams and Preston Earle will be the students participating on the panel.

Several discussions are scheduled for this afternoon also, including one on yearbook procedure by Sally Spratt of Charlotte, editor of the Myers Park Mustang, and Frank Fleming, representative of printing companies in Charlotte.

Panelists on editorial writing will be Phillips Russell, author and newspaperman; Pete Ivey, director of the UNC News Bureau; and Curtis Gans, editor of The Daily Tar Heel. Paul Houston of Chapel Hill High School will preside over the session.

Covering The University Campus

FREE FLICKS

Tonight's free flick is "Cyrano de Bergerac," starring Jose Ferer and Mala Powers. The Stanley Kramer production of the classic story of a 17th Century poet whose arrogance and wit cover a breaking heart will be shown in Carroll Hall Auditorium at 7:30 and 10 p.m.

UNIVERSITY BAPTIST CHURCH

John M. Lewis, visiting pastor in Meredith College's Department of Religion, will deliver the sermon at the 11 a.m. servcies at the University Baptist Church tomorrow.

STUDENT WIVES

A meeting of the Student Wives will be held Tuesday night at 8 o'clock at the Victory Village Day Care Center.

The sptaker will be Dr. Robert Senior of N. C. Memorial Hospital. He will talk on "Behavior Problems in Pre-School Children."

PHILOLOGICAL CLUB

Robert M. Lester, executive director of the Southern Fellowships Funds, will be guest speaker at the Philological Club meeting Tuesday night at 7:30 in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

Lester will speak on "Carnegie And Rockefeller Interests in the Humanities and Southern Universities."

NSA MEETING

All National Student Association members and others who attended the National Congress have been urged to be present at a meeting Tuesday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker I and II.

ART LEAGUE

The second regular meeting of the University Art League will be held Monday, Oct. 13, instead of Oct. 6, as had been previously announced.

The meeting date has been chnaged from Oct. 6 to Oct. 13 so as not to conflict the Leonard Warren concert on Oct. 6.

For real, down-to-earth smoking enjoyment, there's nothing else like Camel. No other cigarette brings you the rich flavor and easygoing mildness of Camel's costly blend. More people smoke Camels than any other cigarette of any kind. Today as always, the best tobacco makes the best smoke.

Professors who teach 8 or 9 o'clock classes this morning may be surprised to find their classrooms strangely vacant. A whole lot of cutting going on. The reason? Most of the students of the University were up sort of late last night. A little matter of a football game that didn't start until 11 o'clock our time.

As this was written way before game time yesterday afternoon, we don't know whether the students sat glued to their radios from the opening kick-off to the final gun, or gave up after the first few plays. We hope it was the former.

While the rains apparently have come to stay in Chapel Hill, at last report the weather in sunny California was just that—sunny.

PREDICTIONS

Here we go again. Last week another wave of upsets knocked our percentage below .500 as we only hit 2 of 5. Here's the way they line up as I see it:

Duke 15, Illinois 12. After two straight defeats, both upsets, the Blue Devils are out to get somebody and it looks like the Illini catch it this week. A close one.

South Carolina 29, Georgia 13. The Gamecocks should snap back from their humiliating 45-8 defeat at the hands of Army last week. Hawkins, Dixon and Co. shouldn't have too much trouble with the Bulldogs, who haven't won a game.

CLEMSON OVER MARYLAND

Clemson 23, Maryland 6. Although Maryland beat State last week, they still haven't convinced us that they are that good. And viewing the Tigers last week more than convinced us that they are loaded.

Florida State 15, Wake Forest 13. Wake has won two straight, but we can't forget last year's miserable showing. Florida State is tough, but it may be close.

PACK OVER CAVALIERS

State 25, Virginia 6. The Cavaliers have gambled their way to a 1-1 record, including an upset over Duke. But the Pack should have by now figured a defense to stop Whitley. State to snap back and take it.

Carolina 26, Southern Cal 19. The Tar Heels, after dropping two straight, are gritting their teeth for this one. If the Heels had won the first two, we wouldn't pick them. But it looks like they'll be tougher than ever this week. Add to this Southern Cal has lost their starting quarterback.

ATHLETICS GET ROLLING

Carolina athletics in general really get rolling for the first time this week-end. The football team, of course, has been playing, but yesterday Bud Carson's frosh gridders swung into action against the Virginia yearlings. With Ray Farris guiding them, the Tar Babies look for, and should get, a banner season. 37 scholarship boys on a strong squad build toward an athletic career at Carolina.

The powerful cross-country team gets underway today as Clemson visits. The return of Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop is enough to make most of the coaches in the conference concede to the defending champs, and many other star runners practically cinch the Tar Heels' bid to regain the title.

The soccer team is the latest starter; they don't begin play until next Friday when Lynchburg College visits. Marvin Allen may have his best team in five years down behind Woollen Gym.

Tar Babies Trounce Cavayearlings 29-8.

Charlottesville, Va. — One down and four to go. That's the story for coach Bud Carson's Tar Babies who blasted the University of Virginia freshman here yesterday to the tune of 29-8.

Tar Baby quarterback Ray Farris dominated the ball game as he figured in the scoring of all the Carolina touchdowns. In addition to scoring two touchdowns himself, Farris completed two passes each of which was good for 6 points.

The Tar Babies controlled the ball most of the game and did not allow a score until late in the fourth quarter when the Cavayearlings managed to score on a pass to Ted Denby.

Farris Scores First

Farris led off the Carolina scoring parade by making the first 6 points himself on a running play. Breck Regan kicked the extra points and the Tar Babies took a lead they never relinquished.

Gene Shuford picked up the next touchdown for the visitors by hauling in a Farris pass. Regan ran the extra point this time and the Tar Babies had a 15-0 lead by halftime.

The Carolinaa frosh picked up where they had left off when the third quarter got under way. Bill Ludlam scored the first TD of the second half on a pass from quarterback Farris. Following Ludlam's 6 points, Regan again ran for the extra point and picked himself up 2 more markers for a day's total of 5.

Farris completed the Tar Baby scoring by making the last touchdown himself on another run. For the first time of the afternoon the Tar Babies failed to make the extra point as the Virginia line refused to yield to another running play.

Every member of the Tar Baby squad got into the game which was played under cloudy skies. Although it rained during part of the game, the Carolina offence was not effected by the poor playing conditions as fullback Joe Davies ground out yardage on the running plays and Farris connected on his passes.

Carson Pleased

Coach Carson was greatly pleased by his team's victory since he had expected the final score to be much closer. Prior to the game Carson had stated that he expected the Virginia contest to be one of the two toughest battles of the season for his team.

Tackles Don Amos from Murphy and Ben Gallagher from Charlotte played exceptionally well in this opening game. Amos was moved up to the first string last week to take the place of the injured John Hagarty.

The Tar Babies play their next game on October 17 in Winston-Salem where they will meet the Wake Forest frosh.

Fencing Meeting

Coach Pebley Barrow has announced a meeting of all those interested in joining the fencing team report to room 304 Woollen Gym Tuesday night at 7:30. Barrow said that it is possible theat the team will gain varsity recognition from the CAA. The purpose of the meeting will be to elect a captain and outline the program for the coming year.

Intramural Plans Set

The deadline for the fall golf tournament has been extended to October 9. All students, faculty members, townspeople and University employees now have until October to submit their qualifying scores. The scores must be handed in to Ed Kinney at Finley golf shop.

Swimming

The entries for the intramural swimming contest are due on Wednesday October 8. The events will be 25 yd. butterfly; 25 yd. freestyle; 50 yd. backstroke; 50 yd. breaststroke; 50 yd freestyle; 100 yd. individual medley; 100 medley relay; 200 yd. freestyle relay and diving. Contestants may qualify in event. Those interested in the swimming contest should contact their intrmaural manager.

Cake Race

The field for the cake race, as yet, is not full. This is a great opportunity for someone to win for himself a delicious cake. The entries must be in before October 8.

WAA Murals Start Soon

WAA intramural events are about to get under way down at the Women's Gym, and competition is mounting between the various dormitories and sororities. One of the main group participation functions of these organizations is the intramural sports which lead to Awards Day in the spring. Each year the Women's Athletic Association presents to the team having copiled the greatest number of points during the year an All-Sports Trophy. If a team should cop this trophy for three consecutive years, the trophy is retired.

Tennis intramurals have been delayed by the rainy weather hovering over Chapel Hill, and so the WAA council representatives should contact all the girls in her group and turn those entries in as soon as possible.

Coming up soon is the Annual Co-Rec Sports Carnival, which each year brings droves of students to the main gym. Such events as balloon bursts, worm relays, archery, and many others are favorites. Each dorm or sorority will receive a pairing with either a men's dorm or fraternity and these teams will compete together for the trophies and awards to be given.

Harriers Open Season Against Clemson Here

By BING SOMERS

The 1958 UNC cross country season opens officially today when the Clemson Tigers invade Chapel Hill at two o'clock for a dual meet with the ACC defending champion Tar Heels.

With an overabundance of taped ankles and head colds enveloping the team, Coach Dale Ranson may find it hard to run a full eight man squad.

Scurlock's Status Doubtful

The status of Captain Dave Scurlock is still doubtful. Only recently escaping a siege of sickness, he is far from top shape, but, being Scurlock, could still probably outleg anyone but Wayne Bishop. The latter's mechanical legs should beat to a rapid and rhythmic runaway pace thus keeping his unbeaten cross country record intact.

Both Cowles Llipfert and Sonny Sweet are recovering from sprained ankles, but may run anyway, and the shape of little Howad Kahn for the 3.7 mil ecourse is also a question mark.

The most unique case of ills belongs to Doug Henderson. He has come up with a pretty nasty collection of boils, but this should not keep him from running.

3 in Top Shape

All this leaves two besides Bishop who are in pretty good shape no turned ankles, no colds, not even a boil. They are stanch and stocky Alex Coffin, who is running better than he ever has, and sophomore Bing Somers.

Despite all their aches and pains, most of the above should rise to the occasion, ran or hobble around the course, and finish in quick enough fashion to tame the depth-starved Tigers. Clemson has never beaten the Tar Heels and it looks as though they lack the horses with which to do it this year.

Opera Star Warren To Perform Tonight

Metropolitan Opera star Leonard Warren will appear in Memorial Hall Monday night at 8 p.m. in a concert sponsored by the Chapel Hill concert series.

Students will be admitted to balcony seats free upon presentation of Identification cards. Student wives with their husbands will be charged $1. The public will be charged $3.

LEONARD WARREN
. . . sings tomorrow night

Warren started the current season in September with the San Francisco Opera with appearances in three of his great roles, Scarpia in "Tosca," "Simon Boccanegra" and "Falstaff."

Accompanied by Willard Sektberg at the piano, Warren will render selections by Beethoven, Caldara, Caccini and Bach to open the performance.

The second part of the program will be "Don Quichotte a Dulcinee" by Maurice Ravel, and the third part will be Credo, from "Otello" by Giuseppe Verdi.

After a slight intermission, the concert will continue with selections on the piano by Sektberg, and Warren's rendition of parts of "Faust" by Charles France is Gounod.

The final numbers on the program include "Colorada Trail" and "Blow the Man down," two traditional arrangements by Tom Scott; 'Tell Me O Blue, Blue Sky," by Vittorio Giannini; and "Mister Jim" by Albert Hay Malotte.

Newsweek magazine recently called Warren "the world's finest dramatic baritone."

He made his debut with the Metropolitan Opera in 1939 and rose through minor roles to dominate the company's baritone roster.

Three Changes Made In Laws By Committee

By ANN FRYE

Three important changes in the elections laws were considered last week by the Elections Laws Revision Committee.

These changes involve revision of the dorm and town men's districts, addition of a second dorm women's district and violations to the Student Council instead of the Honor Councils.

The committee, which will submit recommendations for elections law revisions to the student Legislature Thursday, discussed moving Joyner dormitory into Dorm Men's District IV to District III.

The committee also considered the addition of another dorm men's district (VI) which would include the three new dorms, Parker, Teague and Avey.

For the town men, the committee discussed changing the current oval, rectangular, amoeba-shaped and Victory Village districts into all rectangular-shaped districts.

The only change for Town Men's I would be placing students "living in outlying sections and cities in this general direction (the southern section of Chapel Hill)" into Town Men's IV.

Town Men's District II would not be changed.

Outcome Of Encounter Of Religion, Secular Faith Presently In Doubt Wesley Lecturer Tillich Asserts

Theologian Describes Encounter As Crucial

"If the result of the struggle between the demonic secular faiths and the religious faiths were up to human beings, the situation would be desperate," Dr. Paul Tillich University Professor at Harvard asserted last night in the second of the Wesley Lectures sponsored annually by the Wesley Foundation.

This was the first of the annual lecture series.

In explaining this, Tillich pointed out that there resides a divinity in whose power the issue is, a divinity who is superior to the human mind or will.

CRUCIAL STRUGGLE

Tillich, in discussing the topic of "The present encounter of religion and the secular faiths, said this encounter was the crucial struggle in the modern world.

He divided the secular faiths, much as he divided the major religions in his speech Friday evening into four groups.

The first group again was the sacramental group whose secular counterpart was nationalism. This again is the essential element in all the secular faiths, since the secular faiths, according to Tillich, start with a basic spatial concept.

SECOND GROUP

The second group is the mystical group in which the romantic concept is the primary element of this division. Manifestations of the romantic concept in modern days is the fascist and Nazi movements prior to World War II.

This romanticism is, as Tillich showed, having a possible renascence in France during the past few months.

The social-ethical faiths form the third group of secular beliefs, in which Tillich puts Communism, as the most dangerous of all challenges to the religious survival.

The fourth group, as in the religious cycle which he explained Friday evening, is that group which embraces all three of the other groups. In this group falls the liberal humanist movement, which Tillich characterized as the weakest of the secular faiths due to its lack of central focus.

Tillich described the religious faiths as being on the defensive in all areas except the evangelical faiths in America, and he said that he was none too sure of the duration of the religious resurgence in America.

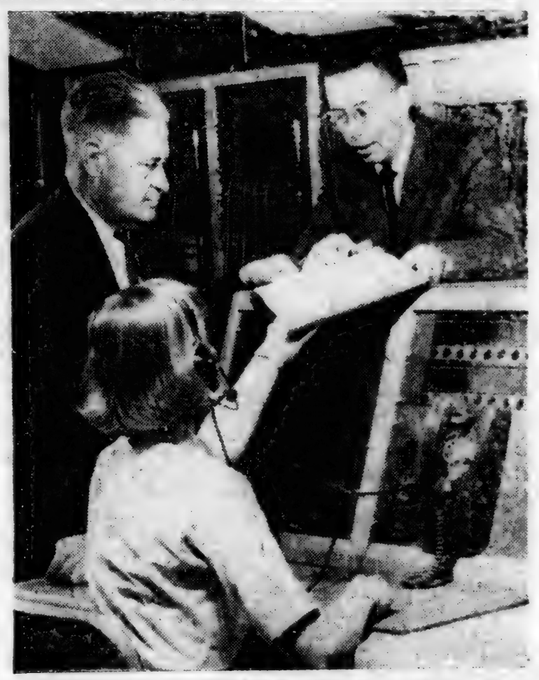
Tillich pointed out that Communism's victory in Russia was made easy by the basic mystical character of the Russian Orthodox Church. Lacking a social-ethical foundation, Communism was assimilated readily until the combination of Communist and Nationalist drives that are part of modern Communism were in command.

PASSIVE RESISTANCE GOOD

He said he looked with interest to the Far East, especially China, to see if the Communist ideology took precedence over the social-ethical systems of Confucianism and Taoism. He added that maybe the best that can be hoped for is that the native faiths have by non-resistance offered the best resistance.

In Africa, he said the fundamental battle that is taking place was between Communism and Islam, due to Christianity's racial supremacy ideology in the area.

He further made a distinction between two types of nationalism—the basic tribal nationalism that is common to all people, and the driving militant nationalism that has the nation as its idol, such as is currently manifested in the Middle East, where he predicted Islam would be carried into battle.



UNC GRAD DESIGNS 'ORACLE'—A look into the future of communication devices and systems has been made possible by a computer-like machine, produced at the Bell Telephone Laboratories in Murray Hill, N. J. Henry D. Irvin, the designer of the mechanized "oracle," is a physics graduate of UNC and was formerly employed at American Enka Company. He is shown (at right) discussing the machine's operation with R. R. Reisz, senior engineer who directs the project, and the operator of the machine's console section.

Physics Grad Has 'Oracle' For Bell Labs

A young man who just three years ago was attending undergraduate physics clases at UNC has designed a computer-like machine which may help predict the future in communication devices and systems.

Henry DeWeese Irvin, who completed his B. S. degree here in 1956, is now an engineer with Bell Telephone Laboratories in Murray Hill, N. J.

CALLED 'SYBIL'

Irvin designed the mechanized "oracle," called "Sibyl," which can simulate a variety of future communication devices and systems and permit them to be tested without the expense of building special equipment for one-time use.

It also will provide objective data on how telephone users would respond to a new service.

Bell's Human Factor Engineering Group, which includes a psychologist as well as engineers, worked on the Sibyl project. Irvin will continue to have charge of the machine's operation, under the direction of a senior engineer, R. R. Riesz.

A possible use of Sibyl would involve testing push-button operation of a phone, as compared to

New TV Series Has Experience, Fierce Theme

A group of bugbitten students with an unsapped zeal for trying to illustrate ideas visually returns to a weekly television show here Monday at 9:30 p.m. on WUNC-TV.

Armed with a fierce theme, experience and a larger covey of performers and writers, the "Faith and Fine Arts" television series, which last spring explored the binding forces of culture and religion, resumes the assault this fall under a new title, "Dimensions."

FIRST PRINCIPLE

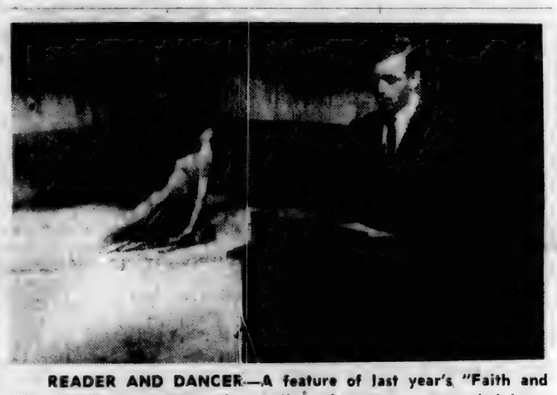
Taking the statement that "if a man is alive, he is religious," for their first principle, the group will attempt in its productions to show, through the works which come from everyday and past culture, the relation of what man says, does writes, or sings, to "ultimate values," which are in themselves of a religious temper.

The viewable products of such heavyheaded definitions will result, through the coming year, in interpretative programs dealing with jazz, comic strips, Negro spirituals, and dramatic adaptations of recent works of fiction and poetry.

PREVIEW OF METHODS

With an eye to acquaintance, the introductory prgoram will present a preview of the group's artistic methods. Eve McClatchey will stage an interpretative dancing sketch based on a selection of contemporary poetry. There will be a set of spiritual songs sung by Louise Crumbley, a portion of jazz by Ed Crow and his band, and the interpretation of three paintings.

In upcoming Monday night shows there will be adaptations of the works of such writers as Robert Frost's "Death of a Hired Man," Samuel Beckett's "End Game," Antoine Saint-Exupery's "Le Petit Prince," and Franz Kafka's "The Trial."



READER AND DANCER—A feature of last year's "Faith and Fine Arts" program was the reading of poetry accompanied by a dance interpretation. Shown above are Eve McClatchey, dancer, and Russell Link, reader. Eve McClatchey will present a dance interpretation again this year in the television series, "Dimension."

STUDENTS MAY LOSE AUTONOMY — FURTADO

Solution Of Employe Problem Sought For More Than Year

By CURTIS GANS

The problem of the status of Graham Memorial and student government employees had student government and administration officials trying to work out a solution for over a year.

According to Student Body President Don Furtado, the problem has the potentiality of threatening student autonomy.

At present the only persons that are affected are those non-students who work in the Stuednt Activities Ofice, the Graham Memorial Secretary and the Student Government secretary. However, an extension of the probelm would affect all student help.

ASKED FOR RULING

Historically, the question of status was first raised last summer when a person who had taught bridge lessons asked for a ruling on the question of whether she was to receive state benefits for her work in Graham Memorial.

The attorney-general then ruled that all employees of Graham Memorial are employees of the University by virtue of the fact that the University owns the building, that the University has ultimate supervision over student matters, and that the collection of student fees, from which these employees are paid is made mandatory by the Board of Trustees.

ROUND-ABOUT METHOD

Further complicating the matter is the fact that several of these employees are paid in a round-about method. The students pay the University the sum total of their wages, and the University makes out the pay checks.

However, social security for these employees is filed under two separate social security accounts, Student Activities and the Universities. Until last summer all had been filed under the student activities social security number.

Following the attorney-general's ruling, Robert B. House, then chancellor, ruled that every Graham Memorial and student government employee was a University employee.

AYCOCK HEARS EVANS

Sonny Evans, student body president last year, then remonstrated with the Chancellor to no avail, but shortly thereafter Chancellor William B. Aycock took over, and President Evans' pleas were received more favorably. The Chancellor temporarily placed the Graham Memorial secretary under University employ, and left the other employees as student employees.

The next bridge which was erected in the way of solution of the problem was that erected by those in charge of Social Security and the North Carolina Retirement program, who put in an inquiry as to the status of these employees under their respective programs.

YACK TO BE TAXED

Further complicating the issue was a ruling by the attorney general that the Yackety-Yack should be taxed as a publication in that it is supported by student fees and thus separate from the University, which has a non-profit organization tax-exempt status.

Last spring a committee was set up by the Graham Memorial Board of Directors to deal with the problem.

During the summer they pursued avenues to see whether the students could bring to the employees the same benefits that they would receive under the University program and at the same time through insurance protect the University from any claims that might be filed on the basis of injury, property damage, and disability.

Operating under the philosophy that these employees are student employees by virtue of the fact that they are paid from student monies, levied by students upon themselves, the special comittee is drawing up a report which they hope will meet with Administration approval so that it may be sent to the attorney-general for reconsideration of his previous decision in line with the new information, and in line with the ruling on the Yackety-Yack tax case which sets student activities up as a separate entity, subject to ultimate University approval, but for the all practical purposes autonomous.

LOSS OF FREEDOM?

An extension of the original ruling would put every employee paid by student fees as a University employee. Under a different philosophy than has been obtained under the present system, this could mean loss of student control of their own funds in the audit office, and loss of student autonomy to administrative guidance.

The tradition of student freedom at Carolina in a factor in favor of the maintenance of at least de facto students autonomy at the University even if an adverse ruling is received.

The proposal of the committee of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors will be nearing completion this week. Final action on the employee status problem cannot be expected, however, for at least a month, pending University approval.

SP Will Hear Furtado Speak Monday Night

Student Body President Don Furtado is slated to address the Student Party tomorrow night at its regular weekly meeting, SP Chairman Leon Holt announced yesterday.

The meeting will be held in Roland Parker Lounges I and II at 7:30 p.m.

"Each student is invited to participate in the party's activities," Holt said.

"We believe that our programs will be both educational and stimulating. This year Student Government faces a great challenge. We want you students to help meet this challenge," he said.

WHAT ABOUT NEW DORMS?

Election Revision Committee Has Hard Decision Ahead

By ELAINE HOOVER

One of the big problems facing members of a legislative committee revising the election laws is: what to do with the three new men's dormitories.

This Elections Laws Revision Committee could solve the problem simply enough by shoving the new dorms into Dorm Men's V district and re-apportioning the number of representatives accordingly.

However, a new men's dorm district for these three could be recommended by the committee.

At any rate, the number (50) of representatives in Student Legislature remains stationary, according to a provision in the UNC Student Constitution.

The position of "representative" itself arouses some rather interesting questions that might be considered by the Election Laws Revision Committee.

For example, if the United States Constitution places an age minimum for its Congresmen, should not the UNC Constitution have at least a class standing requirement? How prepared is a freshman to jump into Legislature after being here five weeks?

UNC's 24th Legislative slate (fall, '57, to spring, 1958) lists four freshmen, nineteen sophomores, eighteen juniors and only nine seniors. Of these 50 representatives, two had served in two previous legislatures here; 18 had served on one; and 30 had had no previous legislative experience on campus.

PRESENT PROVISION

The present provision for the election of certain legislative seats in the spring involves the problem of party replacements to fill seats of students who resigned. These formerly elected representatives may have been compelled to resign because of failure to return to school or because of moving into another district, for example.

The questions arise: how can this situation be alleviated and can there not be a uniform system in the two parties for making replacements?

12 RESIGNATIONS

From November 1957, to April 1958, there were 12 resignations in the Student Legislature. Ten of these were by Student Party representatives, two by University Party members.

SP elects its replacements; while UP's Executive Council, made up of the UP chairman, vice chairman, secretary, treasurer, floor leader and legislator, appoints its replacements.

At present the legislature has one vacancy to be filled by UP before the fall elections.

Plan 'Kick-Off Week' To Get Y Groups Going

Since rush has been completed, the YWCA-YMCA has planned a "Kick-Off Week" for Oct. 6-13 to get all committees working.

The week begins tomorrow with a workshop and other discussion groups and will end Saturday and Sunday with the fall conference at Quaker Lake.

Some thirty Y activities, clubs and interest groups, especially adapted to meet needs of this campus, will be the subject of discussion or will meet some time this week.

An emphasis is being placed on five workshops which will examine the five major areas of Carolina life, according to Miss Betty Kaye Johnson and Parker Hodges, program chairmen.

These five workshops include the area of education, social problems, human relations, contemporary literature and courtship and marriage.

The first workshop will be held Monday at 4 p.m. in the Y building on education criticism. The leader for this workshop will be Jim Carse.

Other "Kick-Off Week" activities planned for Monday include: Graduate Club meeting in Lenoir Hall at 5:45 p.m., Campus Christian Council meeting in Lenoir Hall at 6 p.m., and a Television Committee meeting at 9:30 p.m. The first Y television program, "Dimensions," will be presented over WUNC-TV Monday at 9 p.m.

Besides the workshops and other discussion groups, an important aftermath of "Kick-Off Week" will be the faculty visitation by 150 students Oct. 13 and 14. These students will solicit support and participation from the faculty.

Young Republicans Club Chooses Price President

The UNC Young Republicans Club is now headed by Glenn A. Price, a law students who was elected recently as plesident.

Other officers of the YRC include: vice president, Dee Donroe; and secretary-treasurer, Emily Stafford. Donroe was also named to head the YRC's membership drive. The drive will be held Monday and Tuesday in Y Court.

Membership cards will be available at a special YRC booth in Y Court.

The next meeting of the Republican group will be Tuesday night at 7:30 in Roland Parker I.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Edsel Monroe Odom, John Francis Moser, Bryan Grimes, George Walker Bender, Joan Patricia DuBose, Gayle Gwen Grimes, Lewis John Brown Jr., Ray Davis Fennell, Jon LeRoy Sossamon, John Edwin Reeves Jr., Charles Robert Lee Jr., D. K. Raychaudhuri and Charles Thomas Davis.

Press' Role

The American press has sold itself out. It has sold itself out to the advertiser and to the readers. It has sold itself out for money.

It has sold itself out by way of the screaming headlines which announce a rape or murder to attract readers. It has sold itself out via editorials which incite emotions. It has sold itself out through the comic strips, the crossword puzzles, the sales gimmicks, and the large headline. It has sold itself out by its depravity . . .

It has sold itself out by its inaccurate reporting and slanted stories. It has sold itself out by printing in big headlines a story, and printing in little headlines its retraction. It has sold itself out to man's depravity.

It has abdicated its position and function.

Its function in society and as the leader in the communications industry must be to educate, to stimulate, to make men think.

It must broaden one's scope rather than narrow it. It must think in terms of the possibilities of man rather than the depravity of man.

It must present the information of what the world is doing to the reader making him fully aware of his own importance in an ever-changing world which is growing smaller by the day; an awareness of which is necessary to protect people from annihilation.

It must think in terms of the why's rather than only in terms of the who's and what's. It must have cognizance of the important meanings in things rather than striving for catchy phraseology.

It must strive for accuracy, for in a world where the printed or spoken word can bring action, misinformation can be catastrophic.

It must prioritize so that a murder or rape is not more important than a concert or literary work, so that the police chief's dishonesty is not more important than the ineptness of foreign policy administration, and so that the town news does not make a person lose sight of his obligations to a world community.

It must place emphasis on personal handling of each item of information so that its truth can be ascertained before it ever sees print. It must further try to interpret the why's of the event, in order that the reader can have background.

Its editorials must stimulate without exciting. They must appeal to the mind rather than playing on the emotions. The editorials should place the events and ideas of the day into a framework, so it in turn can serve, as Socrates did, as a midwife to the ideas of others.

The medium of the press should be open to the public, but should not be subject to the dictates of the public. It should instead lead the public to think for themselves, rather than trying to control the public through the daily line of drivel it pours through its pages.

A paper can exist under these operating programs. It can flourish. The New York Times does not need to be sensational. It presents the news accurately and completely. Its editorial page is open to the ideas of others, and although its editorial policy limits the range of speculation, a broader editorial policy would not meaen the extinction of a paper as a business enterprise.

It is a sad plight that in America there is but one New York Times and a thousand New York Daily News'. It is a sad situation that the American people are becoming more and more attuned to seeing no further than their noses, and the press is largely to blame.

To report accurately, to interpret correctly, to stimulate without inciting, to seek knowledge, to promote understanding to educate above all — these are the goals of the press.

These goals are not only unreached now, but not attempted by most papers. In the failure of the communications industry in general, and the press in particular lies the decay of an aware public. It is reflected by the decisions by the people on matters political, but it is further reflected in the public's actions, thoughts, and speech.

The press has abdicated. All is not lost. It can assume its proper role. It is hoped that it will.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

The United States has been accused of pursuing "brinkmanship" diplomacy in foreign affairs, but as the result of this week's events brinks seem to be appearing all over the place.

In Little Rock Gov. Orval Faubus bluntly defied the power of the U. S. Supreme Court to compel him to integrate Little Rock high schools, saying, "I will never open the public schools as integrated institutions."

In Detroit General Motors approached the weekend with its massive array of car-making plants paralyzed by the backwash of a national strike. Local disputes kept 126 plants in 71 cities shut down despite a new three-year master contract agreed upon Thursday by GM and the United Auto Workers.

In Algeria Premier De Gaulle appealed to the Algerian rebels to halt their bloody insurrection and promised them a new and better life—economically and politically. But close ties with France must remain, he said.

De Gaulle made his statement after gaining a smashing victory in a constitutional referendum as 70 per cent of those who voted approved the new document.

FAR EAST

In the Far East the Red Chinese kept up their bombardment of Quemoy and Matsu while Secretary of State Dulles heralded a possible major shift in America's China policy. He offered to try to trim Nationalist military strength on the offshore islands if the Communists quit shooting.

In Washington the White House announced President Eisenhower's mail on Quemoy and Matsu continues to run 2-1 in favor of his position that these islands must be defended. The report was made after Vice President accused someone in the State Department of sabotaging the Far Eastern policy of the U. S. by revealing mail opinion was running the other way.

No "purge" of the State Department is planned, Press Secretary Hagerty said to find out who released the original information that drew Nixon's fire.

Later Secretary of State Dulles announced that he felt Chaing Kai-Shek was foolish to commit one-third of his armed forces to Quemoy and Matsu. He dashed cold water on the oft-repeated suggestion that the Nationalists might attack the mainland. He said they would never make it on their own steam and that we have made no commitments to help them.

Dulles' words were not strong enough to be taken as U. S. acceptance of two Chinas, or even of a policy shift decided upon. But his conciliatory approach indicated movement toward a possible basis for negotiation at the U. S.-Red China talks in Warsaw.

But in Taipei, Chaing Kai-Shek issued a divergent statement which threatened a major policy split between the two allies.

Chaing challenged the whole concept of trying to get the Chinese Reds to accept a cease-fire. He said he is opposed to even a reduction of the 100,000 of his best troops which are deployed on the coastal islands.

The split seems destined to avoid coming to a showdown unless the Chinese Reds take the United States at its words and stop shooting. Then it will boil down to who is the stronger, the U. S. or Chaing.

On the integration question in the South, Faubus' defiance of the Supreme Cout in more blunt language than ever before followed an appeal by the President for all Americans to obey the court's decree because "any other course would be fraught with grave consequences for our nation."

The Court has denied the legality of a plan to lease public schools in Little Rock to private corporations to get around the integration decision. But the embryo corporations made plans to go ahead with private schools with an appeal to the public to contribute money and facilities to the cause.

Faubus said he would assist the corporations in their quest for aid. "The only question is whether the facilities are to be used by the corporation or not at all," he said. In explaining what he meant he said, "I will never open the public schools as integrated institutions."

Faubus said he was using the results of last week's special referendum on the question — in which 72 per cent of the Little Rock voters backed his ideas— in formulating his statement.

Meanwhile, The Greater Little Rock Ministerial Association honored its outgoing president, the Rev. Dunbar Ogden Jr., for his outspoken attitude in the school integration issue. He has been a leading spokesman for ministers supporting the school board's plan for gradual integration.

And attorneys for teachers in Little Rock high schools have advised them not to "participate in the operation of the high schools by any private corporation." This took place while a federal court order forbidding the disturbance ofthe status quo was being served upon all those people involved in the transfer of the school property to the private corporation.

And Arkansas Atty. General Bruce Bennett revealed a plan aimed at stamping out the activities of the NAACP in all southern states. His plan would include withdrawing tax reduction privileges of the NAACP's legal defense and educational fund and the formation of local committees to exert economic presure against integrationist elements.

Bennett said he had written senators and representatives of 14 southern and border states urging them to join the attack.

In Wheelwright, Kentucky, the city's high school, integrated three years ago, was closed indefinitely after a rock-throwing student demonstration. This was the first violence since the integration, and it apparently stemmed from a clash between a white and a Negro girl in a local restuarant.

In Virginia Gov. Lindsay Almond will move in the next few days to re-organize integration-closed schools so that some of the 13,000 idle children across the state can return to class.

He will do this by eliminating one or more grades at individual schools which would be integrated under the court orders that caused the schools to be closed.

ATOMIC TESTING

In the field of nuclear warfare, the Soviet Union resumed tests early in the week and after four test detonations announced that resumption of tests was due to "bad faith" exhibited by the western powers—the United States in particular.

Secretary of State Dulles decried the Russian's action, but at the end of the week was still unwilling to bring test ban negotiations to a higher diplomatic level than scientists. Russia repeated its willingness and desire to negotiate a test ban, and the United Nations, with Secretary-General Dag Hammerskjold leading the way, began to apply certain pressure for nuclear discussion within the U.N.

Souths' Morals And Manners

Russell Eisenman

It is shocking that the American society tends to refuse to change its viewpoints in so many fields of extreme importance. Many of our present ideas and ideals are nothing more than a carry-over from the Victorian age.

An excellent example of social stupidity is the custom which demands a man's standing when a woman enters his home. Just what this proves, I don't know. A warm welcome is a warm welcome, whether sitting or standing, and conversely a man's standing up doesn't change any rudeness he might exhibit, but woe unto the individual who fails to accept this so-called social courtesy as an integral part of his life. He may avoid ostracization for a while, but eventually he will pay for his "crime." The significance of this example lies only partially in the fact that it can cause some people hardships. It comes about due to society's static thinking. In their quest for security too many people refuse to think for themselves, and situations like the one cited above, in addition to things of far greater importance, come about.

In America, girls are not suppose to ask boys for dates. Most people in our society sincerely believe that the reasons given in the various periodicals and advice to the lovelorn columns for following our present course of action are valid. I fail to see how anyone who looked into this subject with any strong desire to find out what should prevail would come to the conclusion that society's present custom is correct. I can easily see, however, that most people don't have any desire to look into the subject, and of those that do many have been so deeply imbedded with various ideas about what the good old American way of life should be that they are very prejudiced.

So, society advances in age, but only to a limited extent in progress. Considering people's attitude toward deep thinking that might lead to change, it appears very unlikely that there will be any significant change in the aformentioned customs during our lifetime.

They Made The News

Davis B. Young

I just walked into The Daily Tar Heel office and happened to bump into Curtis (I am the Editor) Gans. He said, "are you going to write that column for me. If so,keep it on the local scene."

So being a congenial member of the editorial staff, I am obliging and meeting the request. It seems that some guy named Ed (I am the associate editor) Rowland is solving the world's problems on another part of this page. Soooooooooo.

Last weekend the person who made not only the most news, but also the most noise, was a local 'flip' (borrowed that from Cort Edwards) called Helene. Although this flip didn't quite make the scene long enough for the Kenan Woods routine (borrowed that from Edwards' too) she did stay for long enough to rain like h— (didn't borrow that from anyone) and knock a few branches down. Enough said . . .

Elsewhere around the quad we see a Duke student by the name of James C. Hudiburg climbing on top of the Tri-Delt house during the midst of sorority rush. Two things can be said for this ambitious Blue Devil. Number one is that if he is going to climb on a sorority roof, he couldn't have picked a greater bunch of girls, (regardless of what Anthony Wolff says about Norma Basnight of 1401 Myrtle Ave., Greenville, S. C.) Secondly, he could have at least had the common decency to call me and as kif I wanted to go. Lots of luck James, and may your stay in the cross bar hotel be the merriest.

The campus military personnal made a big move this week by naming Midshipman Richard Gordon Cashwell, as commanding officer of the NROTC Midshipman Battalion. The new C.O. was chosen for his post by the almost equally new commanding officer of the campus NROTC unit, Capt. Carl Tiedeman.

On the editorial page, Editor Gans devoted his space this week to a discussion of the hula hoop and fraternities. It was hard to tell which insitution he like less at press time.

On Tuesday afternoon, John Minter, assistant advertising manager of this paper was selected as the new treasurer of the Publications Board. Having dealt closely with Minter when he was Business Manager of The Summer School Weekly (those were the days when I was Davis (I am the Editor) Young. I know what kind of a job he can do. Cheers for both him and the Publications Board for a terrific choice.

This was also Rush Week. And 184 great little ol' gals pledged seven great little ol' sororities. We're pleased and happy for the A D Pi's, Alpha Gams, Chi O's, Tri Delts, K D's, Kappa's and Pi Phi's. Y'all did real well.

Also on campus this weekend for a two day series of lectures was Dr. Paul Tillich, the outstanding Protestant Theologian in the country. More people of the caliber of this outstanding Harvard prof should be here.

DIALOGUE AT SIX

Scene: Fraternity house living room.
Characters: Three brothers, two pledges.
Time: Saturday evening, 6 p.m., no football game.

1st Brother: Do you have a date, Jim?

2nd. Brother: No, Susie told me she had to study tonight. I've been shafted, I believe.

3rd. Brother: It's no wonder after the way you treated her last weekend. You know very well she likes nothing but Scotch, all the Alpha Chi O girls are that way, and you had to give her Old Hickory.

2nd. Brother: Well, that was all I could afford. My old man didn't send me a check last week. And what little I did have she took for supper. She said the food here at the house is terrible and she wouldn't eat it.

Pledge: It is, too.

1st. Brother: That was uncalled for. Here, since I need to look good for my date tonight, go shine my shoes.

Pledge: But I have a date myself and I'm all dressed up.

1st. Brother: Well, forget it then. (To other pledge) You shine them

Pledge: (Mumbling as he leaves with shoes) But I didn't do nothing.

2nd Brother: Are you still pinned to that Phi Mu?

1st. Brtoher: Yes, but I'm going to have to get it back. She actually said something last night about love and marriage. You know very well what I pinned her for, and it isn't working out. I'm trying once again tonight, but if there aren't any results, I'll take it off her 40-inch chest.

3rd. Brother: (Removing his gaze from TV set where Maverick is shooting it out with the bad guys) Can't youse guys see I'm trying to watch this? It's very educational, and I wish you'd shut up. (last words delivered with great force.)

Pledge: How about asking your pin-up if she can get me a date?

1st. Brother: Okay. (Goes to phone, calls for and gets his girl.) Hortense, is there anybody at the house you can get a date with tonight for one of our pledges? Yes, he has something to drink. (Consults pledge and returns to phone.) He has a whole fifth of vodka. He's 5-10. Got one? Swell, we'll be there at 8.

Pledge: Boy, I hope it isn't that pig I have in psychology who's in that sorority. She's really a lunch case.

3rd. Brother: (As TV commercial extolls virtues of Vim Soap, guaranteed to restore body sheen) Lotsa luck. She'll drink all your liquor, refuse to make out and bore you with conversation about the values of existentialism. All the A Chi O's I know are that way.

Pledge: Well, next year I'll be a second semester sophomore and can date these juniors on an equal footing. Things will be better then; or I'll go to WC every Saturday and tell these to go . . . (Chow down call is bellowed from the depths of the house, interrupting this comment.)

All exeunt.

Comments On Rush

It is very difficult to provide an answer to the question, What are my feelings towards deferred rush? This is not something you can be either simply for or against. Neither is it something that can be decided overnight and instituted immediately. Deferred rush is — for better or worse — something that is going to require much objective study over a long period of time and it is something that is going to have to be decided by the fraternities themselves.

There are many things I like about deferred rush. Its main attraction is that it will enable only students with a C average or better to pledge. Thus every pledge will be scholastically eligible for initiation. There will be no more "bull pledges" — pledges who remain outside the brotherhood due to scholastic requirements. Deferred rush will also give students — especially freshmen — more time to adjust to Carolina before entering the hectic experience of rush week. They can observe the fraternities and the fraternities can observe them. Each can be more sure of what it is getting.

But there is another side. Standing in the way of deferred rush is the question: Can certain fraternities stand the financial blow which will be caused if this plan is adapted? Many cannot afford to lose 20 brothers through graduation and wait until second semester to fill these vacancies. A fraternity is — in a sense — a big business and it must have members to exist. Another question is: What about strict silence? I cannot imagine a six month period of strict silence at Carolina, but if there is none what about dirty-rush? Rush during rush week is chaotic and cut-throat enough having the pains and miseries of six months of "unofficial" rush to go through.

I have only touched on a few probelms. There are many more, but I have not been asked for a thorough analysis, only an opinion. The Daily Tar Heel can provide a great service in this present study of fraternity rush, but it, and everyone else must keep two things in mind: Any attempt to institute deferred rush must come slowly and when the time is right and only after satisfactory solutions to its many problems have been worked out. If these problems can be solved I think I shall be a firm supporter of deferred rush. —Al Goldsmith

I strongly support early rush.

Pledging is voluntary — that is the keystone of rushing at UNC. If a rushee does not feel he has sufficient knowledge about fraternities to make a decision he can go through informal rush after rush week.

It is necessary to hold rush when the academic load is lightest.

Rushing cuts down on the time to be used for school work. Preparation before and discussion afterwards adds to the time which fraternity members must put aside from studies and other activities.

With the present car restrictions freshman (generally speaking) cannot have cars. However, if they join a fraternity they will be able to rely on the older members of the fraternity to help them with double dating during their freshman year.

Many fraternities maintain a study hall and strongly encourage their pledges to get a C average — a requirement of initiation.

The fraternity under an early rush program, is able to operate with an approximately fixed overhead as places vacated by last year's seniors can be filled early in the fall; (however, there is no specific quota system).

By lowering the overhead and, consequently the cost of belonging to a fraternity, the opportunity for pledging can be opened to more students.

for pledging can be opened to more students.

—Pringle Pipkin

The complexity of the deferred rush problem can be traced to the obvious disparity between principle and practice. In principle, the advent of deferred rush would be an extremely beneficial occurance. Subjected to college life and fraternity simultaneously and for the first time the college freshman cannot help but let one interfere with the other. The freshman has no sooner begun serious classwork when he is petitioned by several fraternities and lectured on the glories of fraternal life. Impressed by the well-phrased and essentially truthful arguments for his joining a fraternity, and a particular house, he does join.

This procedure is lacking in that it does not allow a freshman enough time to carefully and intelligently appraise his situation. He does not fully understand what is expected of him by the university. He has not had enough experience to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of non-fraternity life, or even form a valid opinion of the fraternity he rushes. Also, just at the time when his goals for his college career are crystalizing, he assumes the goals of a fraternity pledge, i.e., working for the house and becoming a brother. Thus, by juxtaposition, the goals and allegiances of a freshman are altered and his intellectual curiosity may be stifled.

One parctical consideration is this: What evils would be created by deferred rush? If the fraternity and the rushees were subjected to a full semester (or year) of rush, this would be more of a hindrance to the educational process than early rush. On the other hand, silence for a lengthy period would be almost intolerable and would undermine the spirit of the campus.

Another consideration is the "essentially truthful arguments" mentioned in the first paragraph. The social life of a non-fraternity freshman is woefully lacking. There are almost no freshman women; the student union, because of its size, cannot begin to provide an adequate program; freshmen do not have cars; the town of Chapel Hill seldom provides a social outlet; and there is no dormitory visiting agreement.

The initial step in attacking the deferred rush dilimma is to place the problem in its proper perspective and determine the most important issues at stake. It is doubtful that anything could be more important to the university community than the attitudes, aspirations, and actions of its students. If early rush is stymying the educational pursuits of students, then a change should be instituted. This change should be preceeded by the following: a careful and thorough study to discover the best methods of implementing deferred rush; and more social facilities, which could best attained through a new student union and a revision of dormitory social rules. The change to deferred rush should be instituted in such a manner that the fraternities would have ample time to adjust their finances and programs, but the change should be made.

programs, but the change should be made. —Ed Levy Jr.

"For this reason," he continued, "we are having a second organizational meeting this fall for those who could not attend the first meeting in September." The meeting will be Tuesday night at the office in Emerson.

Election Laws Are Changed By Committee

The greatest changes would be in Town Men's III and IV, according to the committee's discussions.

Town Men's III, which now is composed of all students except for those provided for elsewhere in other districts, would include students living north of Franklin St. and bounded on the east, west and north sides by the corporate city limits.

The committee considered this tentative change for Town Men's IV: students residing east of South Columbia St. and south of West Franklin, bounded by the Chapel Hill corporate limits on the south and east sides. At the present, this district includes students residing in Victory Village or the area bounded by Jackson Circle, Mason Farm Rd., Daniels Rd. and Polk St.

If the Town Men's IV is so revised, the committee discussed changing the polling place for this district from Victory Village to Woollen Gymnasium.

Whereas there is currently only one dorm women's district, the committee considered splitting this up into two with Dorm Women's I made up of Spencer, McIver, Alderman and Kenan, and Dorm Women's II made up of Smith, Whitehead, Carr and Nurses and any other women living on campus (such as the temporary dormitory space used in Smith Evergreen last year).

In other considered revisions of the elections laws, the committee discussed turning over all violators of the elections laws ot the Student Council for trial and not to the two Honor Councils.

The committee also considered the retention of only the class presidents and elimination of the other offices.

New 'Oracle' May Improve Phone Service

rotary dial use. A push-button phone would be placed into everyday use, but would lack special instrumentation in its shell. The test instrument would be linked to Sibyl, which would perform switching system functions — translating push button information into conventional dial pulses and relaying it to an operating telephone exchange.

The privacy of the phone conversation would be preserved, but Sibyl would be busy recording such facts as the date of the call, the time, originator, speed of operation, errors, whether the line was busy or the call completed.

In addition to providing a reliable conclusion on the new equipment's operational value, Sibyl's data would answer questions such as whether certain people are error-prone.

Bell Laboratories engineers hope Sibyl eventually will provide a better understanding of the relationship between machines and people who use them and gradually create a fund of information which will carry over to other projects and reduce the necessity for extensive experimental work on new systems.

Sibyl takes its name from the women of ancient Greece who were supposedly inspired by the god Apollo to see the future.

The designer of the "oracle" first came to Chapel Hill in 1947 as a freshman, but he left school for several years during which he was employed in technical work at American Enka Company.

RETURNED IN 1952

Irvin returned to UNC in 1952 and while completing his physics degree, became a member of Phi Beta Kappa, highest scholastic honor fraternity. He also was a member of Delta Phi Alpha and the Physics Club.

A native of Jacksonville, Fla., Irvin is married to the former Barbara Williamson of Texas. They now live in Bernardsville, N. J.

FATHER MURPHY
. . . to be installed today

CANTERBURY CLUB

Two Carolina Playmakers will give short scenes from "Death of a Salesman" at the Canterbury Club supper meeting today at 6 p.m.

Jim Carse of the YMCA will lead a discussion on the scenes.

Installation Of Father Murphy Scheduled For Today At 5:30

The formal installation of Father Francis J. Murphy, J. C. D. as pastor of the Catholic parish of St. Thomas More will take place here today at 5:30 p.m. Officiating will be the Rt. Reverend Monsignor Herbert A. Harkins, V. F., rector of Sacred Heart Cathedral in Raleigh, as delegate of his excellency, Bishop Vincent S. Waters. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Father Murphy is a native of New York City and has studied at Fordham University and St. Johns Seminary in Little Rock, Ark. He was ordained in 1943 and obtained his doctorate in cannon law from Catholic University in Washington, D. C. He has held pastorates in Whiteville, North Wilkesboro and Charlotte and assistant pastorates in various parishes throughout the state, including Chapel Hill in 1947, and Durham in 1948. For several years he has been vice chancellor of the Catholic diocese of Raleigh and an official of the matrimonial tribunal. In 1950, he led a statewide pilgrimage to Rome.

The UNC School of Medicine has been a member of the Assn. of American Medical Colleges since 1908.

WINSTON TASTES GOOD LIKE A CIGARETTE SHOULD!

Written Today By ELLIOTT COOPER

It may be interesting to note that the students who have been yelling for Jim Tatum's head for the past two weeks quieted down yesterday morning and gave the coach a little credit for the 8-7 victory that his team won over Southern California.

The win over Southern Cal has had the same sobering effect that the victory over Navy did last year. When the Tar Heels beat the Middies 13-7 a year ago, it convinced the local fans that they really did have a good ball club. From the pre-season ratings everyone was led to believe that this year's agregation was going to be world beaters. The loss to State followed by one to Clemson shattered that dream but fast.

Although the Tar Heels will not go undefeated this season, they will play and have played an exciting brand of football. On the next three Saturday's Carolina will endeavor to get back into the conference race by taking South Carolina, Maryland, and Wake Forest in that order.

CLEMSON WAY OUT FRONT IN CONFERENCE RACE

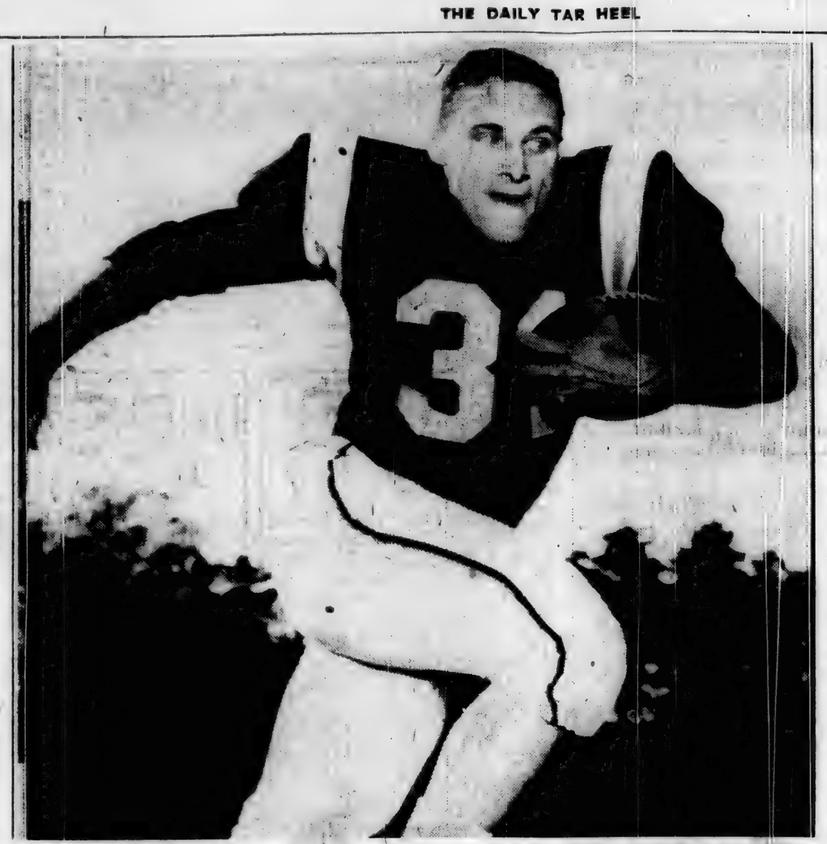
Unfortunately for Mr. Tatum, Clemson's Frank Howard seems to have already wrapped up the conference crown and whatever bowl bid may go with it. The Tigers have scored three straight victories but have yet to beat a team by more than eight points. That eight point spread came yesterday when the Tigers took Maryland 8-0.

Even if the boys from Clemson should lose one or two more, which is very unlikely after a quick look at their remaining games, the other seven teams in the league are having such a picnic knocking each other off that it will be hard to find a contender for the title.

Getting back to Friday night's game it was refreshing, and indeed amazing, to see a Carolina line which looked like a sive against the batterings of Doug Cline and Rudy Hayes of Clemson last week become a brick wall against the Trojans. As a defensive unit the Tar Heels allowed Southern Cal only two first downs during the entire second half.

From the radio description furnished by Braven Dyer some members of the Tar Heel forward wall held a party in the Trojan backfield shortly after SC quarterback Tom Maudlin took the snap from center. First come, first served. Instead of getting ice cream and cake, however, the object was to get Maudlin. On one series of plays a casual observer would have thought that Moose Butler didn't have to crash the party; he got through the Trojan line so fast it seemed he had a pass.

On the offensive side of the ledger, the Tar Heels were adequate but not quite as impressive as in the Clemson game. One of the main reasons was a Southern Cal sophomore named Marlon McKeever. During the second half McKeever did as much damage to the Tar Heels as Butler did to the Trojans. Jack Cummings' passing record was a little below par due to the fact that he had three of his tosses intercepted.



TOP TAR HEEL TRAVELER—Wade Smith is the boy who galloped 27 yards Friday night for Carolina's winning touchdown. The Heels upset Southern Cal 8-7 behind Smith's brilliant running.

Intramural Council

The joint intramural council officers will be elected Monday night October 6 at 7:30 p.m. The election will take place in room 301A Woollen Gym. These officers will head the intramural council for this school year. The officers that will be elected are president, vice president and secretary.

The fraternities, dormitories and graduate divisions will elect their officers at the end of the joint meeting. Their officers will include chairman, vice chairman and secretary. These officers will be in charge of only the meetings that are related to their division.

Some 54 managers will be present to represent their organization in the voting.

There are also 3 committees in the council. They are the rules and regulations committee, publicity and co-recreation committees. These will also be elected.

Results Of Yesterday's Games

Yanks 4, Braves 0

NEW YORK, Oct. 4 (AP) — Bruiser Hank Bauer put the New York Yankees back into the World Series today with the help of shutout pitching by Don Larsen and Ryne Duren and a base-running boner by the Milwaukee Braves. boner by the Milwaukee Braves. Bauer drove in all the Yankee runs in a 4-0 triumph, their first after two parring defeats at Milwaukee.

The ex-Marine knocked in the only two runs off loser Bob Rush when he dunked a single to right with the bases loaded in the fifth. He crashed his third homer of the series with Enos Slaughter on base in the seventh off relief man Don McMahon. Hank now has hit safely in his alst 17 series games.

Larsen who tired after throwing some 113 pitches in seven innings, struck out eight Braves. Casey Stengel took him out for a pinch hitter in the seventh after he had put two men on base in each of the last two innings.

A crowd of 25,00 saw the twice-beaten Blue Devils score in the first period when quarterback Bob Brodhead dived over from the 1. Guard Mike McGee set up the score on the Illinois 40 when he recovered a fumble by halfback L. T. Bonner. Brodhead passed to Dutrow for the two important extra points.

Duke 15, Illinois 13

DURHAM, Oct. 4 (AP) — Duke struck for two first half touchdowns behind the running of halfback Wray Carlton and George Dutrow and withstood a determined last half rally to edge illinois, 15-13, today.

Cross-Country Team Upset By Clemson

A taunted bunch of Clemson Tigers with upset on their minds descended upon Chapel Hill yesterday and clawed the favored Tar Heels 32 to 23 in a dual cross country meet.

Bishop First

Conceding first place to Wayne Bishop who obliged with a 20:02. Clemson concentrated on the middle places and ran away with four of them.

Walt Tyler finished second; John Dunkelberg, third; Leon Newman, fourth; and Harold Merck came in fifth. This was about all the Tigers needed.

The next three finishers were all Tar Heels — Howard Kahn, Alex Coffin, and Bing Somers — but they were of little aid to Bishop. Number nine was Gene Phillips of Clemson and Cowles Liipfert of Carolina was tenth.

Scurlock Hurt

Carolina ran a rather crippled squad — Dave Scurlock, Sonny Sweet, and Liipfert were all under par. However the surprising victory was well deserved by the Tigers as they set themselves up as the darkhorse of the ACC.

Clemson should certainly now be regarded as a threat to the perennial conference powers, Carolina, Maryland and Duke.

Fraternities Hear Young Score DTH

Davis Young last night asserted that Editor Curtis Gans used the recent series on fraternities to "slam" fraternities for " his own personal satifaction."

Young, a staff member of The Daily Tar Heel, urged the IFC to see to it letters are written to the editor so that the editor's views may be contradicted.

Young pointed out that he was "tremendously" disappointed in the present paper, and added that "many members of the staff will back me up when I say that I am not satisfied with the paper."

He said that columns by Anthony Wolff, Cort Edwards, and the controversy on contraception had lowered the quality of the paper.

He further exclaimed The Daily Tar Heel was not read, and "any paper that is not read, is not a good paper."

"I hope that students will rally behind this challenge and will speak out in the form of letters and columns to show thier distaste for the present paper," Young concluded.

The IFC voted last night to allow Pringle Pipkin, Daily Tar Heel reporter, to cover the meeting of the Council.

Also approved was the IFC weekend scheduled for December.

IFC President Tucker Yates thanked Young for presenting the fraternity point of view in his letter to the editor of last week, and also complimented the job Jamie Holmes and Young did in compiling the fraternity series which ran on the front page of the newspaper last week.

Miscegenation Is Di's Topic This Evening

The abolition of all state laws prohibiting inter-marriages of the races will be debated at tonight's meeting of the Dialectic Literary Socity at 8 o'clock on third floor, New West.

The bill to be debated states that legislation of this nature is inconsistent with the democratic principles of the United States and the civil liberties of the citizenry of North Carolina.

Di President Gary Greer said yesteday that anyone interested in the topic for discussion or in parliamentary debating is invited to attend.

The topic of adolishing laws which prohibit inter-racial marriages evoked much comment last spring when the state student legislature took this up.

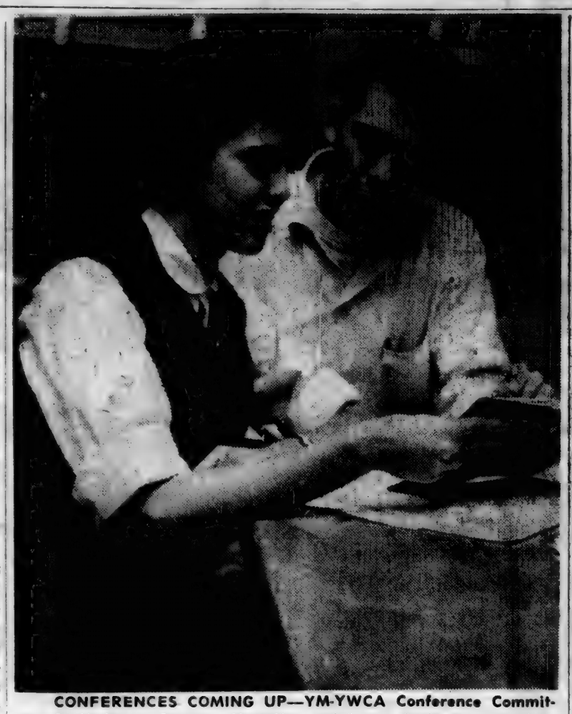
Class Ring Orders To Be Taken Thursday

Senior class ring orders will be taken Thursday in Y Court from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Lee H. Blackwell, representative for the Balfour Company, will assist members of the Grail in taking orders for rings.

The class of '59 or any previous class is eligible to order now. Rings ordered on Thursday will be delivered in about eight weeks.

Danny Lotz, class ring chairman, stated that the Balfour ring is the only official Carolina class ring.



CONFERENCES COMING UP—YM-YWCA Conference Committee Co-Chairmen Suzanne Mosteller and Larry Anderson are planning a full season of events.

Many Committee Meets Mark Y's 'Kick Off' Week

The YMCA-YWCA "Kick-Off Week," which began Monday and continues through next Monday, has four meetings scheduled for today.

"Kick Off Week" is designed to get the many committees and functions of the Y underway in their various projects.

Today's workshops lead off with a discussion group on "Campus Social Problems" at 4 p.m. in the Y building. The discussion leader will be Doug Sessoms.

Scheduled for 4:15 p.m. is a meeting of the Human Relations Committee, headed by Mary Church. This will also be in the Y building.

Other meetings set for today are the Publications Board at 5 p.m. in the Y and the Freshman Program slated at 5:45 p.m. in Lenoir Hall.

Organizational Meeting Called By Cardboard

"Being one of the largest cardboard sections in the eastern United States, the UNC Cardboard needs a large staff," Pat Dooley, president of the Cardboard, has announced.

"For this reason," he continued, "we are having a second organizational meeting this fall for those who could not attend the first meeting in September." The meeting will be tonight at the office in Emerson Stadium at 7 p.m.

Lawrence Wilson, Art Director, will explain his department which thinks of the stunts and draws them. The Office Department and the Usher Department will be explained by Cotton Hale and Thal Elliott respectively.

For work in all departments there are awards based on year and a point system. The first year award is a certificate of merit, and the second award is a UNC Cardboard jacket. A Cardboard monogramed sweater is given the third year in recognition of work; fourth year members receive gold keys.

Dooley extended an invitation to all freshmen, upper classmen, and coeds. He said that refreshments will be served.

Report Due Tonight On Caravan Progress

Don Furtado, the principle speaker at tonight's meeting of the Univrsity Club, will report progress in the arrangements for the Caravan Weekend to University of Virginia.

The University Club, working with student government, will try to arrange an activities weekend at U. Va. the weekend of the game.

"With Germans over with here and a big dance planned there, it seems like a good idea," said University Club President Dave Jones.

Furtado has written U. Va.'s Jazz Club to investigate the possibility of getting tickets to the game and concert and to check on possible conflicts. Since this weekend will be Band day at U. Va., housing difficulties may arise from the numerous high school bands on the Virginia campus.

Also, no football holiday has yet been declared by the administration here—an improtant consideration.

The cheerleaders and representatives from the cardboard, the band, Athletic Association, all dormitories, fraternities and sororities will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in Di Hall, New West, to hear Furtado's report and to discuss and make further plans for this Caravan.

Inaddition plans will be discussed for various homecoming weekend events, such as judges, displays and the dance.

Audit Board Plans S A F Info Campaign

The Student Audit Board yesterday decided to give campus organizations a more adequate understanding of the services of the Student Activities Fund.

To clarify the purposes of the Fund and its facilities on the Board is preparing a letter to be sent to organizations having large enough rteasury to be handled by the Fund Office.

The Fund Office is designed to provide means for student organizations to handle banking and accounting on a systematic basis. The Fund cooperates with treasuries by maintaining central accounts using accepted procedures and techniques as well as modern business machines.

The office has trained and experienced personnel to assist in the many problems the treasuries of campus organizations.

In further action by the Audit Board the hours of the Student Activities Fund Office were modified to prevent last minute blocking up in the Fund Office. Beginning Nov. 1, office hours will be open for public business from 8:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. Monday being handled at 4 p.m. will be through Friday and from 8 a.m. continued until finished. This tentative modification awaits final evaluation and decision by the Audit Board around Jan. 1.

The Student Audit Board also announced the approval of Harold Langenderfer as one of their faculty advisers. A second adviser has not yet been named.

Cobb Phones Are Disconnect Due To Damage

The two telephones on second floor, Cobb, have been cut off temporarily because one of the phones was damaged.

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said yesterday that the phones were cut off this past weekend and will remain off for around a week.

Edwards said neither phone on second floor had been working well. But before repairmen were able to work on the phones, the wires of one had ben cut and the box ripped from the wall.

In case of an emergency, the telephones on Cobb's other floors are working, Edwards said.

Edwards, who is also an adviser in the dorm, saw to it that the phones were cut off temporarily.

Weekend Meet Features Beach On Conscience

By BEN TAYLOR

Are you apathetic . . . interested only in future security; or a conformist . . . lacking in strong individualism? Is this a picture of the typical Carolina student, includnig yourself?

These and many other questions on contemporary campus life will come in for discussion when the UNC YMCA-YWCA and the N. C. State YMCA co-sponsor a weekend conference on Oct. 11-12 at Quaker Lake.

Dr. Waldo Beach's important new book, "Conscience On Campus," will serve as the basis for discussion. Dr. Beach is Professor of Chistian Ethics at Duke University and a renowned speaker on college campus problems and ethics.

Conference co-chairman Larry Anderson said the joint conference will serve to "provide an opportunity to examine realistically contemporary campus life and the motivation behind it, and to search for the answers to the problems involved.

"It will be a week-end conference planned with the new students especially in mind."

Plans for the conference call for talks by Dr. Beach on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, as well as study groups, panel discussions and a vesper talk by Jack Lewis. Regular Sunday morning worship services will also be held at the conference site.

"Conscience On Campus," according to Anderson has won praise from many sources in the months since its publication because of the "honesty, wit, and insight with which Dr. Beach examines college life."

"It is a realistic, consise interpretation of Christian ethics for college life; also, it is being used as the basis for study groups and conferences on campuses throughout the country this fall," Anderson said.

The conference will begin at 6 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Oct. 11, and will end around 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon. It will begin late so as to avoid conflicting with the football game that afternoon.

Transportation to and from the conference site will be provided, Anderson said.

Y officials have urged anyone interested in the weekend conference to register at the Y office today.

Capital Improvements At UNC May Take Special Bond Issue

By CURTIS GANS

A special bond issue may be floated in order to pay for capital improvements to the University—including a new student union — Chanlellor W. B. Aycock explained at the first Chancellor's Cabinet meeting of the year yesterday.

The Chancellor discussed UNC proposals at the request of Student Boly President Don Furtado, who brought forward some tentative proposals for bettering student, faculty elations which will be discussed at the next Cabinet meeting.

Aycock pointed out that the University was requesting over 11 million dollars, and that this was divided into three budgets.

The first budget, the "A" budget, covers the operating expenses at the present level of education with increments only according to predicted growth of the University. This budget is currently before the Advisory Budget Committee for approval or suggested final changes.

The "B" budget contains expansion, increase in salary, research facilities, and other items indicative of the growth of the University.

A new feature of the "B" budget is that across the board increases on faculty salaries are not present. There is a lump sum to be given for salary increases to be appropriated by the administration and department heads as they see fit.

The Chancellor pointed out that the main emphasis in the "B" budget is on faculty benefits.

The "B" budget is under consideration at the present time and a report from the Advisory Budget Commission will be forthcoming soon.

The third facet of the budget is permanent improvements. Heading the list of permanent improvements is additions to existing buildings and building repair.

In the original budget request, the School of Public Health's request for buildings was placed separately from the request of the University for additional buildings.

In the University's request, a building for geology and geography came first, followed by a new student union, and the botany building.

These capital improvements are usually made from surplus monies, and this year there probably will be no surplus, according to the Chancellor. Hence, the necessity of a bond issue.

In order to formulate the bond issue it was necessary to consolidate the request from the School of Public Health and the general University request. After formulation, the new student union was after the botany building, and behind the School of Public Health and geology and geography buildings.

The Chancellor said that the Board of Higher Education will issue its recommendations shortly to the Advisory Budget Commission concerning the bond issue, and if they approve of it and the Advisory Budget Commission approves of it, the bond issue may stand a good chance of passing the General Assembly when it convenes this winter.

If so, the State will vote on it in the November elections.

President Furtado Urges SP To Improve Campus

Student Body President Don Furtado, speaking last night before the Student Party, admonished the body not to compromise itself, that a party is not a thing to exist for itself.

Furtado, in addressing the party, stressed the role of Student Party in student government, saying, that it is easy at times for a party to try and maintain itself. He expressed the opinion that the party should express it's beliefs with the idea of making the campus better.

In his opening remarks Furtado apologized to the gathering for his fajlure to attend the party's first meeting last week because of a previous engagement. "This is my party," he said, "and in the past four years it has carried me a long way."

"The problems on campus are rather evident," he said in outlining points he would like to see the party carry out. Furtado urged the group to look around and see things that are wrong, and secodly to find people who are willing to work to improve the world and the campus.

At the conclusion of Furtado's speech, Student Party Chairman Leon Holt called for announcements. Erwin Fuller pointed out that SP began a series on present campus problems last year and that at the present there were several areas of concern.

Fuller called attention particularly to the question of proposed revisions in the present election laws.

According to Chairman Holt these proposed election law revisions, will be probably discussed at the next meeting along with a suggestion by Don Furtado to change the regular meeting night to Tuesday.

Civil Service Exams

The Civil Service Commission began accepting applications from college juniors, seniors, and graduate students Wednesday for the first written test under this year's Federal Service Entrance Examination.

The test is scheduled for November 15 and applications will be accepted through October 30, the Commission said.

The examination is designed to help fill the Government's yearly need for more young people of college calibre who have the potential to levelop into the top managers, technicians, and specialists of the future. Positions filled through this examination are in a variety of occupational fields and are located throughout the United States.

University Party Will Meet Next Week

The University Party will hold a general meeting next week for old members as well as new ones.

At a meeting of the Executive Board this afternoon, the date and time will be determined, according to Jack Lawing, party chairman.

Courts Uphold Prison Term Of UNC Grad

RICHMOND, Va. — (AP) — A statute permitting the government to disclose only those parts of classified investiagtive documents relative to testimony was upheld here Monday by the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

In upholding the statute the court affirmed a six-year prison sentence for Junius Orving Scales, a Greesboro native. Scales was convicted in 1955 of knowingly belonging to an organization Communist party which advocated violent overthrow of the government.

The Supreme Court reversed Scales, first conviction in the Eastern District of North Carolina because the government declined to produce FBI reports from their informers. The high court held the defense must be entitled initially to see the reports to determine what use would be made of them.

Since the first conviction, a statute was passed allowing the government to expose only those parts of documents considered pertinent to a case.

Scales, a UNC graduate, contended through counse that his constitutional rights were being violated on a charge of mere association unaccompanied by unlawful conduct.

On this point the appellate court said:

"The activities of such a group constitute a clear and present danger to the state and he who joins with open eyes becomes a part of all that he sees."

Carolina Sports Crowds To Be Rated On Conduct

At each home basketball and football game, Carolina crowds will be rated by visiting ball teams in a race with other conference schools for the Atlantic Coast Conference Sports Writers Association award.

"The award, which is presented each spring, was won last year by Duke University and the year before by Maryland.

"We are vitally concerned over the sportsmanship question and hope that this trophy will be the most sought after honor in the conference area," the association's executive secretary, Bill Hensley, wrote in a letter to Student Body President Don Furtado.

During football sason, visiting ball players are rating the Carolina crowds. Both the teams and the officials will rate the crowds during the basketball season. Votes will be tabulated and the trophy will be awarded in the spring.

Charles B. Deane Speaks To BSU

A former North Carolina Congressman — Charles B. Deane — spoke to the Baptist Student Union Sunday night on race relations.

Deane, who represented the 8th in 1956, said Christians should re-District for five terms until losing direct the thinking of misguided Southerners on the race issue.

Deane lost in the 1956 primary election because he had refused to sign the Southern Manifesto, a states' right document.

Law Alumni Reunion Set This Weekend

Law alumni will return to the University next weekend for their annual reunion complete with a dinner, business session and reception.

Attorney General Malcolm Seawell will address the annual Law Review dinner, to be held Friday night, at 6:30 p.m. at Howard Johnson's Restaurant on the Durham Boulevard.

Presiding will be Paul Johnston, director of the N. C. Department of Administration, and chairman of the Law Review Committee of the UNC Law Alumni Association.

Election of officers and directors, presentation of a yearly budget and other business will concern the Association in its annual meeting at 11 a.m. Saturday in Manning Hall Courtroom.

President Harry L. Riddle of Morganton will preside. Other officers are Vice-Presidents Howard Manning of Raleigh and Francis Fairley of Charlotte, and the secretary-treasurer, Miss Mary Oliver of Chapel Hill.

The Law Alumni Day festivities will continue Saturday afternoon with attendance at the UNC-South Carolina football game in Kenan Stadium. Law students will sport canes and top hats and attend the game as a group in their annual day of recognition.

Following the game a reception for all law alumni and members of the bar will be held in the main reading room of the Law Library in Manning Hall.

Library Phones Will Go Out; Abuse Is Cause

Unreasonable abuse of the pay telephones in the Library will result in the elimination of pay telephone service there, according to a report from the Student Library Committee yesterday.

This abuse specifically involved the use of the telephone booths as latrines, according to Pringle Pipkin, a member of the committee.

"Availability of telephone service in the University Library is a privilage, not a right," the report said, and the student committee has assumed the responsibility for "reasonable and proper respect for use of the telephones."

"The Library would like to continue to make this privilege available to the student body," the report continued. "However, when a privilege is abused, it is no longer a privilege, it is an abuse."

Included on the committee are Larry Taylor, chairman; Don Furtado, Jon Mazuy, Bill Lam, Tom Blumenfeld, Jim Purks and Pipkin.

Phi To Debate Death Sentence Tonight At 8

Is capital punishment just?

This is the question the Philanthropic Literary Society will debate in its second meeting tonight at 8.

Dr. W. B. Sanders, professor of criminology in the Dept. of Sociology will be the guest critic for the evening.

The bill of the evening is a resolution favoring the abolition of capital punishment in the state of North Carolina. Arguments supporting abolition will center on the practical failures of the policy.

Rep. Don Jacobs, the author of the bill, believes that capital punishment has outlived its usefulness to society, that the infliction of the death penalty seems to have little continues to be one of the world's effect on the crime rate which highest.

As recently as the 19th Century the death penalty was given for a variety of minor crimes.

The bill before the Phi would abolish such practices, substituting rehabilitation as the primary goal of law enforcement.

Students and faculty members who are interested in the debate, particularly freshmen, have been invited to attend. The society will meet at 8 p.m. in Phi Hall in New East.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Joan Patricia DuBose, Gail Gwen Grimes, Judith Hope Rhodes, Edsel Monroe Odom, Byran Grimes, George Walker Bender, Lewis John Brown Jr., Ray Davis Fennell, John Leroy Sossman, ChCarles Thomas Davis, Robert Edward Ketler, Wallace Hamilton Karult, Stewart James Larimer, David Drew Turnbull, Brinkley Kent MacDaniel, Karl Cecil Hendrickson, Baxter Hocutt Miller Jr., John Edwin Reeves Jr. and Charles Robert Lee Jr.

Apathy

There often been much talk about student apathy, and indeed there is plenty on the UNC campus: yet it is gratifying to note the attendance of the first lecture by Paul Tillich.

The overflow crowd at the lecture proved at least one thing — that with constructive programming, students might be a quite interested lot of people rather than an inert one. It can be hoped that this will continue in the future and that the idea of programming will not be lost in the shuffle.

YDC

Sometimes it is hard to tell which is worse, young Democrats or old Democrats.

The YDC, which came out again with a a platform denouncing the Supreme Court decision, advocating state's rights, and binding itself to vote only for Democratic candidates, promises very little leadership in the years to come.

It is unfortunate that the YDC does not try to see the issue. The issue of supremacy of the federal law is the issue involved in the present case, as well as the issue of equal opportunity within the framework of a democracy.

The YDC, if it wants to exert any real leadership, had better change its course, if it wants the states to have anythnig reserved to them. The age of centralization is here, and unless the states assume the responsibility which they have heretofore not assumed, they will not survive the change and a violent turmoil will result.

It can be hoped that the younger generation can assert the initiative. However, it was not shown last week.

Phones

It seems that the student body and others are having difficulties with their phones. One seems to be used as a urinal, while another seems to have been pulled from its hinges, thus necessitating the dormitory administration to dispense with it as a "punishment".

It seems the difficulty with the phone that has been used in the library for other purposes stems at least in part from the appearance of pay phones in that area when free phones were in vogue not a year ago. One can hardly approve of the student's action, who used the library phones such a purpose since they were made pay phones. It is difinitely reprehensibe conduct. However, there is at least a case to be made for strong, if not violent objection, to the placing of pay phones in the area.

They were placed on the pretext that students wanted two phones in library and that one phone was inadequate. However, in order to put two phones the library had to put pay phones. Nobody sounded out the students on whether they wanted free phones or pay phones, and they undoubtedly would have decided in favor of the former. Thus, the library has in all probability acted in their own interests rather than the interests of students. This ought to be changed quickly.

The second case is more serious. It seems that the phone on 2nd floor Cobb dorm has been out of order and that it kept ringing. A student bothered by the noise ripped the phone out. The dormitory administration responded by repairing the phones and shutting the phones off for a month.

The punishment does nothing to fit the crime. Instead it punishes a whole floor for an individual's action. Further than that, it fails to take cognizance of possibility of emergency phone calls or the possibility of trying to locate someone at any time. If an emerency strikes, there will be little time to go over to Cobb, go up the stairs, and find out whether the student is even in his room or in the area. The dormitory administration should have a little more wisdom than covering up for its inadequacy on the line of enforcement of dorm rules and detection of the culprit, by punishing the whole dorm. It is hoped that in the future they will.

Recordings Reviewed

Arthur Lessing

Outside of hero-worship, why has Van Cliburn made such an enormous impact upon the American muscial scene? Listening to his first recording (RCA Victor LM-2252), a performance of the Tchaikovsky First Piano Concerto in B-flat Minor, the question is decisively answered by the very strong impression the young man's playing makes. It is not merely that we are impressed; almost within his very playing one recognizes promise and talent, a future in which his musical temperament may some day perhaps reach the height of a Rubinstein or a Rudolph Serkin.

What then does this recording reveal?

First of all, more than any other recording of this concerto that I am acquainted with, we find a truly close unity between piano and orchestra. The orchestra (not identified, but probably members of the former NBC Symphony led by the Russian conductor Kiril Kondrashin) are close to the spirit of Cliburn in a kind of youthful and enthusiastic playing of the score. This does not mean that tempi are exaggerated or that unnecessary rubatos are introduced, nor that what is aimed for is romantic effect and uncontrolled abandon. As a matter of fact, what is so consistently amazing in this union is a kind of controlled romanticism compatible with a total conception of the work which is distinctly classical. Here we must not confuse the classical with the academic; this performance, especially in the ensemble of piano with orchestra, is anything but academic. Rather I mean that the total conception of the movements is quite defined by conductor and soloist so that there is a framework in which dynmics, tempi, ritards, accelerandos, creseendos, dimenuendos, candenzas, and attacks all have their place and function. This seems to me the essence of classicism. The old pattern of virtuoso accompanied by orchestra obviously does not hold for such an interpretation. Piano and orchestra support each other for a purpose beyond technical display or romantic outpouring, but which is the utterance of Tchaikovsky's music for its own sake. To haila performance because it is faithful to the composer's intention is a dangerous business, but I feel this performance does just that. We have the conductor Kondrashin and Cliburn to thank for this achievement.

Now to return to the individual performance of Van Cliburn Listen to his first solo entrance in the first movement: it is forceful (the phrases seem almost suspended on a structure of energy!), but the force is not forced or tight. Rather it is the very opposite: relaxed and spaceful. And bythe time he grandiese opening theme reappears in the orchestra, you know you are listening to a great performance.

His touch on the keyboard is sensitive to what is demanded in the music; thus he can strong where strength is needed; sensitive where a phrase needs sensitivity to truly appear as a musical phrase; and sweeping where sweep is in order. In the area of technique this touch is at its most exciting terrain, as for example in the many octave runs played with an amazing sense of authority and musical power. Listen to the very last run in the first movement and hear how it is spaced, structured, and conceived musically with just the slightest rubato holding back the last four eight notes at the very top of the run — even though at first sight it seems nothing more than a series of octaves running up in squence to the final cadence. Cliburn creates musical sense here with the highest kind of musicianship.

His phrasing is consistently musical and in good taste. It is not sentimental or distorted, but romantic in a tradition of romanticism which we have almost lost. It is the romanticism which believes itself to be at the basis of expression, not the surface. It is the expression of the inner, not the effect of the outer that this romanticism asks of us. And what we hear in this recording is a sincerity of feeling that is rare in a world in which hypocricy directs our lives.

The pianists' tone on the piano is amazingly warm even though lacking in the kind of depth that a Serkin can create. But the warmth makes up for this deficiency (one of youth I think), as in the first piano passage in the slow movement where the piano speaks even warmer than the obviously emotional flute. The middle section of this movement, incidentally, I have never been able to understand. The awkward Pressissimo seems to destroy the entire mood of the opening theme, and even in terms of contrast (which is dubious) the purpose is defeated by its ill-defined rambling character. However listen carefully to the ending of this movement, reminding of Swan Lake, highly emotional yet subdued, deeply touching but never sentimental. Here, Cliburn is at his very best.

The third movement is the poorest of the three as it suffers from a genuine lack of musical material (except for the second theme) to be compositionally explored. Cliburn's playing is impressive in its virtuosity but even he has difficulty making sense out the repeated squareness of the music. The most outstanding passage here is for me the "Molto piu mosso" section, close to the end of the movement, where the piano embarks upon a long string of sixteenth notes in long connected legato phrases. With the strings accompanying this passage, it is evocative of the most graceful feelings within us. The passage comes to a rude end when the notes become more and more staccato, and almost all of a sudden we fall with a rush of notes into the beginning of the coda.

The coda presents again the close unity of piano and orchestra, building to a larger and larger climax and ending with, what for me, is the most exciting run of octaves I have ever heard on the piano.

It is the great accomplishment of Cliburn and Kondrashin in maknig us realize that however popular and played-to-death the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto is, nevertheless, it reamins a truly great work of music, especially in the performance that has been given us on record by these two artists.

Letters To The Editor

EDITOR:

As spokesman for the "intellectually sloppy," Mr. William Rogers has stated that while existentialism does not mean eccentric haircuts, turtle neck sweaters, oversized medallions, loud inferior jazz, and free love, this is what the term has, unfortunately been perveted to symbolize to many of his group. He speaks the truth, Mr. Rogers made this statement while attempting to relate a certain Miss Bardot to the existentialist movement. He failed to be explicit in establishing the connection, however, and failed to note a minor distinction which, if somewhat subtle, should certainly be apparent to a gentleman of his acumen.

The female existentialist of the intellectually sloppy is an evil little wretch who digs free love, generally "sleeps around" and goes for all of the other nieties that Mr. Roger entioned. It is conceivable that the B. B. of the screen could fit into this category if these were the only qualifications. They aren't. To qualify, the candidate must display a definite intellectual appreciation for her activities. This is the crux of the matter and this is where Bardot fails. The Badot of the screen is the perfect stupid broad; she is not intellectually sloppy, she is intellectually nonexistant. If B. B. is an existentialist then so is every American housewife who sleeps with the milkman.

PORTRAIT OF A PERSONALITY

"With high regard and respect for each others individuality . . . , a group of personalities can make music wide in scope—from tender, soft sounds to screaming, crashing dissonance. This is an orchestra!"

And this is a revelation of the personality of Stan Kenton, for in these words is shown one man's sincere love of creative music and the musicians which bring it to life.

His is a dynamic personality, in which is constantly seeking to discover modern ideas, to be employed by modern artists, to create modern sounds.

In 1941 at Balboa Beach, California, the music of the Kenton Orchestra first appeared. It was a music that hung between the Swing Era of the 30's and the Bop Era of the 40's. Featuring the sections or the whole orchestra rather than soloists, allowed Kenton to concentrate on vivid, exciting arrangements. This gave rise to varied criticism, but whatever the criticism; people were interested; however, acceptance was gradual. So in order to sustain the band Kenton added the talents of Anita O'Day and Gene Howard to sing ballads. The next four years found Kenton enjoying success and acceptance.

In the spring of '46 the orchestra released its first album. With the diverse arrangements of Pete Rugolo, Milt Kabak, Ken Hanna, and, of course, Stan Kenton, the music, known as "Artistry in Rhythm," was acclaimed by the polls "as the most popular music of the year." Then after a short rest, and with largely the same "Progressive Jazz" personnel, Kenton, eager to introduce a new sound, arranged a series of concert tours. With the absence of rhythm section, Kenton's music, through the expression of the jazz soloist, created a unique jazz sound. Variety headlined, "Kenton's Carnegie Hall Concert a Killer Both Artistically and at B.O.;" and in its story, ". . . His music . . . could probably be compared in the jazz field to the music of Stravinsky and Shostakovitch." The Cuban influence, as in so many forms of progressive jazz, had its effects on the Kenton orchestrations. Lively interpretations of classic standards were introduced imparting something of the tense excitment of the modern world to 15,000 that lined the Hollywood Bowl and millions across the nation.

One year leater, with the arranging abilities of Johnny Richards, Bob Graetinger, Pete Rugolo, and Frank Marks; the talents afforded by 40 musicians including strings, woodwinds, and brass; and the listeners who clamored for the orchestra, the music, and the man, Kenton introduced to the Concert Statge—"Innovations in Modern Music." This idiom attaied nearly a classical form producing an unequaled accomplishment in the field of orchestrated jazz.

Kenton's fame had stretched across the Atlantic, so in 1953, The European Tour was initiated. The music, played by some of the finest musicians on the jazz scene, was more widely appreciated and understood in Europe and England than in America.

Stan Kenton Orchestras have been the testing grounds for many of today's jazz greats such as Bud Shank, Kai Winding, Gerry Mulligan Shelly Manne, Shorty Rogers, Stan Gets, and many others. "Possibly," Stan feels, the encouragement he gave those artists would ultimately prove his most lasting contribution."

And Stan Kenton looks to the future. "These are dynamic times and jazz is a dynamic language. Now, as in the past, he ranges through many realms of sound, intent on discovering the dazzling blend of plan and movement and improvisation that yields new jazz. The fresh musical concept and the brilliant musical performer come inevitably within his view, and though him they fuse, creating that tension between performance and listener on which a musical experience is communicated." His music is sometimes "cool;" sometimes 'crazy," but always sincerely Stan Kenton.

EDITOR:

Truly I had hoped to stay out of the discussion about contraceptives, but this letter, like the use of contraceptives, is the result of not enough moral restraint.

My quarrel is not specifically with the debunked Malthusian theory as expressed recently by Mr. Schneider, or with the sympathies of Miss Combes, or even the Thomistic philosophic principle expressed a few days ago (primary purpose of marriage - children). It is with their basic concept of Mother Church. One gets the idea that she has her ministers stationed at the keyhole of every chamber, to make sure that the primary purpose of marrage is enforced. This obviously is not true, or she would have to refuse the sterlie the right to her Sacrament, not to mention the increase in she staff.

Another idea that quickly follows, when speaking of two nasty words - Catholics & Constraceptives, is the picture of the poor forlorn, washed-out looking woman who is about to have her fifth child. You just know they cannot afford it for their car is two years old, and their TV is five . . . that Catholic Church! The unbelieving secularist cannot see, NOR TOLERATE that this Christian couple is pleased with their power of creation, and for the other wonders that have been given them. Why it would be just ingratitude and selfishness to abuse these gifts. It is hard work being a Christian, and our modern world does not make it any easier. The Church in her early years had her martyrs so to in these latter days.

The next idea that follows, in this stream of consciousness, is that of the poor mother about to be butchered for the sake of Rome. These same unbelievers can look at the Mediaeval Cathedrals with their spires, consisting of hundreds of hand carved statues, and wonder why in the world so many risked their necks, and the welfare of their families, to produce these works of art. NOBODY will see them, they are so far up, and besides in a few years these temples will be destroyed. let us be practical! Can this Christian Mother about to bring forth her masterpiece—an eternal temple—be practical? Why one word from her lips can bring the murderous hands of the family physician to her aid. No! Being a true artist and Christian she will work in silent labor, and awake to the smile of the Divine physician and hear Him say: "Greater love than this no man have that he lay down his life for another." "Come you blessed of My Father and take possession of the Kingdom prepared for you."

It was with a deep reassurance that I read the last accusations against my church (foresightless, unreasoning, reactionary, unjust, inhuman, irresponsible and irreverent.") for I could hear the voices of the old Romna officials call out these same charges, against a new sect that had begun and who called themselves Christians. Only the language had changed.

Thanks for reading this.

Outside the pit the spectators are beginning to mutter to themselves and argue with each other as to who will be the winner, the Chinese, or the Chinese. Fdysqrstnot (prooounced "Pat") has said many times to the general assembly of the United Canals that this is a really funny sight to behold. "Every Martian should see the world" is his motto. "See how the infection of the fight in the pit spreads to the spectators, who, so excited and absorbed in the cock-fight, imagine that it is they themselves who have the motives for fighting each other".

So we people of earth, drones the bored stenographer, find ourselevs in the cock-pit of a plane about which we know nothing and which is therefore out of control. Even when some earnest people attempt to put a mirror in the sky so that man might see the reflection of his situation, all that man can see is himself. And he laughs at himself as he playfully (as a mimicing actor) makes as many different kinds of expressions as he can.

There is even a crowded office-factory-assembly room, with many desks at which are perched neat little men, summarizing, typing, and filing the world's problems.

Eeny, meeny, miney, moe,
Catch a nigger by his toe,
If he hollars let him go,
Eeny, meeny, miney moe . . . YOU

You be a summarizer, typer, and filer of the world's problems; Big Brother needs you.

There is even a smoky, dingy, dirty, damp, dark, and rank cellar room with a few tables here and there. Each table proudly wears its insignia, a green wine bottlew ith a white, flickering, smoky candle. It's choir practice time. Let's slip in with our roving microphone and hear what goes on.

LEADER: All together children.

CHORUS: Hell with it al. I'm a low-low terranian.
Hell to all, I'm a pessimist.
Hell in all, I'm me.
All 'hell' to man.

Meanwhile, back at the throne, there be sits, calm, cool, and collected, with his typewriter before him, slightly amused with all he sees down below, not to mention a slightly superior air about him. As he types his observations, he finds that his nose is too large and is continually obstructing his view. (Quel dommage).

The September 27 issue of the New Yorker housed another one of the cartoon masterpieces on which the magazine's fame is based. This one was a drawing of three "characters" louging unhappily over coffee cups in the basement of some subterrannean bar equipped, of course, with coffee urn and "Come to Italy and Paris" posters. All three characters—two men and one woman—are dressed in appropriate uniforms—fruit boots, black sweaters, a string of pearls, old tweedy jackets, and berets.

One character is explaining dejectedly to his colleague: ". . . and I'll be writing along, beat as you please, when all of a sudden this irresistible surge of optimism comes bubbling out . . ."

Poor fellow. And then the black, black line which borders all his writings, his creations, his thoughts becomes blurred by that cursed OPTIMISM, which absolutely ruins beat writing.

And he has his friends. And they are not all in the picture in the lower lefthand corner of the September 27 issue of the New Yorker. They are all over the place, one never knows where. There MAY be one —or two—on this campus.

These fans if adversity, like Al Capp's immortal Joe Bffspplk, are nor bothered with silver linings. They are looking for real thunderclouds—preferably spurting with rain already. They do not get up on a beautiful day and look out the window and say: "Good morning, Lord!" They say: "Good Lord, morning." That is, unless they are atheists which most of them are and then the "Lord" is omitted and "Oh, Dharma," or "Oh, Sartre" is substituted.

Mssr. Blackcloud's favorite pastimes include: criticizing all manner of people, art, books, ideas, other pastimes not included in his repertoire, and we could go on forever; kicking cans along the sidewalk; looking in garbage pails; and, last but not least, sticking pins in happy little children's balloons. Also included in this category of pastimes is what we call "Incentive Squshing." This consists of flinging back in the animated face of one who has just had a terrific idea and made the mistake of confiding in the Incentive Squasher: "Really now, don't you think that is rather juvenille?"

Surprisingly enough, these little cloudy beings are not accomplishing too much in the way of places upstairs on the sunny streets while our places upstairs on the sunny streets while our pessimitic puzzle sit gloomily downstairs in the damp bar—getting oakng wet.

UNC Birthday Party Set For Sat. At 11 a.m.

University Day, the commemoration of the physical founding of the University of North Carolina, will be celebrated with traditional pageantry Saturday.

October 12 is the actual anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone in 1793 of Old East — the University's first building, but its occurrence on Sunday this year brings the celebration a day early.

Gen. William R. Davie and other Revolutionary leaders who founded the University will be portrayed by members of the Carolina Playmakers in the reenactment of the cornerstone laying.

According to the Chancellor's office, classes will be suspended at 9:50 a.m. Saturday.

The ceremony will begin at 11 a.m. on the steps of South Building. In case of rain, traditionally absent on University Day, the program will be given in Memorial Hall.

Chancellor William B. Aycock, who will lead the assembly in the traditional memorial tribute, will be celebrating also his first year as head of the University in Chapel Hill. It was on Saturday, Oct. 12, 1957 that he was officially installed as chancellor.

The Men's Glee Club, directed by Joel Carter, and the UNC Band, directed by Herbert Fred, will have major roles in the celebration which traditionally ends with a processional march to Davie Poplar for the program's conclusion.

Members of the University's Board of Trustees and retired faculty members will be special guests for the occasion which will be attended by students, faculty, administrative personnel and visitors to the campus.

Although 1793 saw the physical beginning of the University, its doors were not opened for over a year after that. It was on Feb. 12, 1795, that the first student, Hinton James, arrived in Chapel Hill.

The University had been chartered in 1789, 13 years after the adoption of the Revolutionary State Constitution, which provided that "all useful learning shall be duly encouraged and promoted in one or more universities."

Franklin Press Editor Opens Press Club Year

Weimar Jones, editor of the Franklin Press, will speak at the first monthly meeting of the UNC Press Club to be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Neil Luxon, 27 Mt. Bolus Rd.

His topic of discussion will be "The Weekly Newspaper."

Jones has been editor of the Franklin Press, a North Carolina weekly paper, for over 10 years. He has also worked for the Associated Press and the Asheville Citizen Times.

In 1953-54 he taught a course in community journalism here. Last spring Jones was tapped into the Order of the Golden Fleece, the highest men' honorary society on this campus.

The Press Club is open to all journalism and pre-journalism students, including freshmen and sophomores. Those students needing rides to the meeting are aksed to be at Bynum Hall by 7:15 p.m.

SPE's Doubly Happy Over Carolina Win

By ED ROWLAND

Every Carolina student and supporter was overjoyed after the Tar Heels edged Southern Cal last week, but except for the players perhaps the happest were the mmbers of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity.

The reason: their optimism in the team earned them a trophy skin from California Beta of the fraternity.

Thursday night, Oct. 2, a group of the members here felt they would win and decided to call the USC Sig Eps to bet them a skin. Since the Trojans were favored overwhelmingly, it took less than three minutes for them to accept the challenge.

APO Rush Will Begin Today

Alphi Phi Omega, National Service Fraternity, will begin its formal Rush program today at 7:30 p.m. in the Library Assembly room.

Two of three rush meetings must be attended as an elgibility requirement. The other two rush meetings are scheduled for Tuesday, Oct. 14, and Thursday, Oct. 16.

Dr. William Wells of the English Department will be the speaker at tonight's meeting.

All persons who have had previous Scout training and who are interested in this type work have been invited to participate in the Rush program.

The "lonesome end," football's newest innovation, was discussed with some gusto yesterday at Coach Jim Tatum's press conference. For those who haven't seen it yet, the formation goes like this: One or both ends will split from the regular line some 15 yards. In the real "lonesome end" formation, the end doesn't even go back into the huddle, but is told what to do by hand signals.

Coach Red Blaik of Army is credited with creating this latest brainchild, but several other teams have used it and will continue to. Tatum pointed out that Carolina used a modified form against Southern Cal. Army crushed South Carolina with it, then the Gamebirds came right back with it against Georgia. Duke used it last week against Illinois.

NEW RECRUITER

This particular discussion ended when Tatum announced that "We have a new recruiter on the staff, a specialist. You see, we didn't have anyone who knew how to recruit lonesome ends. All the ones we had were pretty friendly."

Tatum sited three thrills he got from the Southern Cal game: 1. "Our line played the kind of defensive ball they are capable of playing." 2. "Our kicking game finally came through like it should." 3. "We had better operation at fullback."

NEW POSITION TRIED TODAY

Today on the practice field, mass changes will be tried. Nelson Lowe will be tried at fullback, Henry Clements at 2nd unit quarterback, Moe DeCantis at left half, and Milan Wall at right half. Of course, all of these switches are only on trial and the team may be exactly the way it has been come Saturday.

Taking Sports Too Seriously Department: Saturday after South Carolina had beaten Georgia, a fight started on the field which soon developed into a general melee. A sociology professor from Georgia who was viewing the riot had a heart attack and died.

AN UPSET — AND SPIRIT

An unnoticed upset occured here on campus last Saturday when the supposedly top cross-country team in the ACC was knocked off. Clemson beat Carolina. No accident, no breaks, no nothing. True, several of the top runners were sick or not in top shape. Wayne Bishop did finish first, but Clemson ate up the next four positions to cinch the final score.

Dave Scurlock finished last. It would perhaps be unfair to say that the team was overconfident. It would suffice to say that Clemson was fired up. How can anyone get fired up running cross-country? To the guys who do the trotting, nothing is more important. To them, Saturday was a great day. This feeling of participation, hustle, and desire are what make minor sports important. Without this feeling, the minor sports would be defunct.

FENCERS STRIVE FOR RECOGNITION

There is a team on campus that performs vigorously and consistently for their school and for its sport — fencing. The fencing team, though most don't know about it, has beeen on campus for some eight years. They are not recognized as a varstiy team by the CAA. They receive no subsidies and the fencers get no monograms for participating.

Next month, the CAA will meet to decide on this matter. It will say whether or not the fencing team will remain a red-headed stepchild, or be recognized as a regular varsity team. The question is not one of money, but of pride. Then fencers want to be a varsity team. They deserve to be. We hope the CAA decides in their favor.

Notes on the Southern Cal trip: Visits by Cecil B. DeMille and Rhonda Fleming, a visit to the Paramount Studios, record breaking 102 degree temperatures on game day, first trip to the coast by a Carolina team, a visit to Disneyland, and a very fine football game.

Turley Blanks Braves 7-0

NEW YORK, Oct. 6 (AP) — New York's aroused Yankees shattered Lew Burdette's spell today and kept alive in the World Series on Bob Turley's five-hit 7-0 shutout of the Milwaukee Braves. It was the Yanks' second victory — both by shutouts — in the first five games.

Turley, the sturdy, 21-game winner who was routed in the seven-run first inning of the second game, made the Braves pay through the nose. Firing a sizzling fast ball and back-breaking curve with his no windup action, he struck out 10 Milwaukee batters.

The Yanks nudged Burdette, their four-time conqueror, for the first hit and run in the third inning — a home run aganist the left field foul screen by Gil McDougald.

They really caught up with their tormentor in the sixth when they rattled him loose from his moorings during a six-run explosion. The charm and skill that had carried him to four straight over the Yanks deserted him as New York's long slumbering bats finally came alive.

Third Series Shutout

This third straight shutout game in Yankee Stadium sent the clubs back to Milwaukee with the Braves the sixth game Wednesday afternoon leading 3-2. They will resume with noon after an off day for travel.

Neither manager was definite about his pitcher for Wednesday's game. Casey Stengel, who does the deep thinking for the Yankees, hinted it might be Ryne Duren, his righthanded relief ace while Fred Haney, boss of the Braves, was expected to pick Bob Rush, another righthander.

Going to the last of the sixth today Turley clung to a perilous 1-0 lead on McDougald's sixth series homer.

Mueller & Swearingen Athletes Of The Week

Two guys named Fred, Muller and Swearingen, who are the starting guards for Carolina, are the Daily Tar Heel's Athletes of the Week.

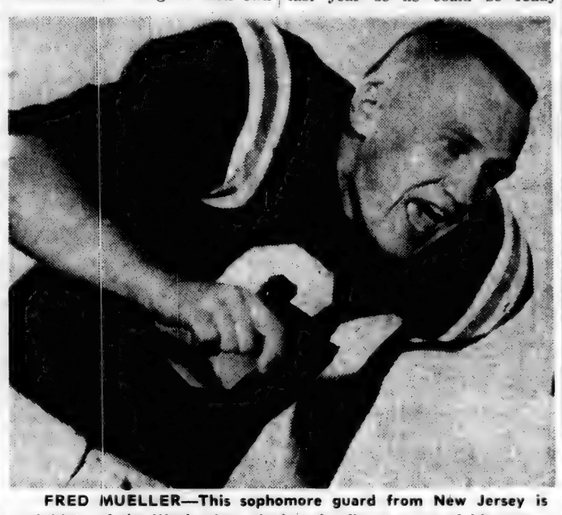
Each played such a great game against Southern Cal that neither could be singled out or neglected.

Mueller, a 6 foot 203-pound sophomore from Iselin, N.J., was a titan on both offense and defense. The most sparkling performance he turned in that night came when Southern Cal had 1st and 10 at the Carolina 24. Mueller smashed through the line twice to smear the passer in his tracks for long losses and kill the threat. When the series of plays was over, the Trojans had 4th and about 40 to go in their own territory.

Swearingen was also putting pressure on the passer all night, alternately crashing and laying back from his line-backer position. When Southern Cal got the ball in the closing minutes of the game and launched their desperate passing game, it was Fred who picked of a Tom Maudlin aerial to give the Tar Heels the ball with less than 2 minutes to go.

Mueller, an academic sophomore who is 22 years old, returned to Carolina last year from the service. He is the only soph in the starting line-up. He plans to study physical education, but would like a career in the military service. He sat out last year so he could be ready for this season.

Swearingen, who was acting co-captain for the Trojan game, is a 6-2, 203-pound senior from Petersburg, Va.



FRED MUELLER—This sophomore guard from New Jersey is co-Athlete of the Week after playing the finest game of his career against Southern California.

FRED SWEARINGEN — Swearingen, who was acting captain against the Trojans, played his part well with his outstanding line play. He is Daily Tar Heel co-Athlete of the Week.

Caravan Plans For UVA Game Laid

The UNC Caravan will go to The University of Virginia this year.

In its regular meeting last night, the University Club decided to sponsor the Caravan to Charlottesville and to make arrangements for tickets, transportation and housing for those UNC students who want to go.

Student Body President Don Furtado presented the Club with the results of his communications with UVA student leaders, and club President Dave Jones reported his conversations with local officials.

Furtado reported that the UVA Jazz Club is sponsoring a dance and concert Saturday evening after the game, and tickets will be available to UNC students in advance of their departure for Charlottesville. Maynard Ferguson, Dave Brubeck and the Four Freshmen will be the featured artists.

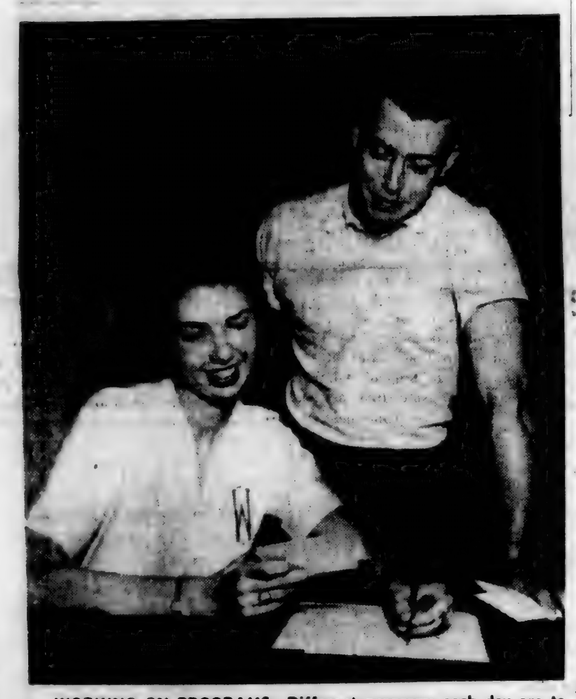
Jones explained the administration's stand by saying that the calendar committee did not set a definite date for Caravan or declare a football holiday for this year, so participation will have to be done on an individual basis. That is, those students who have no Saturday classes, and those students who can work out arrangements with their professors under the new cut rules, may take part.

The University Club will sponsor a bus to UVA for those who don't take their own cars. They will also make hotel reservations for those who desire them. The Chamber of Commerce of Charlottesville has supplied details and rates and they will be published soon.

"Dick Olive, the Chi Psi representative has been placed in charge of the caravan arrangements and will be making announcements about his progress from time to time." Said club President Jones. "I am sure that he will do a great job, and that this weekeend will be one of the most successful."

The club membership voted to change the categories in the Homecoming display judging to include only Men's Dorms, Fraternities and Women's. This year for the first time the women's dorms and sororities will compete with each other in this conteset.

Plans for Friday's pep rally were announced by Vice President Bill Porter. They include an appearance by championship majorette Faye Gooch.



WORKING ON PROGRAMS—Different programs each day are to be held for "Kick-Off Week," designed to get the committee and functions of the YMCA-YWCA started on various projects. Working on the programs are Miss Jane Walker, left, and Frank Elkin.

Dr. Leavitt Receives New Honor

Dr. Sturgis Leavitt, Kenan professor of Spanish and a leader in Latin-American studies, has just received another professional honor.

He has been appointed to the five-member Editor's Advisory Council of Hispania, a quarterly journal published by the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese.

Dr. Leavitt, a frequent contributor to the journal, served as president of the Association in 1946. The current president of the 5300-member organization is Prof. N. B. Adams, also a professor of Spanish in the UNC Department of Romance Languages.

Other members of the Advisory Council are on the faculties at Stanford, George Washington, University of Pennsylvania and the Choate School in Connecticut.

Dr. Leavitt directs the UNC Institute of Latin American Studies, which brings together the courses relating to Latin America offered in various departments. Holder of M. S. and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard, he has been on the UNC faculty since 1917.

He is past president of the South Atlantic Modern Language Assn., former chairman of the Southern Humanities Conference and former editor of the South Atlantic Bulletin.

Pope Pius Takes Turn For Worse

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP)—The condition of Pope Pius XII grew worse Tuesday night.

The 82-year-old head of the Roman Catholic Church had rallied earlier from a coma and partial paralysis that attended a stroke Monday, but other symptoms recurred.

Then late last night a Vatican official said flatly the Pontiff's condition had taken a turn for the worse. Pressed to elaborate on the degree of worsening, he replied only: "I stick by what I said."

A doctor close to the situation said the Pope was in worse condition than a medical bulletin issued at 6 p.m. had indicated. This source said the Pontiff actually was still afflicted with partial paralysis that affected his upper body, face and speech.

There also were signs that the Pope possibly was delirious.

Msgr. Angelo Dell'Acqua, substitute secretary of state, visited the bedside and said the Pope had asked "why the audiences had been suspended."

AUDIENCE IMPOSSIBLE

The secretary indicated that he had to insist to the Pope that audiences were for the time being impossible. The Pope has received millions of people in audience during his 19-year reign.

Another indication that the Pontiff's condition had become more grave was the announcement that the Vatican press office planned to remain open throughout the night.

A slight deterioriation had been reported in the Pope's condition earlier in the evening.

Vatican sources said members of the papal household disclosed the return of a urinary difficulty. His physicians had reported it cleared up this morning.

OTHER INDICATIONS

Other indications of deterioration were a quickened pulse—a beat of 102 per minute—and a slight fever at a temperature of 99.5 degrees. Normal body temperature is about 98.6.

The Pope's condition improved markedly during the day.

COMPARATIVE SURVEY COMPILED—The Student Legislature Emergency Dormitory Rent Committee has compiled a comparative survey of rents in other universities. Shown above are figures of 17 colleges and how they compare with UNC's. Listed are the square feet per occupant, rent on 3-man rooms, whether the other colleges have a self-liquidating plan, and the cost of construction per student.

Legislature Committee Compiles Survey

Both University officals and a Student Legislature committee are working against the present policy of "self liquidating" dormitory finance plan.

In pointing out problems under this plan, the Student Legislature Emergency Dormitory Rent Committee has compiled a comparative survey of rents in other universities.

The self liquidating policy means that new dorms constructed are financed by 40-year bond issues. The source of revenue for repaying these bonds when they come due is from room rent net income. And this is why room rent goes up every time plans for new dorms are approved.

The "self liquidating" plan was applied to all housing construction in state-supported colleges by the 1955 North Carolina General Assembly.

RENT HAS INCREASER

On the basis of this law, room rent at the University has increased several times from the $87.50 annual charge in 1947 to the present $171.50 (for men). This increase of $20 a semester this fall was earmarked for ammortization of bonds issued to construct an eight story men's dorm and an addition on the nurses' dorm, which will both be under construction soon.

The official stand of the University administration is anti-self liquidation. Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver has said that as long as the University continues to ask for appropriations from the General Assembly, then the indication will be that the self liquidation plan has not been accepted

'BARRIER TO GROWTH'

The State Board of Higher Education concurs with this opinion. Board Chairman D. Hiden Ramsey of Asheville called the problem, "the barrier to the growth of our state institutions."

Foes of the self liquidating plan will seek a definite stand from the Consolidated University Board of Trustees at a Board meeting this week.

Also the Student Legislature Emergency Dormitory Rent Committee plans to actively lobby at the 1959 General Assembly session. The committee will get support from a volunteer student group who will present the problem to their state senators and representatives during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. Information to the press will be mailed out by the committee.

On the chart elsewhere on this page, other universities are shown to be using the self liquidating plan in one form or another. This chart shows that self liquidation is a nationwide problem.

This problem, incidentally, came mainly in the post-World War II period when veterans descended on college campuses in great numbers and that it has been intensified by the increased birth rate in the late 30s and early 40s.

UNC RATING

In a comparison of room rent (based on men's triples per semester) the chart shows UNC to be higher than four of the institutions questioned, to be nearly the same as four others and to be lower than the remaining six.

Room rent figures themselves do not give an accurate picture because the facilities offered vary among the various colleges and universities.

The facilities in the dorms and rooms might vary according to laundry, phones in each room, libraries, camera club rooms, music rooms, typing rooms, ping-pong rooms, air conditioning, kitchenettes, clothes pressing rooms, recreation rooms, garages and storage rooms.

Harold W. Condrea, University of Missouri Housing director, indicated in a letter that UNC is far behind most other colleges in services offered. He said, "If you are interested in lowering dormitory rates, I suggest you first consider which services, now provided, can be discontinued."

There are two colleges in the survey which do not even have janitorial service, something the dorms here do have.

UNC falls behind many colleges in the amount of floor space and construction cost per student. North Carolina state-supported schools are the lowest in dormitory construction cost per student.

OPTIONAL QUESTION

In a questionnaire sent out by the Student Legislative Emergency Dormitory Rent Committee, the schools were given an optional question of their opinion of the self liquidation plan. All who answered opposed the plan, except for unqualified affirmatives from the univesrities of Connecticut and Texas.

Many of the colleges expressed interest in working out a percentage system, part appropriation financed and part self liquidating. Virginia Polytechnic Institute proposed a 45 per cent self liquidating plan. The University of Minnesota plans to ask for a 20-25 per cent subsidy from the state legislature.

Red China Planes Touch Off Gunfire

TAIPEI, Formosa — (AP) — Communist planes swooped over Quemoy and touched off a hail of Nationalist antiaircraft fire Tuesday, straining the Red-proclaimed cease-fire in Formosa Strait.

The Nationalist firing was the first since Red China proclaimed a week-long halt in its artillery pounding of the offshore island effective early Monday. No further clashes were reported, and the Nationalists took advantage of the truce to push in more supplies by air and sea.

Eight planes in three formations approached Quemoy at 4:25 p.m., the Nationalist Defense Ministry said. They streaked over the island, then raced for the mainland with antiaircraft shells bursting around them and machine gun tracers probing the sky.

AP Correspondent Gene Kramer reported from Quemoy the Red planes made two passes through a high overcast but did not open fire.

Maj. Gen. I Fu-En, Nationalist Air Force intelligence chief, said both jets and propeller planes may have been involved. This raised speculation that the slower propeller craft may have taken photographs while MIG fighters provided cover.

The Red flights did not necessarily violate the truce pledge. Peiping's original announcement said only that artillery shelling of Quemoy would be suspended for seven days. One condition, however, was that the United States cease convoying Nationalist supply ships to Quemoy.

In Washington, State Department Press Officer Lincoln White described the flights as provocative. Therefore, he said, the Nationalist antiaircraft fire did not break the cease-fire.

While countered a Communist complaint that the United States had failed to stop convoying Nationalist supply vessels. He said the first convoy after the cease-fire already was at sea when shooting halted. He implied that all U. S. convoying had been halted or was about to be.

Air drops were carried out at Quemoy Monday night and twice Tuesday. Six Nationalist cargo planes landed in quick succession Tuesday.

University Day To Be Held Saturday At 11

Colorful University Day exercises, marking the 165th anniversary of the founding of the University, are scheduled for Saturday morning, beginning at 10:50 o'clock on the south side of South Building.

Traditionally Carolina celebrates its birthday on October 12, the day in 1793 on which the cornerstone of Old East was laid, but its occurrence on Sunday this year brings the celebration a day early.

In a re-enactment of the cornerstone laying members of the Carolina Playmakers will portray Gen. William R. Davie and other Revolutionary leaders who founded this institution, the nation's oldest state university.

Classes will be suspended Saturday at 10:50 a.m., not 9:50 a.m. as reported yesterday.

The University Day program, scheduled to begin at 10:50 o'clock on the south side of South Building, will be cancelled in the event of rain.

No matter whether it rains there will be no classes or laboratories at 11 o'clock Saturday.

Special music for the occasion will be furnished by the University Band and Men's Glee Club. Also taking part in the ceremonies will be representatives of the A.R.O.T.C. and N.R.O.T.C.

Chancellor William B. Aycock, who will lead the assembly in the memorial tribute, will be celebrating his first year as head of the University. He was installed officially on October 12, 1957.

Student Loses $93.80 From Car Monday Night

Larry Wayne Ennis, UNC student from Durham, told local police Monday night he lost $93.80 in articles of clothing which were in a gym bag in his car.

Police had not recovered the lost items as of Tuesday afternoon.

Reported lost from Ennis' car, parked on the campus, were a pair of loafer shoes, a pair of basketball shoes, a sweater, two shirts, a pair of pants, a belt, an electric razor and some underwear.

Two Honoraries To Hold Meet For Orientation

The Carolina chapter of the National Pre-Medical and Pre-Dental Honorary Society will hold an orientation meeting for all students interested in pursing these fields at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in 106 Haynes Hall.

Representatives from the medical and dental schools will tell the students what is expected of them during their studies.

Each year hundreds of pre-med and pre-dent students enter Carolina, but between 70 and 80 per cent of these trying for the degrees in each class are washed out.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Joy Teeter Little, Joan Patricia Dubose, Judith Hope Rhodes, Catherine Leiding Rakestraw, Bryan Grimes, George Walker Bender, Richard Curry Stoker, Walter Monroe Brown, Ray Davis Fennell, John Leroy Sossamon, Charles Thomas Davis, David Drew Turnbull, Brinkley Kent McDaniel, Carl Cecil Hendrickson, John Eric Parrish, Harry White Scott, John Edwin Reeves Jr., Charles Robert Lee Jr., and James Ray Wilborn.

IN CAMPUS EXHIBITS

Art, Science, Books Display

By ELLEN STEIN

Among the outstanding art, literary, and scientific exhibits on campus is a collection of European and American masterpieces at the Ackland Art Gallery.

This collection, compiled from 19 different colleges, contains works representative of various schools of art: Rembrandt—the Dutch school, Matisse—the Impressionists, and John Singer Sargeant—late American.

Kenneth Ness, acting head of the Art Government, wants to continue similar high standards to show how effectively art programs can mature at a University gallery.

The Morehead Building is now featuring two art collections. In the north gallery "Watercolors" by Don Harris of High Point is an original display of fine lines and subtle coloring in the field of the landscape artist.

In contrast the South Gallery presents reproductions of historical photographs that hung in the Pentagon. The University Art League will have on display in November the work of Jane Balmeier in the North Gallery. In December there will be an exhibition of prize winning photographs by North Carolinians.

The scientific rooms at the Morehead Building will feature several exciting exhibits for presentation in the proceedeing months. Anthony Jenzano, manager of the planetarium, has tentatively scheduled an exhibition on the "Satellite" to be presented by the National Academy of Science. A Vanguard Rocket exhibit from the Glenn L. Martin Co. is planned for December and an exhibit on the Model Railroad will be held in November.

Currently on display in the Library is the exhibit, 'Recent Books on Comparative Literature," organized by Dr. Werner P. Friedrich, who was host and chairmen for the Congress on comparative literature at Hill Hall.

The president of Forensic Council, John C. Brooks, has arranged three interesting exhibits on the debating societies. One is on the Philanthropic Society and contains clippings pertaining to its organizational makeup. Collectively the exhibit illustrates the purposes of the Phi.

There are also exhibits on the Debate Squad and the Forensic Council.

The preliminary report of the Student Legislature Committee on self-liquidation indicated that the State of North Carolina is not so committed to education as are some other states.

That room rent has 150% per student in the past several years is indicative of the lack of concern that the state has placed on the rising cost of education for the student.

When education costs more than the student can afford, then there will be too few students to make the cause of edycation worthwhile. The further that one gets toward this in any state, the further the cause of democracy falls, for it is dependent on an educated and informed public.

The less education is a profitable enterprise for the state or the less it tries to cut corners for the sake of saving expenditures the better off the community will be, and the less chance the country will have of losing its potential leaders for lack of finances. The policy of a room rent hike for purposes of total self-liquidation of dormitories must be stopped. In the immediate future total elimination of self-liquidation seems slim, but the hope for this is still there. This is the goal that the state should try to strive for.

There is also a second problem confronting those who would want adequate dormitory facilities. This is a $2,500 limit on construction per student, which is far out line with the average per student construction limit in other Universities similar to UNC.

Somehow, somewhere, someone must make those who make the decisions aware that the object of education is the student's mind, and that the type of conditions under which a student lives is all important in determining what type of a student he will be. Thus, the need for dormitories with the student rather than the narrowest budget in mind. This cannot be accomplished with the present limitation.

It is honed that those who make the decision on limitation of construction costs are aware that this decision is fundamental as one of the keys to a healthy University atmosphere. It is hoped that they revise their limitation upward.

On Nixon

Vice President Nixon, who has been lambasting the Democrats for the past several days in hopes of garnering a few Republican votes in what looks to be the largest Democratic landslide in many years, made a statement not too many days ago in which he chastised the person in the State Department who released the fact that letters arriving at the State Department were overwhelmingly in opposition to the policy of President Eisenhower with regard to Quemoy and Matsu.

Mr. Nixon said at the time something to the effect that if the will of the people were followed in the handling of foreign policy, the nation would be in poor shape.

Someone ought to query Mr. Nixon on what a democracy is, if the people's will is law. The basis of a democracy is the popular rule, and that anyone who assumes office does so on the basis of popular acceptance of his program. Any lapse from popular acceptance, and the person will find himself out of office.

Mr. Nixon would probably answer that America had a republican form of government in which people were represented through a representative, and that the representative's policy need not necessarily reflect the view of his conatituents, but that the fact that they elected the representative was significant.

To this a person might reply, that this was an example of a Republican form of government, and it surely would be a good guide at the polls this November.

Mr. Nixon in the future had better hold his tongue. If not he will neither be an asset to the Republican Party nor more importantly to the United States.

Segregation

Nick Bagdasarian

In this week's issue of Time Magazine, there appeared in the "Letters To The Editor Department," one kind-hearted soul who made this blunt comment on the integration issue: "Go ahead Governors Faubus and Almond-close the schools. Make your stupid Southerners stupider."

With such praiseworthy remarks as these, those living north of the Mason-Dixon will be endeared to us for posterity. It is heartening to take not how vehemently Northerners will voice their opinions in matters which concern the nation.

But does it concern the nation?

Segregation is a problem; that is honestly if not willingly admitted. But it is a southern problem, not a national one. Someday this problem will be licked. The trouble arises when one society forcefully tries to compel another society to discard its traditional standards in favor of its own.

This is just the ordeal the whole of Dixie is undergoing.

The day has come when the materially rich politicians up North can rule the destiny of our South. We are only tools in the hands of skilled masters: masters whose primary objective in life is to subject a once proud people into the filth-infested mire of their own world.

I am neither advocating for nor against the doctrine of segregation. I don't believe any man has that right. What I am defending is our right to mold our own society as we see fit, regardless of the Supreme Court's opinion.

Of course, open defiance of federal law is not the answer. It can only lead to tension between federal and state governments and increase disharmony in the nation. While it has prevented integration in some degree throughout the South, the final test has yet to arrive. With the South as disunited as it is, a prediction of total integration within the next ten years might well be heeded.

But getting back to our thoughtful friends north of the border, my only answer to such considerate concern can be put in three rather well-chosen words: "Yankee go home."

LETTERS

Dear Davis Young,

Reality is the damndest thing. Realism often sounds ridiculous. Maybe what I am saying sounds ridiculous. Undoubtedly, some will say it is ridiculous.

Most people don't make a practice of going around all the time telling people what they really want, nor do they always say how they really feel. They have too much to lose. Besides, if they did these things, they would probably sound ridiculous. Sometimes they sound ridiculous anyway.

I don't have very much to lose, so I can run the risks of telling how I really feel and of sounding ridiculous too. This way I don't have to assume the vantage point on the throne of righteous indignation to sling mud at whomever and whatever I please. I guess I don't have much ambition. Besides, it's cold and drafty up on the throne and it would probably hurt a lot if one were to fall off. I guess it would be like falling out of a highchair.

So, here I stand ready to do a little "slamming for personal satisfaction." I don't really worry very much about "slamming for personal satisfaction" because I heard that anything that was any good could stand a lot of slamming without being the worse for it.

As a final blow, I point to all the individuals who say things I don't like. I always throw my mud directly in their faces. Even if they write articles for the Daily Tarheel, I don't try to blame Curtis Gans for what they say.

I don't guess I've covered everything in this letter, but if you want to get all the "facts" you can subscribe to the N. Y. Daily Mirror. It's a good paper. Lots of people read it.

Re: Mr. Wolff's controversial article on birth control

I have been following the birth control controversy, engendered by Mr. Wolff, with the amused belief that for many readers, it provides an outlet for the sterility of ordinary classes. You know, wave any sex issue and the campus becomes interested. After all, it's one of our dearest possessions.

In any case, I think that the issue of religion versus birth control on this campus needs another Parson Maltus. Lenoir has too many mouths to feed. The dorms, the classrooms—AND—the Arboretum and bell tower parking lot are becoming too crowded.

INTEGRATION ON FRANKLIN STREET

It seems noteworthy that the benches along Franklin Street are occasionally integrated. This encouraging circumstance may be due to the former Christian employment of said benches as church pews, or perhaps to the fact that they are just as uncomfortable now as they were in Memorial Hall, and so they are entirely unsuited to miscegenation.

BILLY GRAHAM IN CHARLOTTE

Taking its cue from The New York Times, The Charlotte Observer has evidently adopted a policy of publishing the full text of important speeches; but while the Times publishes the spoken words of public figures such as President Eisenhower, key debaters in U. N. disputes, etc., the Observer chooses to immortalize the words of evangelist Billy Graham.

Those readers who like Mr. Graham and are unable to see him in person, and who lack either the time or the equipment to watch him on television, undoubtedly appreciate the service but in view of the unlimited opportunity offered by Mr. Graham's organization to anyone interested in his message, it seems unnecessary to devote two full pages of a newspaper to repetition.

But the Observer chooses to reduce Mr. Graham's passionate speech to cold newsprint; and so an unfortunate statement was lifted from its demagogic context of public evangelism and exposed to the cool consideration on Monday morning.

"You know, I never have liked the artists' conception of Christ. Most of the artists have painted Christ as an effiminate sort of a person, a very weak . . . person.

". . . I think that Jesus was every inch a 'He-man.' . . . I think that Christ was probably the strongest man physically that every lived. He could have been a star athlete on any team. He was a real man with His strong shoulders, His squarish jaw . . ."

". . . He was the type of man who, if He walked in here tonight, we would all get up and follow Him . . . He was a man who had a flash in His eye, a square to His shoulders, and a strength of character to His face . . ."

Even H. L. Menken, a talented anti-Christ if ever there was one, would have been hard put to commit such blasphemy. According to Mr. Graham, Jesus was the ancient equivalent of the fraternity man's fraternity man, potential Rotarian, civic leader, and if not a Morehead Scholar, at least a sure recipient of Coach Tatum's fattest Grant-in-Aid.

Aw, c'mon now, Billy.

Notes On Music

Arthur Lessing

Leonard Warren and Italian Opera Music highlighted the opening concert of the Chapel Hill Concert Series last Monday evening. In a diversified song recital ranging from Beethoven's "In questo tomba oscura" to an American folksong which reached its zenith of popularity in Russia during Mr. Warren's most successful tour there a year ago, the artist revealed his unusual range of interpretation and art in an evening of music that will be long remembered by the audience. As a matter of fact, the enthusiasm ran so high that the singer presented encores after almost every group of songs, and for good measure added two or three at the close of the concert.

It was in his rendering of the "Credo" from Verdi's opera "Otello" that his art was most strikingly demonstrated. Mr. Warren's voice has an infinite range of color and expression besides having a basically deep and vibrant baritone character. It is a voice that carries easily through the hall. It is a voice that has both subtlety and power. It is a voice that can express feeling with the most beautifully defined pianissimo tone, but it can also gather such strength that the power of it can almost physically be felt. All these characteristcis plus a deep sensitivity toward the temperament of Verdi's music made the performance of this particular area a truly great one.

The performance of Ravel's "Don Quichotte a Dulcinee" unfortunately did not fare as well. The music strikes me as rather trite and early Ravel with a resemblance to Bizet that makes for an irritating fluctuation between romanticism and impressionism. Mr. Warren's temperament did not really make it possbile to do justice to these songs, though I have a feeling the music itself was in this case more responsible for its failure than the performer.

Mr. Warren finished his program with a series of light songs which were with the exception of an exaggerated and negatively sentimental song entitled "Tell me O Blue, Blue Sky," all quite delightful. The singer demonstrated his comic acting talent and put the songs across as much with his body's postures as with his voice.

The singer's accompanist, William Sektberg, did his work adequately and played his first solo piece on the program, the heartbreakingly beautiful "Impromptu in G-flat" of Schubert with considerable artistry. The second piano solo, Brahms' "Rhapsody in G-minor" did not come off as well.

At the end of the concert, Mr. Warren seemed satisfied, the audience was giving him a standing ovation, and this critic at least felt that the evening had been a higly successful one.

Dear Editor,

The thing that strikes a foreigner upon his or her arrival on the University Campuses in this country is the College folkways i.e. the social - and private - relationship among these people called College boys and co-eds.

The following is an impression a student from the Orient has got, being alert all the time to find out the sub-currents in modern America's culture.

We have been told that America is not Elvis Presley and Hollywood, but one finds on the University campuses in this country part of that internationally-famed Hollywood and Elvis Presley.

The question on the Campus for the most part is: How to get; 1—a Chevi 2—a girl ora boy 3—football ticket 4—Johnny Mathis record 5—New York suit or dress and ad infinitum . . .

LABOR

After successfully consumating a contract with Chrysler and Ford, Walter Reuther called a general United Auto Workers strike against General Motors which took effect during this week.

To The U.N.

James Reston

(The following is reprinted from Sunday's New York Times.)

Dear Mr. Hammarskjold: I wish to bring to the attention of the Thirteenth General Assembly of the United Nations, now in session, a cruel and serious act of aggression. I do so under Articles 1, 14 and 99 of the U. N. charter.

On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 1, 1958, in the City of Milwaukee U. S. A., an armed band representing that city carried out a preliminary attack on an innocent and peace-loving group of citizens from the City of New York.

On Thursday afternoon, Oct. 2, 1958, a second attack of immense ferocity was launced in the same vicinity, and this was immediately followed by an open invasion of New York itself.

Accordingly, I have been instructed by the leader of the defenders, Prime Minister Charles Dillon Stengel, to bring these alarming events to the attention of the United Nations.

Article 1 of the United Nations Charter states that it is the purpose of the U. N. to "take effective measures" for "the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace."

Article 14 states: "The General Assembly may recommend measures for the peaceful adjustment any situation, regardless of origin, which it deems likely to impair the general welfare."

Article 99 authorizes the Secretary General to bring to the attention of the United Nations "any matter which in his opinion may threaten the maintenance of peace and security."

The facts in this case are not in dispute. The aggressors have clearly indulged in the "threat and use of force," in direct opposition to the principles of the Charter.

No "effective measures" have been taken for the "suppression" of the aggression. The "general welfare" has obviously been "impaired," and a "peaceful adjustment" of the situation is now urgent.

I draw your attention to the preamble of the Charter, which commits the U. N. "to establish conditions under which justice * * can be maintained" and "to ensure that armed force shall not be used save in the common interest."

In the light of all these factors, Mr. Secretary General, we urge your intervention and support.

Your Respectfully, etc.

P. S. Please Hurry.

From Mr. Hammarskjold
FROM MR. HAMMARSKJOLD
To Mr. James Reston,
Yankee Stadium,
New York, N. Y.
Dear Mr. Reston:

I have your letter of Oct. 3 and sympathize with your problem. However, I must ask you to consider the following:

1. It is clear that a violent act of aggression has taken place, and that aggressors have been unusually brutal in their attacks, but I draw your attention to Para. graph 7, Article 2 of the Charter. It says, and I quote,

"Nothing contained in the present Charter shall authorize the United Nations to intervene in matters which are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of any state * * * ." In my judgment, this is a national dispute, despite popular references to the so-called "world series."

2. Furthermore, upon investigation, I find on behalf of the United Nations that Mr. Stengel and is defenders have not availed themselves of the opportunities of Article 51 of the Carter.

This states that, in the event of an armed attack, nothing shall impair "the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense." The United Nations cannot find any evidence that Stengel exercised any defense at all, individual or collective.

3. Finally, it is not the duty of the United Nations to maintain the status quo. The incident in Milwaukee, though sad, is familiar. Great empires rise and fall. By a combination of great vitality and skill, they reach the top by conquest, and are in turn challenged and brought down, usually by barbarians from the West.

This is what happened to Rome and Athens, and is now apparently happening to New York. It is an ancient tale, and I am sorry. But I have too many problems getting Foster Dulles out of trouble in Quemoy to worry about Stengel in the Bronx

Faithfully yours, etc

P S.: Tell Casey nice going this afternoon.

Pip's Quips

Pringle Pipkin

When the Editor says there is nothing inherently wrong with fraternities, I agree with him. However, during his recent series on fraternities the Editor has at times been misleading as to just what the facts are.

He wrote in Saturday's paper "moderate forms of hazing go on, such as being driven off the campus and left to one's way back or all night scavenger hunts."

I do not recall having heard of any all night scavenger hunts and have never been on one. As far as rides are concerned, this has happened occasionally, but it has not had the sanction of the IFC and it is an unusual occurrence.

Some of the national conventions of the fraternities have passed rules forbidding such rides.

There is no brother whose responsibility it is to encourage each pledge to run for an office. However, it is not unnatural for one's frineds to encourage him to run for an office.

The electorate still has the power of voting, and if they feel that candidate's motives are insincere or that he does not have an adequate program, they do not have to elect him.

If a rushee is cut only after a two minute conversation, then it is certainly a rare exception. If a rushee had 20 houses to visit, he could spend about 15 minutes at each house and still have time to go to all the houses during the first two days of rush.

Enough concerning facts.

It is not unusual that pledges should not be accepted on an equal footing with the initiated members. There are few organizations that do not have some training period before full membership status is assumed.

The fraternities stress class unity. Unity of the pledge class provides a unified fraternity.

That the individual should have to make some concessions to the fraternity is not unreasonable. Through unity an organization is able to be something more than simply the sums of its parts.

If an individual does not wish to make any concessions, he does not have to join a fraternity. The fraternity ultimately does for or to the individual whatever he wants.

With some minor compromises on less important issues, the individual can maintain his character and integrity. Some people naturally gravitate towards a group.

What treatment would the fraternities receive if they maintain no study halls. No doubt it would be said they had no regard of academic standards.

As the situation presently exists the fraternities have compulsory study halls which last, generally speaking, from two to three hours long, four nights a week.

It is better that the rushee be trained in some study habits than none at all. The pledge can certainly study at other times.

Rush will always be conducted under stilted conditions. Regardless of the time of rush, both the rushees and the active members will feel on the spot. The only way to get to know a person well is to live with him several years.

If rush is deferred six months, the fraternities will thenceforth be in economical difficulties. Each year the fraternity's overhead will fluctuate.

If the fraternity is run on the basis of number of men left after graduation, then the facilities will be sorely taxed when the new pledge class enters the fraternity.

If the pledge class is counted, then the overhead will be high when there is no pledge class the cost of belonging to a fraternity will go up. Fewer men will be able to afford it.

I think the Editor is correct in his general assumption that the fraternities can be improved and that fraternities should not insist on absolute conformity.

Fraternities should encourage individuals to do their best. Ultimately it is the individual rather than the institution which determines his final course.

A LETTER

EDITOR:

I was truly surprised to read in last Saturday's Daily Tar Heel that the Office of Student Affairs has in the past prepared for the use of the fraternities a list of students in which the names of Jewish students were preceded by the letter "J".

In 1937 or 1938 I—then a citizen of Germany living in Turkey—was called to the German Embassy, and a big red "J" was stamped into my passport in front of my name. I was informed that this was done merely for the purpose of "identification." Many people with such "J's" in their passports or identification cards were, if the Nazis could lay hands on them, subsequently taken into what was called "protective custody." This was allegedly done to save them the embarrassment of having to face unpleasant reactions from the people.

I note with considerable satisfaction that next year no "J" will be affixed, because no religious preference cards will be available. This indicates a very commendable sensitiveness to the dangers inherent in labelling anyone by a "J", or any other symbol, even if only to "spare him embarrassment."

by college hall

From the narrow lapels, and natural shoulders to the Ivy Olive color, "Town and Country" wears a look of importance at the office . . . a look of the casual "Country Gentleman" after dark. It's natural, too, that College Hall, with its years of "natural model" experience and exceptional fashion skill, should create this "Town & Country" suit at a price that belies its expensive "Country Gentleman" look! Tweed, flannel, Shetlands, gabardine, worsteds and worsted cheviots.

Deficit Is Expected In Student Finances

Student government went in the hole $1,500 last year and expects another deficit this year, according to Charlie Gray, student body treasurer.

The amount of deficit of 1958-59 budget, according to Gray and President Don Furtado, depends upon: whether or not each organization provided for in the student activities fund spends its full allotment, what supplementary appropriations are made, and what the enrollment is.

The student activities fund is made up of a block fee of $9 a semester from each student. Thus the enrollment would have a great effect on the budget which was prepared last spring before any enrollment fifgure for this year was definite.

Gray issued a report yesterday on last year's budget, drawing special attention to an anticipated deficit at the end of this scholastic year.

In explaining why student government operated on a deficit last year and expects to do so again this year, Gray said the total amount of income has been and will be over-estimated.

Last year, for example, the actual income was $5,000 less than the 1957-58 budget called for. The total income turned out to be $115,361.91.

If the total estimated income has been received, the 1957-58 budget would have ended $3,000 ahead.

The anticipated income for 1958-59 is $121,000, Gray said. But he indicated that is already the possibility this figure was over-estimated by the budget committee last spring.

When the outlook last spring indicated the 1957-58 budget would end up with a deficit and the budget this year would be likewise, appropriation cuts were made, Gray said.

For example, Student Legislature is allowed this year the smallest unappropriated balance it has had in many years. Legislature has been appropriated $2,000, in contrast to the $6,130 in 1957-58.

Concerning these two figures, Gray said it is evident the unappropriated balance will be surpassed, since Legislature spent $5,652.15.

Gray urged moderation by all student supported organizations saying, "try, insofar as possible, to avoid unnecessary and excessive spending." He reminded these groups that exceeding their appropriations is tn Honor Council violation.

Y Conference Participants Are Asked To Register

YMCA President Bill Sugg today urged anyone planning to participate in the forthcoming Y Fall Conference to register at the Y offices today or tomorrow.

Dr. Waldo Beach will deliver the keynote addresses. The overnight conference will also see several discussion and study groups concerned with evaluating Dr. Beach's new book, "Conscience On Campus."

Approximately 60-65 N. C. State and UNC students are slated to take part in tht overnight gathering.

"This will mark one of the most prominent examples of cooperation between the brother institutions and will also afford a good opportunity for students to hear Dr. Beach, one of the nation's noted speakers on campus ethics," Sugg said.

Weimar Jones To Be Featured At Press Club

The first monthly meeting of the UNC Press Club tonight at 7:30 will feature Weimar Jones, editor of the Franklin Press.

The meeting will be held at the home of Dean and Mrs. Norval Neil Luxon, 27 Mt. Bolus Rd.

Jones recently figured in the news when he criticized newspapers for playing down the illness of Representative George Shuford of Asheville during the Democratic primary in the 12th District.

His topic for the evening will be "The Weekly Newspaper," although he has agreed to answer questions pertaining to the above mentioned controversy.

Jones has been editor of Franklin Press, a North Carolina weekly, for over 10 years. During 1953-54, he was an instructor in the Journalism School here.

All journalism and pre-journalism students are eligible to join the Press Club.

Any student needing a ride to the meeting should meet at Bynum Hall by 7:15 tonight.

POPE PIUS XII
. . . died yesterday

Pope Pius XII Dies At Palace At Age Of 82

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP)—Pope Pius XII died today at his summer palace.

He had lingered and even rallied for a time after a cerebral stroke Monday morning. He suffered a second stroke yesterday.

He was 82.

Hope was given up last night for the head of the Roman Catholic Church.

Early this morning a mass for the dying was celebrated in the chapel adjoining his death chamber and Romans were told to stand by for the fateful news.

The Vatican radio said death occurred at 3:52 a.m. (9:52 p.m. EST Wednesday).

His physicians hours before had abandoned hope, after the Pope suffered a second stroke and his heart began failing.

A mournful mass for the dying was celebrated in a chapel next to the sickroom in the papal summer palace here. The mass, begun, at 12:30 a.m., was celebrated by Msgr. Domenico Tardini, pro-secretary of state at the Vatican.

At the end of the mass, broadcast so that the Pope's fellow Romans could hear it, the Vatican Radio called for prayers.

Individual Dormitory Judicials Proposed

The IDC last night postponed consideration on a revision of the entire dormitory judicial structure until next week.

In other action, the IDC passed a resolution calling for visiting agreements on weekends, and announced that a dance jointly sponsored by GMAB will be held Saturday night at 9 p.m. in Cobb basement.

The new court proposal has as its primary cornerstone the introduction of dormitory courts in each dorm.

DORM COURTS

Under this system, any violation of dormitory rules would be handled by the individual dormitory courts with the exception of violators who are from other dormitories, and cases in which the violator is a dormitory officer.

The vice-president of this dormitory would be the chairman of the court, and the treasurer and president would be members. The secretary would serve as a clerk of court.

Incorported into the proposal would be a jury trial system in which each person in the dormitory would be liable for jury duty. There would be three men on each jury, and the jury would serve for a full night's session.

JURY SYSTEM

The jurors would be selected by the court from a list of all dormitory residents. The prosecuting attorney, the IDC representative in each dormitory, and the defendant have the right to object to the presence of any member on the jury. The chairman of the court could rule on the validity of the objection to any juror.

The juror would determine the Margaret Starnes plays his daughter, and John Sneden is the peddler. The scene is leading up to Hakim's song "It's a Scandal! It's an outrage!"

Furtado Will Address Legislature's Opening

By STAN FISHER

Student Body President Don Furtado will address the Student Legislature tonight as it conducts its first meeting of the fall term.

The meeting will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Phi Hall of fourth floor New East building.

Charlie Grey, treasurer of the student body, will present a Treasury report. Also slated to address the solons will be Attorney General Dick Robinson and Ed Levy who will speak on the National Student Assn.

Several bills are expected to be introduced tonight as the legislature gets started on what is expected to b a busy year. Bills expected to be presented include:

(1) Formal introduction of a bill to revise the election laws. This will probably include suggestions as to the rezoning of campus voting

Frosh Forum To Be Run 'Along Cultural Lines'

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

Freshmen coed and men students crowded an upstairs dining room in Lenoir Hall for the opening session of Freshman Forum Tuesday night.

Jim Jordan, program leader, explained the forum would be run "along cultural lines." "You will be exposed to a lot of things you have not been exposed to before," he said.

The five week program, sponsored by the YM-YWCA, is to be concluded with a three day trip to New York City on Nov. 6. During the visit the group will see the United Nations, the New York Museum of Modern Art, Carnegie Hall and a Broadway play.

The cost of the trip will be $30, including transportation and room, but excluding meals. The program is opened only for freshmen.

Arrangements are being made to excuse the freshmen from classes on Friday, Nov. 7. The deadline for signing up for the trip has been set for October 30.

The four programs preceding the trip to New York will be used to prepare the students for the trip.

Ed Crowe and his jazz combo will provide the program at the next meeting. The meeting will be held at the Episcopal Church Parish House October 16 at 5:30 p.m.

The program of the third week will feature a psychiatrist. Psychological problems on the campus will be discussed.

The following program will feature a short one-act play, "No Exit." The session on the evening of departure to New York will include a discussion of the United Nations.

At the first session Lawrence London and Shields Flynn played flamenco mulsic on guitars. Miss Kack Anthony, accompanied by Miss Ess Bruner with a piano, sang three "blues" songs.

THIRTEEN NEW TWO-WAY BOOTHS INSTALLED

Language Students Soon To Hear Own Voices

By JAMIE HOLMES

UNC students taking conversational language courses will soon be able to hear recordings of their own voice in the language they are studying.

Thirteen new soundproof 2-way booths are being installed in the Conversational Language Laboratory in Saunders Hall. When completed these booths will not only enable students to listen to recorded tapes of the language they are studying but will allow them to repeat what they hear, recording another tape, and then listen to their version of this language.

Eventually, it is hoped, the lab will have a hundred of these booths. The Language Lab is sponsored jointly by the departments of Romance and Germanic languages.

PRESENT SETUP

At the present time students listen through their earphones at long tables which receive the broadcasts from the "control booth" at one end of the lab. Four graduate students maintain this lab from 2-5 Monday thru Friday and 7-10 every evening except Saturday.

Making use of this lab are 2,876 students who are enrolled in some modern foreign language this semester.

LARGEST ENROLLMENT

This year reports Dr. Sterling S. Stoudemire head of they the Department of Romance Languages, the department has the largest enrollment in its entire history with the exception of 1948-49. During those years the campus student body was substantially larger than it is now. Of the 2,326 students in this department 1,225 are taking either Spanish or Portuguese and 1,101 are taking French or Italian. These students are taught by 47 teachers and 2 graduate assistants.

"Our Spanish registration," said Dr. Stoudemire, "is fifth in the entire country for any size school. French ranks fifteenth. Our Romance languages graduate division ranks perhaps fourth or fifth in the nation."

An uptrend in the study of modern foreign languages at UNC is definitely observable. In 1952, 1,300 students were taking courses in the Romance Languages Department. By 1954 this number had risen to 1,900. For the past three years the figure has hovered around the 2,300 strata.

"I would especially like to emphasize the importance of our Portuguese program," said Dr. Stoudemire. "Many people consider Portuguese a minor language, not realizing that there are as many Portuguese speaking Brazilians as there are Spanish speaking people in the Western Hemisphere. And the number of Portuguese speaking people in Europe is almost as many as the population of France.

"Our Portuguese program is recognized as perhaps the biggest and best in all the United States. Recently, because of the calibre of this language area at Chapel Hill, we received a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for further application in this field."

When asked if any plans were being made to expand the departmental curriculum Dr. Stoudemire replied: "We are always making changes which we hope are for the better. For example, this year our beginning French classes are being taught in French. We do not believe this will mean that the student will not learn as much about writing and gaining an academic knowledge of that language as he might under the old-fashioned teaching method. And we do believe that he will be able to speak the language much better."

SCHOOL SYSTEM TO HELP

Dr. Stoudemire also believes that present advances in the public school system of North Carolina concerning teaching foreign languages in earlier grades will have long range effects on the University. "In future years we will not have to devote so much effort to French 1, 2, 3, and 4 but can concentrate more on the higher level courses," he said.

Dr. John G. Kunstmann, head of the Department of Germanic Languages, administers twenty-seven courses in German for approximately 500 students. Eleven of these courses are sections of German 1, or Beginning German, with one of these being an "A" course for advanced freshmen. There are two sections of German 2, five of German 3, one of German 3A, two of German 4, and seven miscellaneous courses of one section each. Besides these, the department is offering nine classes for graduate students.

All these various classes are taught by seven full-time professors, assistant professors, and 12 graduate assistants.

RUSSIAN SECTIONS

Russian, which is in the Germanic languages department, is taught in three different sections by Dr. W. W. Arndt. There are two sections of Russian 1 and one section of Russian 160, a course in Russian literature.

According to the University of North Carolina Record, however, "an expanding range of courses in Russian language and literature will be offered to undergraduates and graduate students desiring two enhance their understanding of a historically influential and increasingly vital component of European and World Civilization. The courses offered at present (are) to be supplemented in time by others in the area of linguistics, literature, and a second Slavic language."

WRC Favors Social Rooms Being Open

The Women's Residence Council went on rcord this week as favoring the plan for opening men's social rooms three days a week to coeds.

This plan now awaits approval from the Inter-Dormitory Council and the University administration.

Today, a group of students will meet with Miss Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, dean of women, to iron out plans for a visiting agreement before the matter is brought before the IDC next Wednesday night.

At a meeting Tueslay night, the WRC passed the proposed plans of the Coed Visiting Agreement Committee allowing coeds to visit in the men's dorms.

The committee has recommended that the social rooms in men's dorms be opened to coeds at the following times: Fridays from 6 p.m. to 12 midnight, Saturdays from 2 p.m. to 12 midnight and Sundays from 2 p.m. to 11 p.m.

To insure the upholding of hours and any other rules pertaining to opening the social rooms, a special committee will probably be set up. Violations of any rules will be handled by appropriate councils.

If the plan is approved by the IDC and administration, the social rooms will be open for a one semester trial period.

For coeds from other campuses, the Coed Visiting Agreement Committee has proposed that letters be sent to the various colleges, informing the administration of the special plan for opening social rooms in men's dorm here.

On Clinton

The latest outrage to man's sensibility was perpetrated recently in Clinton, Tenn., when segregationists bombed the high school.

Acts like this are not rational, but more than that they do much to destroy the good will so possible in the race situation if handled properly. The town of Clinton and other parts of Tennessee have started with a constructive approach to integration. They have not overturned segregation overnight, but they have been moving gradually in compliance with the law.

This act of violence, Faubus' massive resistance, and Almond's school closing have done more to hurt the South, than anything that has happened in recent times.

The road to integration is thorny, but the difficulties encumbered are not necessarily so great as these actions make them.

Integration is the law. It is also consistent with American democracy, it is high time southern leadership awakened to this fact.

Quemoy & Matsu

The lull in the firing on Quemoy and Matsu ought to give a chance for some clearer heads to prevail than those who have prevailed up till now.

The fighting lull will give the United States an opportunity to reappraise its Far Eastern policy specifically related to Communist China.

If the United States is willing to deal with Communist China as an entity or if they can persuade Chiang and the nationalists to do so, war may be averted. If not, war is a necessity. If not also, the Chinese Communists will have gained a propaganda advantage by pointing to the United States as warmongering peoples.

Following a policy that was started by a mistake in 1953 is foolhardy. It would be better to admit the mistake of 1953, and retract that error — by getting the troops of Chiang out of the two islands so that the determination of those two islands can be handled by the organization created to solve such problems — the United Nations.

The folly of non-recognition at the present time is becoming increasingly evident. China is more and more assuming the role of leader so that Khruschev went to Peiping to make a statement about the Middle East. Before the cause of the free world is lost, it might be wise if the President of the United States awakened. It would be the best birthday present he could give to the United States.

Neither Black Nor White . . . Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman B. Smith

A political science professor was talking about the atomic submarine. He explained how structural and propulsion modifications permitted the attainment of greater depths for greatly extended periods of time. The next modification will be the addition of underwater-fired guided missiles.

We discussed these mechanisms of death with a fascination. We admired their efficiency; we admired the technology that had built them. Somewhere in the back of my conscience was a tinge of fear, and an uncertainty of the course that lies ahead.

Maybe it all started in some primeval forest when one hairy, stooped, long-armed biped learned he could kill his companion with a sharp stone. As the centuries, milleniums, eons passed by slowly, the descendants of the bipeds became homo sapiens and they became constantly more proficient in the killing of their companions.

The technologists pushed onward with their inventions, the warriers put them to use, and there arose a third group—a difficult group to deal with, a wary group, who sometimes suspected that the inventions of death were approaching the point of being greater than the inventors and users.

The members of this group may have started by gazing at the stars, drawing things on clay and stone, leading the chants around the fire. Sometimes the others held them in respect and believed when they said the fruits of all killing must be evil. Sometimes they were looked upon with derision as dreamers who didn't have the ability to do things. And sometimes many of the gazers and drawers and chanters succumbed to the fascinations of technology, but there were always a few who would not allow their beliefs to die.

* * * *

The scene is Constantinople, capital of the Byzantine Empire. The year is A.D. 673. The city has just successfully withstood a seige by the Arabs. In the market place two men are talking—Fortunatus, an officer of the army, and Theodosius, a priest of the Eastern Church.

FORTUNATUS: We are fortunate, father. We should all be in the hands of the infidels now, had it not been for the Greek Fire. Our soldiers poured it from troughs and shot it out with their crossbows; quickly routing every one of the Arabs, who were many times the number of our own men.

THEODOSIUS: Truly, it is a remarkable weapon. I cannot help but wonder if it was necessary to kill so many. I had to turn away as I looked down from the walls after the seige.

FORTUNATUS: With Greek Fire we can capture their cities. We can conquer all the East, and bring back the glories of the old days. We can spread our magnificent civilization to all lands. Father, you can do as the Gospel says, and go into all the world . . .

THEODOSIUS: But what if the Arabs learn how to mix the fire? They say it is really simple—sulpher, tallow, resin . . .

FORTUNATUS: Hush! There may be spies in the square. Of course, they will all be executed in a few days—as soon as the general can round them up. He is not taking chances; anyone we are the least bit suspicious about will be put to death. Then how can the secret spread?

THEODOSIUS: Well, that seems brutal to me. And something else disturbs me. They say that Greek Fire is so inflammable and so hard to extinguish that Constantinople could easily be consumed by it if there is an accident. And some of our own soldiers were poisoned by the fumes and others were charred beyond recognition during the seige.

FORTUNATUS: That is frightening, father, but one must take chances in defending the Empire. Oh, only to be at the head of my company conqiering some infidel city!

THEODOSIUS: But, that is not right. You must consider these things . . .

FORTUNATUS: I hear the trumpet. We have to muster now.

* * * *

The stone, the Greek Fire, the sword, the crossbow, the gunpowder . . . the technological triumphs of this age are the nuclear blast and the vehicles for its delivery. Is this greater than we are, will we obey the trumpet? Or will a stargazer or a Theodosius have time to think about it and give us another alternative?

Out Of Joint

March Wind

I didn't do it! So help me, I've got an alibi.

I refer of course to the scatiological desecration of a poor little defenseless telephone booth in the library. Since this affair has already been widely reported in the Daily Tar Heel it seems only logical to suppose that I will not be accused of "bad taste" if I discuss the incident from my own peculiar view point.

To begin with, let us note the perfidious behavior of our beloved editor. At least once a week Curtis Gans beats his typewriter into a nervous breakdown as he urges the student body to cast off the shackles of sterile, big business-oriented conformity in favor of FREEDOM. So some student (or students) took Gans at his word; they struck an immortal blow for FREEDOM, for THE AMERICAN WAY, for INDIVIDUALISM, for PRIVATE ENTERPRISE.

And how does Gans respond? He comes on like gangbusters with an editorial that accuses this brave student (or students) of delinquency. Oh, the perfidy of it all! Oh, Gans, how could you sell out these heroic rebels?

We use the word "rebel" advisedly. This was not a thoughtless act; this was no harum-scarum prank. This was a deliberate act of rebellion. This supreme example of contempt was the first blow of the revolution! (I remember once in service how a young GI used the general's overcoat pocket for a similar gesture of defiance. We were all restricted to the base for a week while CID agents flew in from Washington to uncover the subversive.)

Ah, well . . . . The point you see is that more than the phones on this campus are goofed. The physical plant should have been condemned by the building inspectors a hundred years ago. All this ivy is quaint as hell, but everytime Dean Godfrey walks down the corridor the tremor is recorded on seismographs at Cal Tech.

And the professors! Oi, the professors! They are dandy fellows (each and EVERY one), and let us all hope ever-so-earnestly that they survive the cold winter ahead. Jim Tatum may have laid in a good supply of Kentucky cough syrup, but I doubt if any of the scholars have.

This was the context in which some anonymous student (or students) chose to voice an expressive and distinctive and ingenious protest. In all seriousness, I would like to propose that our Student Government erect a placque on the exact spot to commemorate the great event.

Earlier in this column I made mention of one each Curtis Gans, boy editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Since my many friends (all three of them) have repeatedly asked me questions about Mr. Gans I thought perhaps the answers would be of general interest.

Is Gans smart? Yes, disgustingly so.

Is Gans honest? Yes, and he rubs it in your face.

Is Gans good looking? His blind mother thinks so.

Is Gans a good editor? Once in a while he is a great editor; sometimes he is a good editor; usually he is an adequate editor; every Thursday at 4 o'clock he goofs hideously.

Is Gans a nice guy? No, but then as Leo Durocher once said: "Nice guys finish last."

Next week we return to John Foster Dulles, Martin Luther King, Mao-tse Tung and other assorted inhabitants of the international menagerie. Till then, this week's March Wind Award for Distinguished Public Service goes to Student X for his "contribution" to the telephone booth at Wilson Library.

On Atomic Testing

Norman Cousins

A hair-raising situation now exists in which a small group of men who are not part of the elective process of government have nevertheless assumed unprecedented powers for shaping national policy outside their designated functions.

The group is the Atomic Energy Commission. It is the only agency of government which can embark on programs that affect and even dominate economic policy, military policy, and foreign policy. It is the only agency of government which can decide how much it is willing to let the American people know about its operations. It is the only agency of government that can evaluate its own performance, exempt itself from the consequences of its own errors, and shield these errors from public scrutiny.

Some of the implications of these powers have been brught into focus as the result of a recent incident.

First, some background. The danger of a runaway nuclear arms race culminating in continental explosions is no longer a remote one. Momentum has a way of making its own decisions. The nuclear arsenals now contain military requirements. The use of these weapons will produce not victory but mutual suicide. The situation is similar to what would happen if occupants of the same building decided to wage war against one another by setting fire to the building after sealing themselves in. If victory in the contest between democracy and Communism is to be found, therefore, it will have to be outside a nuclear war.

Devising a policy that can achieve both peace and freedom is the most important and most complicated business in the world. Yet a start must be made somewhere. It makes sense to expect that such a start should be in the field of arms control. Not that arms control by itself will give us enduring peace. Nothing short of effective world law can create a basis for enduring peace. But arms control can at least remove some of the fuse points of a nuclear arms race. And one good place to begin on any arms control program is with a ban on further nuclear test explosions.

The Atomic Energy Commission, which manufactures and tests the nuclear explosives, has been opposed to any ban on testing and, for that matter, to any agreement on nuclear arms control. The AEC has taken the flat position that such agreements are unenforceable. It would be difficult and perhaps impossible, spokesmen for the AEC have declared, to detect nuclear explosions if the Soviet were intent on keeping them secret. By way of proving this point, the AEC pointed to its own underground nuclear test experiment recently conducted in Nevada. Despite the devastating underground effects, the explosion could not be detected at a distance greater than 235 miles, the AEC officially announced.

If this were true, then the hope for nuclear arms control would be a dim one indeed. But Congressional initiative established that the AEC statement is not true and indeed never was. The Nevada underground explosion was actually detected more than two thousand miles away, and the AEC was so informed at the time.

Confronted with the actual evidence that it had falsified vital information, the AEC said that the error was "inadvertent." What members of the AEC did not explain, however, was why they had used information to support a public position even though the information was false. Even after the AEC apparently knew that the underground test had been detected at great distances, it continued to tell news commentators and television producrs that underground tests could be carried out secretly.

Errors, inadvertent or otherwise, are understandable. What is completely irresponsible and indeed reprehensible, however, is the use of false information in connection with the advocacy of national policy. For the AEC did not merely circulate a report it knew to be false. It used that false report as the basis for an attempt to win the American public opinion over to its own point of view.

Equally serious is the fact that the AEC has been using its authority and influence to block any program for world control over nuclear weapons. And Dr. Edward Teller who is prominently associated with the Atomic Energy Commission, has been attempting to reassure the American people that nuclear testing can go on indefinitely without danger — a proposition that the AEC's own reports do not support.

What is involved here is not merely a matter of public confidence in a government agency. What is involved here are real and specific issues concerned with the safety of life on earth. Circumstances have contrived to make of the Atomic Energy Commission one of the most powerful agencies in our history. We should no longer delay bringing the AEC into the same framework of checks and balances within which the rest of the government has to operate. Certainly, a separate agency should be charged with the responsibility for evaluating the results of nuclear testing, whether with respect to radioactive fallout or the question of detectability.

The fact that men of science are connected with AEC is not by itself sufficient assurance that wisdom and sanity will prevail. The theory on which this government depends less on good men than upon good laws. Indeed, the easiest way for good men to turn bad is to give them a privileged position where their power can be used beyond their own designated functions.

Nuclear bombs are the quintessence of raw power in the modern world. They call for the severest controls — not only over the bombs themselves, but over the men who have the authority to make them.

On Travel

Sidney Dakar

It is said that one learns much while traveling in foreign lands. It has been my experience that I have learned very little objective information while in foreign lands. The encyclopedia is much better and cheaper source of information as such.

Travel has a much more important aspect. We come face to face with people who are intelligent and highly civilized, we discover that many of their customs and beliefs are very different from ours. Consciously or unconsciously, we are forced to reexamine our beliefs which we have always thought were the only "right" ones.

It goes without saying that after seeing these people in various countries living very well adjusted lives by customs we think are unlawful, or at least immoral, that we can't deny the fact that some of our customs cause more heart-ache than they do happiness and well being. Once we have thought of these matterts, all but the most narrow-minded will become much more tolerant to new ideas from people back home.

Being able to accept new ideas, or at least give them an intelligent consideration, is the mark of an educated man. An educated man doesn't have to be so intelligent in the senst of having a high IQ. An educated man is able to consider and evaluate the ideas of other people and use them to raise himself over the masses.

This sounds simple, but the uneducated man never seems to be able to consider all sides of an issue. He picks out the viewpoints which he already holds and goes blissfully on through life — more convenienced that ever that only he is "right."

On Rush

P. W. Carlton

Contrary to popular opinion, rush week is not a cacophony of conversation and punch, hand shaking and blackballs. Rather it is a time for meeting new friends in a congenial atmosphere, albeit somewhat hurriedly.

My experience with rush was most rewarding. On the first day, having received four invitations and a ticket to the '55 Duke UNC game in my envelope, I set out, neatly starched and well dressed in golf shoes, bermuda shorts, London Smog raincoat, and tie. Oh yes, I had on a short also, a green one with "Vive Les Femmes" stenciled across the front. (I knew this would impress the fraternity men.) I approached Bumma Cig and was immediately greeted by two jovial brothers who rattled off questions at machine gun speed and turned me over to a receiving line composed of many brothers and a gorilla. (I think the gorilla was a pledge from Africa) Man, I went through that house rapidly. Someone shoved a cup of punk or punch or something in my hand, but before I could drink it someone else snatched it out of my hand and suddenly I was outside with a return invite clutched in my hot little hand. This continued at all the houses, ad infinitum ad nauseum.

The second night I visited Hugga Bug first and got real interested in the way those fellows can say so much in a single breath. For instance: "My name's Sam Fridderstratwhat'syourswhereyoufromwhat'syourmajordoyouplaysportsseeyouaround." Fascinating. I had tears in my eyes as the brothers pinned my name card on my chest. I had forgotten to wear my shirt this time. Over at Signa Phi Nothing one of the brothers took me around the house and showed me all the facilities. I had an odd experience, though. I was peering down the laundry chute and he accidently nudged me so that I lost my balance and went down with a roar. I emerged in the basement and made my exit by the back door, where a fellow told me I had been blackballed, or something like that.

As I approached Bumma Sig I saw two fellows fall from a second story window into a handy rose bush. Upon inquiry I discovered that they had been given the ax and were just leaving. I entered the house, snapping on my cheshire grin and making pump handle movements with my right arm. All went well until I was ushered into the trophy room. Suddenly a trap door opened beneath my feet and I plummeted to the cellar. Stunned, I lay there until joined by two more equally startled unfortunates. Finally we arose and hobbled out, they to the doctor, I to Tappa Keg. (I mean to that particular fraternity.)

I lasted at Tappa Keg for a good while and figured they really liked me. When I told them Daddy is a bootlegger, though, they looked a little unhappy. I really doubt if it made any difference to them. Nor do I think they resented the fact that I keep a pet goat in my room and that I wear the same pair of socks every day. (After all, Aunt Bertha gave them to me.) I'm a clean enough liver-take a bath every Christmas whether I need it or not. Maybe that wasn't the issue at all. It could be that they didn't have room for my fossil collection, 5,000 pounds of limestone embedded material, and my 27 foot Pinus taeda, the gift of an old friend. So I didn't pledge a maternity, but I understand I really depressed them.

In truth, rush is an interesting and enjoyable experience. The men involved are of a fine calibre and of the type the rushee will be proud to associate with. It is my opinion that all students should avail themselves of their privilege and go through rush week at least once. They won't regret it.

Letter From Olympus

Memorial Hall never looked better, especially filled with students as it was at the Leonard Warren concert Monday night. The complete replacement of the old benches by the new seats, the extremely good acoustics, and the new arrangement with the Chapel Hill Concert Series allowing university students to sit in the balcony only by showing their identification cards all usher out the traditional concept of poor studentry. As we stood applauding Mr. Warren after the third encore, we realized that concerts in Chapel Hill are unique. There exists a personal and cooperative relationship between the artist and audience that is uncommon anywhere else, and that transforms an excellent evening in to a memorable experience.

Optimistic columns that aim at encouraging immature students to individual growth are rarely successful. This column will never be optimistic. We will strive to report aspects of life not mentioned elsewhere, we will be creatively cynical, iconoclastic and thoroughly dogmatic in our commentaries. We will never attempt to displace the poker table or Playboy, we plan to co-exist with the IFC, and we will explain our views with childlike simplicity.

Now that fraternity rush has lost it's annual grip on campus intellect, perhaps we can turn to more important matters. Although it is possible to graduate from this university with memories and a senior class ring, it is not advisable. Knowledge is important also. The degree certifies the number of hours spent in class, not what is gained from the class. The personal application of classroom knowledge is a subtle, yet crucial, issue. It has nothing to do with marks. But a well spent college career presupposes an ambition to lead a full and meaningful life, and the drive to utilize the classroom in this pursuit. And the time to realize this is not in the senior year.—C.L.

University Day Significance Is Emphasized

"An opportunity to see reenacted the birth of our great institution" is Student Body President Don Furtado's description of University Day ceremonies, which will be held Saturday morning at 11 o'clock on the South side of South Building.

Furtado said yesterday he would like to see as many students as possible turn out Saturday for "an enjoyable hour with the memories and traditions of UNC."

The UNC administration has emphasized the significance of University Day by calling off classes at 10:50 Saturday morning.

The ceremonies will begin at 11 o'clock on the steps of South Building, or in Memorial Hall in case of rain.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will lead the assembly. Music will be provided by the Men's Glee Club and the UNC Band.

Special guests at the event will be members of the University's Board of Trustees and retired faculty members.

The doors to the University were actually opened on Feb. 12, 1795, although its physical beginning is dated to 1793.

Yanks Win 4-3

McDougald's 10th inning home run ruined a magnificent pitching effort by stout-hearted Warren Spahn today as a 4-3 Yankee victory sent the New York-Milwaukee World Series into a seventh game.

Through nine torturous innings the 37-year-old Milwaukee southpaw, working with only two days rest, dueled with three different Yankee pitchers only to lose in the 10th. Singles by Elston Howard and Yogi Berra finished him off and the Yanks added the all-important extra run on Bill Skowron's single off relief man Don McMahon.

Ryne Duren, Casey Stengel's flame-thrower who followed Whitey Ford and Art Ditmar to the mound, fired his blinding fast ball past the Braves from the sixth to the tenth when he suddenly lost his stuff. The big fellow with the thick glasses struck out the side in the sixth and ninth, fanning eight in 4 2/3 innings before he faltered wtih two out in the 10th.

Johnny Logan, who had walked and taken second unmolested while Duren wound up making Eddie Mathews his eighth strikeout victim, scored when Hank Aaron singled.

Tatum, Giese Meet Again

Two former coaching colleagues who will be meeting each other as rivals for the third time this weekend—South Carolina's Warren Giese and North Carolina's Jim Tatum—have separate opinions on some aspects of football, but they are in 100 per cent agreement on at least one thing.

Both Giese and Tatum, whose teams meet Saturday afternoon at Chapel Hill, N. C., consider top-notch tackles essential in the production of a good team. Much of the success of the great Maryland teams, when Tatum was head coach and Giese at top assistant, was contributed to the presence of great tackles.

Giese's Gamecocks of this season have pulled upsets over Duke and Georgia while losing only to Army thus far, and the youthful coach has cited good tackle play as highly significant in the successes.

"On the drive that led to our third touchdown, which sewed up the Georgia game, our offensive tackle play was especially valuable," Giese pointed out. "Most of our yardage was gained over the positions."

Both Tatum and Giese like to point out the defensive responsibility of the tackles.

LINE STRONG

South Carolina has been blessed thus far with two sets of fine performers at the positions—Don Rogers and Ed Pitts on the first unit, and Bill Jerry and John Kompara on the second.

"Against Georgia we were able to get a big boost by sending in two fresh tackles—Kirk Phares and Sammy Fewell—late in the game, and they came through in fine fashion," Giese adds.

Woodard Elected Murals Chief

Paul Woodard was elected president of the joint intramural council Monday night. Backing him up are Pearce Weaver as vice president and Tom Cordle secretary. All three divisions of the intramural council took part in the election of the joint officers.

After the election of the joint council each division broke down into its own individual meeteing to elect their division leaders. In the fraternity division Dave Laughlin was elected chairman, Henry Harriss vice chairman and Bill Ott secretary. The dormitory division elected as their chairman Ray Bagwell. He is to be aided by Dave Caraker at vice chairman, and Mickey Nelson secretary. The graduate division postponed their elections until another meeting.

During the meeting Coach Walter Rabb and Tom Johnson discussed the point system and the different trophies that were to be presented during the year. Two of the most important trophies are the Walter Rabb trophy for the individual collecting the most points, and the Lewis plaque to be awarded to the most deserving manager. Coach Rabb stated that they had spent a total of $1900 on trophies.

UNC Was Born 165 Years Ago On Oct. Day

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

On an October day, 165 years ago, the cornerstone of Old East was laid and the first state supported university in the United States, the University of North Carolina, came into being.

The traditional celebration of the anniversary of the event will take place on the steps of South Building at 10:50 a.m. Saturday. Students, faculty, administrative personnel and visitors to the campus will attend the pagaent.

The Carolina Playmakers, the UNC Band and the Men's Glee Club will take part in the celebration which will end with a procession to Davie Poplar where Gen. William R. Davie is said to have designated the site of the University.

Tradition, which governs events on University Day, has dictated that there will be no rain. However, if the weatherman doesn't believe in tradition, the ceremony will also be followed.

Although the pageant is largely a reenactment of the laying of the Old East cornerstone, several thousand things have been added to the campus since the event actually took place in 1793. It is difficult to imagine, but then there was no Y Court, no Old Well, no library, no parking problems, no traditions — in fact, for two years, there were no students.

Therefore, the University will not only be celebrating that which happened in 1793, but its growth and development of the thousands of students who have passed through its gates since that time.

Visiting Agreement For Coeds Is Okayed By Administration; Next Move Is Vote Of Dorms

Social Room Facilities Must Be Adequate

By ANN FRYE

Coeds will soon be able to visit in social rooms of the men's dorms on weekends. Only a few technicialities remain.

Administration approval came yesterday when Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, and Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, okayed the Coed Visiting Agreement.

Earlier this week both the Women's Residence Council and the Inter-Dormitory Council approved the visiting agreement.

Now at least two steps remain before coeds may visit the social rooms: each dormitory must take a vote as to whether it wants to open the social room and the physical facilities must be deemed adequate.

The Coed Visiting Agreement Committee, which drew up the plans for opening social rooms, will soon distribute 1,500 copies of the agreement to boys in the dorms.

VOTE NEXT WEEK

A meeting to discuss the agreement will be held in the men's dorms next week and then a vote will be taken.

A special committee, the Visiting Board, will examine the facilities of each dorm and decided whether they are adequate for opening social rooms.

Those dorms ruled to have inadequate facilities will be aided in bettering them.

Only three men's dorms are not suitable for having social rooms for visiting coeds, according to the Visiting Agreement Committee. These are: Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, Old East and Old West.

The following days and times have been approved for opening the social rooms to coeds: Fridays from 6 p.m. to 12 midnight; Saturdays from 2 p.m. to 12 midnight and Sundays from 2 p.m. to 11 p.m

Trustee Group Begins Annual Visit Today

Student government officers will meet with the Visiting Committee of the University Board of Trustees this afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock.

The annual fall visit of this committee will be all day today and through tomorrow, including the UNC-South Carolina football game.

When student government officers meet with the committee, they will bring up such issues as: housing, a new student union, faculty leaves and salaries.

Luncheon today a 1 p.m. in the Carolina Inn Pine Room will begin the stay of the Visiting Committee.

From 2:30 to 4 this afternoon, they meet with the University administrative officers.

In the half hour from 5 to 5:30, individual appointments with students and faculty members will be scheduled.

Tomorrow the Board will again meet with University officers after which the will attend the University Day ceremonies at South building.

At noon they will be guests at a luncheon in Morehead building.

Climaxing the week-end will be the football game between UNC and the University of South Carolina.

Conference Main Feature To Be Dr. Waldo Beach

By BEN TAYLOR

Dr. Waldo Beach should feel very much at home this weekend when he speaks at Quaker Lake.

If the State-UNC YM-YWCA Fall Conference itenerary runs true to form, he will find himself the main attraction in what promises to be a lively discussion of Southern campus problems.

His record of public speaking makes him solidly equal to the task.

PROBLEMS EVALUATION

Now Professor of Christian Ethics at Duke Divinity School, Dr. Beach and his new book, "Conscience On Campus," are scheduled to provide some 60 students from State and UNC with a thorough evaluation of the problems peculiar to college students in the South.

The overnight conference will be held at Quaker Lake, just south of Greensboro. Dr. Beach is scheduled to speak at 7:15 Saturday evening and again at 2:00 Sunday afternoon.

A native of Middletown, Conn., the 42-year old author-educator is a graduate of Wesleyan University, class of '37, and holds a B. A. from the Methodist school. By 1944, he had received his B. D. and Ph. D. from Yale Divinity School.

Following his formal education, Dr. Beach taught at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, where he was Associate Professor and College Pastor from 1942-46.

He arrived on the Duke campus in 1946 and has been there since, serving as Professor of Christian Ethics in Duke Divinity School. Since his arrival, he has contributed to numerous religious publications and authored and co-authored several books.

A number of his articles have been printed in such widely read ecclesiastical works as "Christianity and Crisis," "Religion in Life," and "The Intercollegian."

Dr. Beach's new book, "Conscience on Campus", is, according to YMCA President Bill Sugg, "a thorough look into many of the ethical problems of college students throughout the country and an attempt to out line some paths to improving sandards of honesty and ethics on campuses.

Legislature To Consider Elections Law Revision

By STAN FISHER

An omnibus Election Law revision bill was introduced in the Student Legislature last night by Dave Biren. Consideration of this bill was postponed for two weeks to give the Ways and Means Committee adequate time for changes.

The Legislature also passed under special orders, a bill creating an ex-officio member of the Board of Directors of the Chapel Hill Merchants Assn.

The bill, introduced by Bill Porter (SP), provides that the associate director be appointed by the Student Body President as soon as practicable. The associate director would keep the Student Body President and the students informed as to the plans and actions of the merchant's association.

Other proposed legislation introduced last night included:

(1) A bill to appropriate $620 for the purchasing of four typewriters for the Yackety Yack.

(2) A proposal to establish a student government publication by the name of Playbill. Such a publication would maintain a regular advertising constituency, a regular format for publication, and a running calender of programs open to the university population.

(3) A bill to establish a definite policy for the publishing of the Yackety Yack by student government and to appropriate the funds necessary for the enactment of this policy.

(4) A proposal to establish an office of filing clerk of the Student Legislature.

(5) A bill to establish a student dining hall commission which would have full investigative power and authority to make positive recommendations to the Lenoir Hall administration and to Student Aid.

Student Body President Don Furtado in addressing the legislators, stressed the importance of the Student Legislature's position. Furtado stated that the basis of student government autonomy is currently threatened. He referred to the recent ruling that studnt government employees qualify as university employees.

John Brooks, Student Legislature Parliamentarian, presented a gavel to President Furtado in recognition of his service to student government and the student legislature during the 1957-58 year.

In a short address to the Legislature, Attorney General Dick Robinson outlined the policies and plans of his office for the year, stating that in a short time he hoped to have complete files on past legislation available to all legislators.

Ed Levy, coordinator for the National Student Association, gave a brief report of the NSA congress held last summer. Levy said he saw the congress as an "exchange of ideas" and that U. S. students are not doing as much about world affairs as are foreign students.

NC Capital Punishment Is Voted Down By Phi

By STAN BLACK

Capital punishment in North Carolina was condemned by the Philanthropic Literary Society in a close seven to six vote Tuesday night.

Dr. W. B. Sanders, professor of criminology in the UNC Dept of Sociology, was the guest critic for the evening.

RULE BY LAW?

Rep. Don Jacobs introduced the you first must hate him and then bill, saying "To put a man to death take satisfaction in seeing him die. Is this rule by law or justice?"

He asserted that crime has increased, rather than decreased, under capital punishment. "The real reason for capital punishment is death for death's sake, without reason or logic."

TOO HARDENED

Rep. Carl Matheson felt that criminals who are executed are too hardened to be rehabilitated and should be removed from society.

Rep. Bill Jackson stated that humanitarian considerations make the death penalty morally unacceptable. He felt that criminals are too shortsighted for the deterrent power to have much effect.

The paroling of murderers was scored by Rep. David Matthews, since it allows dangerous men to mix with the rest of society. Rep. Don Gray asked if anyone could "endorse the continued existence of a man who might have killed your own mother or brother."

The Nathan Leopold-Richard Loeb case was cited by Rep. Bob Morely as proving that murderers such as Leopold can be rehabilitated. Rep. Ron Pruitt said that killing is justified only in self defense or defense of another.

'TEAR-JERKER'

Past President Jim Tolbert called the bill a "tear-jerker," saying that "we can't create a Utopia and be Christ-like in our attitude toward murderers."

President John Brooks cast the deciding vote on the bill, passing it seven to six. A majority of all those present endorsed the bill sixteen to nine.

In his criticism and comment Dr. Sanders brought out the fact that in the past four years only three men have been executed in North Carolina. "One of the strongest points for abolition of the death penalty is the number of men who undoubtedly have been executed for crimes they did not commit." He added that "society is partly responsible for the crimes."

The Uniform Crime Reports for 1957 established that the six states without capital punishment have substantially lower murder rates.

Ron Pruitt was declared speaker of the evening by Critic Don Gray.

Di Votes Twice To Remove Interracial Marriage Bans

By ELLEN STEIN

The Dialectic Senate Tuesday night twice passed a bill advocating that all state laws restricting interracial marriages be abolished.

The first vote passed the bill by a two-thirds majority. After added discussion on this controversial subject the senate went on record as unamimously favoring the abolition of all state stipulations establishing racial criteria for the legality of marriage.

BASES OF IDEAS

Arguments by senators favoring the present state laws were based upon ideas such as purity of race, the futility of assimilating cultures, social standing, ethnic pride and a theory that people with different view points will not marry.

Senator Rick Wolfer intiated into debate the topic of purity of race, saying, "purity within the race is one of its stronger points." Furthermore, he said, people who deal in the practice of miscegenation lack ethnic pride, and government is responsible to hold in check those who are not able to govern themselves.

Senator Gary Greer, Di president, referred to sociological and Biblical attempts (the tower of Babel) to account for the origin of races and the fact that this guestion has never been answered.

In the amalgamation of cultures since the world began there has been the developing and mixing races and religions, Senator Greer stressed.

Senator Frank Elkin said, "To me there is only one race, the human race." He ridiculed the idea of "purity of race" in illustrating new classifications other than race into which people could be divided, such as classes of stature, hair coloring and eye coloring which might encourage such restrictions upon humanity as not being allowed to mingle with people taller than oneself. He also pointed out the added challenge to oppose such a restriction.

VIOLENCE PREVENTED

Representative David Matthews of the Philanthropic society emphasized what he called "the practical aspect" in that present miscegenation laws serve to prevent mob violence which would result after their removal. He said there is no place in the South for children of mixed marriages. "They wouldn't be Negro, they wouldn't be white; they would be a combination."

Discussion which proceeded the first voting brought new views into focus. Senator Wolfer announced that his main argument against the removal of miscegenation laws was that "you cannot mix one culture with another."

Turley Leads Revived Yanks To '58 Series Championship

MILWAUKEE—(AP)—Strong-armed Bob Turley led the revived New York Yankees to the greatest baseball comeback in 33 years Thursday as they stormed back from a 3-1 deficit to dethrone Milwaukee in the seventh game of the World Series.

Turley, working his third straight game, dazzled the Braves with a two-hit relief job over 6 2-3 innings while the Yanks clubbed Lew Burdette for a 6-2 victory.

It was sweet revenge for the Yanks, three-time losers to Burdett a year ago, as they ripped into their tormentor for four big runs in the eighth inning, breaking a 2-2 tie.

Burdette had yielded two unearned runs in the second but the Braves scored first off shaky Don Larsen and tied the score on Del Crandall's homer off Turley in the sixth.

Two men were out when the Yankee uprising started with a long double to right by Yogi Berra that just missed being a home run by about two feet. The drive bounced off a padding high on the right field barrier.

Elston Howard fouled off one pitch and looked at a ball before he bounced a single over second base. Berra hustled home with the big winning run.

Andy Carey, hitless in 11 trips, smashed a single off Eddie Mathews' glove into short left before Bill Skowron hammered a 2-2 pitch far and away over the fence in left center field for a 415-foot three-run homer.

Burdette bowed his head, pawed at the dirt resignedly, and finally closed out the inning by striking out Tony Kubek.

Crandall's homer with two out in the sixth was the only hit off the Yanks' 21-game winner until Joe Adcock sliced a pinch single to left with two gone in the ninth. When Mickey Mantle gathered in Red Schoendienst's fly to center for the final out, the short reign of the Braves had ended.

The Yankees, who usually take victory in stride, gathered around Turley as he walked off the mound, pounding his back, pumping his hand and yelling congratulations. The man who was yelling the most was Casey Stengel whose seventh World Series victory ties him with Joe McCarthy among the managers of all time.

It was the greatest comeback in baseball since the 1925 Pittsburgh Pirates, after losing three out of four to Washingon, closed with a rush to take three straight by beating Walter Johnson on a rain-soaked afternoon. No other club ever had overcome such a handicap in a best-of-seven series until the 1958 Yankees.

These Yankees were given up for dead, counted out beyond recall after they lost the first two games in Milwaukee.

Fans were saying this might have been the worst Yankee club ever to win an American League pennant.

Larsen's shutout in the third game eliminated any chance of a Milwaukee sweep but Warren Spahn's shutout put the Yankees down 3-1, and left them needing three straight.

First 2 Coeds In Homecoming Queen Contest

Two entries in the Homecoming Contest were turned in yesterday, the first day for submitting contestants, according to Dave Jones, president of the University Club. The University Club is sponsoring the contest.

The two contestants are: Kathy Fulenwider, a freshman, and Joanne Baker, a junior. Both girls are being sponsored by Alexander Dormitory.

The deadline for submitting is Wednesday. Entries may be turned in to the Graham Memorial Information Desk.

A court of 10 girls will be selected by a yet unnamed panel of judges Friday, Oct. 17. The queen's identity will be withheld until the football game Saturday, Oct. 18.

Last year's homecoming queen was Gail Willingham, who was graduated last spring.

IDC Court Revision

Perhaps the most significant piece of legislation to come up this year, and a significant proposal for any year is the new proposal for dormitory courts.

The concept of student autonomy is intimately tied in with the concept of student responsibility. With the freedom that students have, there must needs be a working arrangement to maintain order.

If the students want to assume responsibility over their own affairs, they must do a job. This job has not been done, and the most notable example of student failure is the IDC court.

Dormitory quiet must be maintained in order that students have the chance to study. The right to study is fundamental to the college community, and students have not until now had that right.

Dormitory life has been a farce. Quiet is a thing reserved for the hours of two in the morning until six in the morning with the exception of weekend when the hours are shorter. Damage to property and general horsing around were considered normal, and retribution was exacted in the form of an unofficial reprimand weeks later, which meant nothing.

The new proposal offers a chance for speedy efficient handling of all cases. It provides for a stiffer set of penalties in order to try to bring about good living conditions in the dormitories.

It provides a jury trial system that will place most ple under the framework of student government, and will provide for a more adequate handling of student problems as they come up.

The system is an improvement. It may require some changes to be discussed later, however, the idea and system will be a definite asset to dormitory administration.

The proof of the pudding is still in the eating, and if the IDC passes this proposal, they will have to work hard to make it work. If it can, it will be a blow in favor of responsible student government. The future will tell, if the IDC will do its job. For the sake of student autonomy, it is hoped that it will.

On Seawell

If there is any one person in the state that deserves the respect of all, it is Attorney-General Malcolm Seawell.

This man has displayed during the past year more courage than any of the politicians in the state put together.

For a man in an executive position, Mr. Seawell has consistently put himself on record as being in favor of compliance with the Supreme Court decision of 1954 with respect to school segregation.

He has assumed a role of leadership in a morass of backsliding and political kow-towing.

There is a great need for the type of leadership that Mr. Seawell is offering, for it brings hopes of making constructive progress on the segregation problem. He promises the hope of leading rational people, rationally along the road to an integrated situation without riots or destruction.

If more people had the same outlook as Mr. Seawell, the South would be in far better shape, and the black eye to the United States would be minimized.

Y-Conference

The YMCA Conference this weekend is notable for two reasons. At first it is an educational experience for all those who attend.

Secondly, it has value as it is the first time that State College and the University have collaborated on anything of value. This kind of relationship ought to continue for the profit of students at both institutions.

Baseball

At this writing the World Series is with us again. I haven't bothered to look at any of the games, but I have heard most of them on the TV set down the hall. To the people that love the sport it is unthinkable that anyone could not possibly have baseball as one of their paramount interests during the World Series.

This belief was saliently pointed out to me in Lenoir Hall the other night. I sat down to eat with a fellow who immediately started talking abut the Yanks and the Braves. I asked where they were playing and who had won the game. He looked very surprised at this question.

His next remark after telling me the score was to ask me if I was a special student "over here." He had assumed that I had to be a foreign student by my lack of interest and information on the World Series, even though I speak fairly clear English (as far as it is possible for a southerner to do so) and look, or at least I always thought I did, like the average American.

Rather than disillusion this sport's lover, I told him that I was a Fullbright student from Istanbul, but my parents were Americans and that I had learned the language early. Long live the noble sport of baseball!

Buildings Have History At UNC

Editor:

Whenever you see anybody going in and out of unfinished buildings, inspecting old buildings, reading inscriptions on monuments, etc., you may know without asking that it is yours truly.

I have been coming to Chapel Hill for 40 years but until the other day I never went a few steps out of the way to read the inscriptions on the two monuments on the North Campus, and if I had what I read would have had little meaning for me, for whether you are going abroad, or residing in Chapel Hill, you get no more out of anything than you take to it.

On the white snaft in the center of the North Campus I read:

"In grateful acknowledgement of their obligation to the first President of this University
Joseph Caldwell, D. D.
The President of the U. S.
The Governor of North Carolina and other Alumni
Have raised this monument
A.D. 1847"

To the best of my knowledge, this is the only monument in the United States erected by a President of the United States, and others, to the President of a University. The President was James G. Polk, who was a student in Caldwell's administration, the class of 1818, and President of the United States when he attended the Commencement Exercises in 1847.

On the other side of the monument, I wondered if I was standing on his grave. I looked it up and found that he was buried in the village cemetery, and that his body was twice exhumed. First, ten months after his death, to get a plaster cast of his face. The bust, which bore a close resemblance. It was in Gerrard Hall. I haven't been able to locate its present whereabouts. Ten years later his remains were exhumed and interred by his wife just east of Old West Building.

"In July 1904, the remains of Dr. Caldwell, his wife, and her son were transferred to the eastern base of this monument and reinterred."

On the Confedérate Monument, Franklin St., I recognized the Spartan Mother, giving a sword to her son and telling him to return with it or upon it. Like her Spartan sister, there was no place in the Confederate Mother's world for a coward.

I have already written of my visits to the Old Phi and Di Halls, and the Old Smith Building (Playmakers Theatre).

One late afternoon a policeman unlocked the door of Memorial Hall to let me see what was going on in there. The wall and the new tiles on the floor are the most beautiful shade of blue. The seats and the carpet down the aisles are a light gold color.

It is all really very beautiful. The Legislature may have been miserly at times, in the past with the University. But it blew itself this time to the tune of $55.000. And none too soon either, for the old seats were death on people's backs, and the acoustics were abominable.

Memorial Hall, transformed, looks more like an Opera House than an assembly hall for students. It is to be earnestly hoped that the students will take pride in keeping it looking that way. Feet on the seats, cigarette burns, and chewing gum daubs should be strictly tabu.

Some people bewail the fact that the seats and carpets are of a pastel color and exclaim, "It won't be long now. Just you wait until after the first student meeting in there! Why wasn't some dark red or blue color used?"

Memorial Hall is beautiful. Beauty is a deep need of the heart. Who was it who said if he had two loaves of bread he would sell one and buy hyacinths to feed his soul? And Keats: "Beauty is truth, truth beauty, that is all ye know on earth, and all ye need to know."

The other day, to break the monotony of my incessant scurryings around campus, I dropped into the G.M. Lounge to rehash that wonderful October issue of Esquire. There, methought, I could relax as much as those insupine plastic divans permit and enjoy the dusky diffusion of dim lights and smoke to a background of tasteful recorded music. After choosing said pulp from the rack (in the process trampling the fingers of some grey haired little lady reaching for the N. Y. Times Book Review) I plunked myself into a chair. The lights were fashionably low and to be sure the smoke was adaquate . . . but something was radically wrong with the music. Out of the grillwork that so cleverly conceals the speaker came a vaguely familiar whine, rapidly modulating in pitch. Then, a flood of recognition . . . . this was "Symphonie Espanole," almost, played by some vicliinist faster than is humanly possible with a tone that made me wonder if the gut were possibly still in the cat. Horrified I dashed to the O. M. Office and demanded the name of the would-be artist. The attendent handed over a record cover with irreproachable Zino Francescatti smiling through an LP label and said: "I don't know whether it's a 45 or a 33 so I'm playing it on 45. Sounds all right, doesn't it?" Perhaps, but you might try 78 next time anyway.

In Kansas City last week, a man with 35 of his last 44 years spent in prison was brought into court for som ealleged infraction. So far his record showed forgery, false impersonation, desertion, larceny, fraud, embezzlement, operating a confidence game, and transportating a stolen auto across state lines. Just before a five year sentence was passed his lawyer told the judge: "Any statement I might make about this man's good character would be out of place."

Unfulfilled potential is a sad thing. For instance take an old friend to UNC, the Playmaker's Theater. Hands down this is the most intimately beautiful architectural example on campus. Almost-new Morehead is blatantly functional and the most flattering comment about the outside of barely post-natal Ackland is that it is completely neutral in meaning. But the PM Theater, a gem in an otherwise uninspired corner of the campus, appears to have consistently gotten the unmitigated warehouse treatment for the past 20 years. The exterior walls are every shade of dirty reddish brown conceivable, the portico has long forgotten its last reconstruction period, and vestiges of leafless, lifeless ivy tenaciously cling to the varigated stones. However, as pictures taken long ago prove, the Playmaker's Theater need not look like the very decadence of the Greco Empire. Rally around, friends. Let's support spending a little more for rehabilitating potential beauty already here, and devote less effort to erecting such ocular pains as Ackland.

By way of introduction to those of you who are new, and as a refresher for those of you who are not so new, I would like to say a few words about this column and the cast of characters who will appear in it.

In the first place it is a political column written by a politician. In it you will find previews and postmortems on legislature every Thursday evening.

Right now the only important piece of legislation that will be introduced tonight that I know anything about is " A BILL TO ESTABLISH A STUDENT DINING HALL COMMISSION." It will be written and introduced by your humble servant. Aside from this inlightened bit of information on the activities of one legislator, I know nothnig.

Therefore, in order to fill space on this page and to enlighten you politically here's a run down on some of the principal figures in the Student Government set-up as seen from the legislature.

Towering above all, with the veto power and the right to address the Legislature by giving a thirty minute notice, stands the Student Body President. We approve his appointments, and he approves our bills. Sometimes when one thinks the other has acted without due consideration, the wheels grind to a temporary halt. After due consideration, the wheels roll again.

Then there is the Speaker. He acts as traffic cop and breaks tie votes. He has authority to call special sessions and to appoint special committees.

Next come the two floor leaders. They act as clearing agents for the members of their parties who have legislation to introduce. They see that it is properly prepared and does not conflict (too much) with the views and aims of their party.

Then there are 47 members who do the work, research, writing and orating . . . these are the most important of all.

Finally, and least important of all, there is the legislative columnist. Read what he has to say and make up your own mind about the issues he brings up.

It was one of those afternoons after classes when you know you should be doing a lot of things but just can't make up your mind to do them. A few of us sat sunken in soft chairs in the GM Lounge and spoke of things "we planned to do" — namely things we knew were impractical for the most part.

"I plan to go to Africa next year and study race relations," said one ambitious young graduate.

Soon it came my turn. "I plan," I announced gravely, "to go to Russia and study next year . . if I can get some sort of grant."

About this time I was conscious of being studied by someone else in the room. I looked up and saw a rather short little woman with coal black hair and the liveliest eyes I had ever encountered. She was standing over me, her hands jammed into her coat pockets, a look of disbelief on her face.

"What on earth do you want to go to Russia to study for?" she asked in a rich accent.

"Where are you from?" I evaded her question.

"You tell me why you want to study in Russia first."

"Well, I kind of thought it would be fun."

"Fun!" Her eyes twinkled with the wisdom of the ages. "In Russia they study. They study all day. They study all night. They don't have fun like you do over here. They don't go out and talk about studying over nice large glasses of beer . . ." Here she broke off and pointed to my clothes. "They don't even think of those things. What you wear. Your Lipstick doesn't match your dress, your hair looks bee-yoo-ti-fool. They are too busy studying, studying, studying all the time. When someone looks at you they don't even look on the outside they just go right on through to your insides to see how much you have gotten out of sutdying. No, I think you have more fun if you stay over here where you are." Her small hands waved expansively over the room, encompassing the campus, the state and the country.

"But where are you from?" I persisted.

"Over there," she went right on without acknowledging my question, "they say 'you study and work now and you get all the extras later' so everyone works furiously. They do not have nice stoves and shoes with all kinds of round and square toes and lipsticks of many colors. Why they don't even have PERMANENT WAVES over there."

"They DON'T!" chimed a chorus of bystanders who now surrounded the little woman with the lively eyes. By this time a small group encircled her as she expounded on the much-talked about and-read-about subject of the times.

About a half-hour later and a thousand sentences and a hundred impressions later, we started dwindling away, for it was five o'clock and our stomaehs were rumbling. We had discovered quite a lot about our little woman. She was Ukranian and studied all day and studied all night in Russia. She was here now and happy because she had a refrigerator and lipsticks in many colors and a choice of shoes. She had taken some tests here and thought they were easy because "you didn't have to write any sentences or ideas all you had to do was fill in the blanks and the more blanks you filled in the more you remembered." She said she had always had to think on the examinations she took in Russia.

We told her we had enjoyed talking to her and had learned a WHOLE lot and to please come and see us each and every one. Then we split up and the boys went to talk about studying over nice large glasses of beer and the rest of us went and satisfied our hunger and then gathered in a small clump outside the cafeteria to decide what to do next.

LOLITA. By Vladimir Nabokov. 319 pp. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

"Lolita" has posed unique problem ever since its publication — a problem of aesthetic morality. The problem arises because of the plot of the novel: "Lolita" is nothing less, and certainly nothing more, than the narrative of the passion of a middle-aged man for a pubescent girl.

The problem is one of censorship, for "aesthetic morality" involves the definition of those areas within which the artist may work if he is to reach his audience. In this sense of "morality," then, official censorship is of minor importance, as it is usually arbitrary and somewhat after-the-fact. Private censorship — the extent to which the reader will allow himself to participate in the artistic experience, is the major issue.

The censorship of "Lolita" began in France, of all places, and this much-publicised fact alone was enough to reserve a place for it on the best seller list once it came to the U. S. In spite of the commercial possibilities, American publishers were squeamish about publishing "Lolita."

When Putnam's Sons finally brought it out, "Lolita" began its career as a controversial novel on a very public level. The critics were vehement, either in praise or damnation. Dorothy Parker, writing in Esquire, called it "a great novel"; but in the same review she quoted John Gorden in the London Sunday Express as writing, "Without doubt it is the filthiest book I have ever read. Sheer unrestrained pornography."

So quite obviously the critics had their differences; but, while few of them were so unqualified in their praise as Miss Parker, most of the American critics also stayed far on the Parker side of the violent and incorrect Mr. Gorden.

Everyone agreed that "Lolita" was a controversial book, a remarkable book, and, to be sure, an original book, but that was about as far as most of the discussion went. Even the charming and brilliant Miss Parker ignored the aesthetic problems involved in the appreciation of "Lolita," and the best The Saturday Review could do was to rehash the problems of official censorship.

But the real problem of "Lolita" arises in the appreciation and possible censorship of it by the reader, and the problem arises only because the novel is such a skillful and successful work of art.

This is to say that such a story as this could quite conceivably succeed without difficulty if, a) it were a psychological case history, either serious in nature or just cheap thrills for pseudoanalysts; or if, b) it were written on the level of a Mickey Spillane yarn, frankly erotic and perverted.

But when, as in case of "Lolita," a story takes for its suebject such immorality and proceeds to treat it with art and humor and skill, intentionally tempting the reader to experience the story as art, then that story is in trouble.

Mr. Nabokov's art is such that he can tell such a story on just such a level, and the virtual reality which surrounds the narrator as he lusts for his young ward is liable to draw the reader, willynilly, into the vicarious participation which, however defined, constitutes full response to a work of art.

In creating such a compelling story around such a "taboo" subject, Mr. Nabokov puts himself in a position similar to that of a young lover insistently trying to draw his partner into an illicit relation: if he continues to insist, despite her firm refusal, he may well find himself given up in fear and disgust; if, on the other hand, he succeeds in his seduction, he is liable to find himself, post-passion, holding a frightened and guilty human bundle of mixed emotions.

Just so with Mr. Nabakov. If he succeeds in holding the reader with his art, he is liable to be entertaining a reader on Page 319 who is quite opposite in attitude from the one with whom he began on Page 1; that is, if he can get his reader beyond Page 10, or Page 100, through to the end.

In his remarks included at the end of the book, Mr. Nabokov justifies "Lolita" with the assertion that, ". . . after all we are not children, not illiterate juvenile delinquents, not . . . school boys who after a night of homosexual romps have to endure the paradox of reading the Ancients in expurgated versions." Quite true: but perhaps the degree of maturity necessary to an appreciative reading of "Lolita" is a relatively rare thing. In the case of many readers, particularly females, the subject matter may offend some sensibility more deeply imbedded than the juvenile super-ego; certainly sections of "Lolita" are potentially more discomfiting than anything in the famous last sections of "Ulysses."

So "Lolita" is subject of a private censorship which will make it unavailable to many readers: this is the problem of the book, and one which cannot be dismissed with admonitions against prudishness.

Another major obstacle to the appreciation of the novel, the possibility that some readers — and not all of them male — will come to it with the misapprehension that it is something spicy for reading in bed, is taken care of by the author himself in the aforementioned note.

It should be obvious to any reader who takes the trouble to inquire that "Lolita" is art: in a sense, it is art in spite of itself. It is a lesson in the brilliant use of the English language and the first person narrative (this from a writer whose natural idiom is Russian). It is a funny book, with a wide range of humor running from the grotesque to the satirical.

Read it, if you can.

Waldo Beach To Be Featured At YMCA-YWCA Conference

Christian faith, and pitfalls of the college social whirl."

NOT REPETITION

Although he "will not try to make the talks just an extension and repetition of what is in the book," Dr. Beach is expected to deal with those campus problems which have been intensified for Southern college students in the past few years.

Co-chairmen of the "Y" Fall Conference, Miss Suzanne Mosteller and Larry Anderson pointed out earlier in the week that the YM-YWCA felt "very privileged in having Dr. Beach to be the keynote speaker for our conference. He is one of the country's foremost speakers on Christian ethics; particularly, in their relationship to college life."

"We sincerely hope that anyone wishing to participate in the conference will come by the YM-YWCA offices today or tomorrow.

COST OF TRIP

Total cost of the conference trip is $4.50. This includes three meals, one night's lodging, and round trip transportation, Miss Mosteller revealed.

Persons taking their cars will be refunded $1.00 per person carried, not to exceed $4.00, she said.

Students attending the conference will meet at the YMCA immediaely after the South Carolina game for departure to Quaker Lake. Baggage, including bedding and informal clothing should be left in the "Y" office that morning, Anderson said.

DANCE AT AVERETT COLLEGE

UNC students have been invited to a dance at Averett College in Danville, Va., Saturday.

The Student Activities Committee, which extended the invitation, said the dance would be held from 8 to 11 p.m. and would be held in the college gym.

UNITED CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Laymen's Fellowship of the United Congregational Christian Church will meet Sunday at 8 p.m. in the Fellowship Hall. Dean Smith, assistant basketball coach, will be the speaker.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY

"Are Sin, Disease, and Death Real?" will be the subject of the lesson-sermon at Christian Science Services this Sunday.

The lesson sermon will point out that "Instead of God sending sickness and death, He destroys them."

Sunday School meets at 9:30 a.m and the service is at 11 a.m. in Carroll Hall. Nursery services are provided during the service.

Oral Cancer Examinations To Be Today

Free examinations for symptoms of oral cancer will be held at the UNC School of Dentistry today from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. These three minute check-ups are offered to all comers.

These examinations will also be given at Duke and Watts Hospital. Around 50 dentists in Orange and Durham Counties will participate in this project.

If suspicious lesions are found, biopsies will be immediately taken and a pathology report will be made to the person's doctor or dentist. The American Cancer Society will follow up reports to make certain the patient receives treatment.

From 2,000 to 7,000 people are expected to be examined. The clinics are being sponsored jointly by the American Cancer Society and the North Carolina Dental Society.

This is the second such project in the nation and the first in this state. The results will be studied by the Dental Society to learn if future statewide clinics of this type are feasible.

No pre-registration is required for the clinic. There will be no X-rays.

Same size, same shape, after washing. Anklet $1.50. Garter length $1.75. Choice of attractive colors. Come in—select yours.

Harriers Face Va.

Smarting from a last week-end 32-23 upset dealt by the upstart Clemson Tigers, the Carolina cross-country team is determined to balance its record today when it faces the Virginia Cavaliers here at 3:30.

That master of the old soft shoe, Wayne Bishop, the sole shining light for the Tar Heels Saturday, appears ready to once again serve as guide for the pack by running up ahead all alone. This time, howeve, he hopes for a little Carolina company, at least within sight.

Scurlock To Run

Most of the turned ankles and head colds that hampered the Heels last week have disappeared. Captain Dave Scurlock, though still 15 pounds underweight, is regaining his stamina and beginning to unwind those long, limber legs once again. Reliable Howard Kahn and sophomore Sonny Sweet should run right along with him on the 3.8 mile course.

Only Cowles Liipfert, who is suffering from a persistent cold, is a doubtful starter. It probably won't be decided by Coach Dale Ranson as to whether Liipfert will run or not until just before the gun sounds.

Both Alex Coffin and Bing Somers, who keep plodding along with neither ills nor spills, complete the list.

Henderson Out

The only member missing will be senior letterman Doug Henderson, who suffered a pulled leg muscle in the Clemson loss and wound up in a creek. He may be out for the season and, if so, the team will be minus a good, steady runner leaving a squad of only seven.

Virginiona ,d y¼ wop-eL&CcD.

Virginia, considered by some the weak sister of the conference, will be out to improve their ACC position. But the Tar Heels, finishing up a grinding week of steep workouts, are looking mean and the Cavaliers should find the going pretty rough.

theGEETUS is coming back look for it!

MIGHTY MOE . . . A sure starter for the Tar Heels Saturday when they square off against South Carolina is Moe DeCantis. DeCantis has been moved in the backfield from left to right halfback, and may be moved back again for the Gamecocks.

Booters Open With Lynchburg

By JIM PURKS

The varsity soccer team will make its season debut here this afternoon in a contest against Lynchburg College.

Coach Marvin Allen urged students to come out and cheer the Tar Heels on when they square off with the Hornets on Fetzer Field.

The Tar Heel eleven will be on a revenge mission against Lynchburg. Almost a year ago, over 200 soccer fans in Virginia cheered as the Lynchburg team rapped Coach Allen's squad for five goals and emerged victorious, 5-4. The year before, Carolina had beaten Lynchburg with ease, 5-0.

The team, which prior to the Lynchburg game seemed to be on the verge of becoming a threat to conference leader Maryland, went on to have an unimpressive 2-3-2 season.

This year, Coach Allen has an experienced and spirited team which he believes is definitely better than last year's squad, due mainly to more depth.

Offensively, the team could pack a tremendous punch if the forward line is able to work together.

At the center forward position, Mike Thompson will be the man to watch. Thompson, only a junior, led the team in scoring last year.

Thompson will be flanked by several veterans, among them Rick Grausman at the left wing post and Coleman Barks, who will probably play right wing.

On defense, Captain Jim Rattay will be guarding the goal, backed up by Dave Corkey and Hugh Goodman. Coach Allen has not yet decided who will be at the third fullback position.

Coach Allen has made no predictions about this year's prospects, but admitted that the team has fine possibilities if the boys hustle and play good soccer consistently.

Speeding was blamed for 13,200 deaths on U. S. highways in 1957.

Carson Pleased With Tar Babies' Progress

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"That was the best effort out of freshmen since I've been here." That was the way frosh coach Bud Carson described his team's 29-8 victory over Virginia last Friday in Charlottesville.

Carson emphasized above everything else that the win was the result of a "good team effort." In addition the coach also stated that he felt his Tar Babies were ready for the game mentally as well as physically.

Virginia Staff Sad

Justifiably proud of the progress his squad has made, the former Tar Heel tailback told of the disappointment in the Virginia camp after the game was over. It seems that all the Cavalier varsity coaching staff, including head coach Dick Voris, were on hand to see the game. The beating that the Tar Babies gave the Cavayearlings shattered the dreams of the U.Va. men who felt this was the best frosh squad they had had in years.

From a rundown of the scoring plays it would seem that the Tar Babies were passing just as often as running, but such was not the case. Carson revealed that his quarterbacks only threw about ten passes during the entire contest. Two of these ten tosses, however, were good for six points apiece.

Davies Out

Physically the Tar Babies came out of the game in good condition. Fullback Joe Davies has been sidelined by an attack of glandular fever, but he did play in the contest. Tackle John Hegarty got into the fray and played well despite an ankle which had threatened to keep him on the bench.

Besides Davies, the only one on the injured list at the moment is guard Benton McMillan whose hip is keeping him out of action. Carson is hopeful that the big lineman from Wilson will be ready to go in the Wake Forest game a week from this coming Friday.

. . . to cheer the founding of The University of North Carolina

Carolina Celebrating 165th Birthday In Special Ceremonies This Morning

By A PRINGLE PIPKIN

The University of North Carolina will celebrate the 165th anniversary of its founding with ceremonies to be held south of South Building this morning.

All 11 o'clock classes have been cancelled, regardless of the weather, in order to permit students and faculty to attend the commemoration.

The University Band under the direction of Herbert Fred will start the observance at 10:50. The laying of the cornerstone of Old East on Oct. 12, 1793, will be re-enacted in pantomine by members of the Carolina Playmakers.

Robert E. Ketler will serve as narrator of the pantomine. Those acting include William M. White as General Davie and Carl M. Hinrichs and David Richardson. Russell Link will direct the production.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will lead the assembly. Joel Carter will direct the University Glee Club in the renlition of "God Ever Glorious" by Lwoff and "Integer Vitae."

After the exercises at South Building the Naval and the Air Force ROTCs will lead the procession to Davie Poplar. There "Hark the Sound" will be sung and the pageant concluded.

Chancellor Aycock will be joined on the platform by University President William B. Friday, Thomas W. Alexander, president of the General Alumni Assn.; Student Body President Don Furtado, and the Rev. James P. Carse of the YM-YWCA staff, who will deliver the invocation and benediction.

This occasion will mark the first anniversary of Chancellor Aycock's installation. The exercises are being held one day early this year because Oct. 12 falls on Sunday.

Furtado has urged students to attend this exercise.

Student Leaders Outline Needs To Trustee Visiting Committee

University officials, student government representatives, and faculty members presented proposals to the Visiting Committee of the Bord of Trustees in the Chancellor's office yesterday.

The Committee will continue its hearings today, before attending the football game between UNC and South Carolina.

Don Furtado, president of the student body and head of the student government delegation, emphasized the need for a new student Union.

He pointed to the history of this union to show it had been inadequate at the time of its building, and added that he felt that the proposed location of the new student union, Emerson Field, would channel more students into this area, in order to make it truly a center for campus activity.

Norman Smith and John Brooks presented a report on the self-liquidating program of dormitory construction.

Smith pointed out that the present dormitory rent had risen almost three times its dollars and cents cost in 1947. He showed that other schools in the United States had eliminated at least part of their self-liquidating program, in order that education would not be as great a financial burden on the students.

Charlie Gray, treasurer of the student body, pointed out the need for increased faculty salaries in order that the University would be competitive with other schools in the country to say nothing of saving many potential teachers who might otherwise go into business.

Furtado outlined the need for a program for faculty leaves of absence with pay in order to add incentive to teaching at UNC.

Student Government Posts Filled By Appointments

The Student Legislature Thursday night announced appointments to the attorney general's staff, the Men's Honor Council and the Campus Cleanliness Committee.

Jack Spain and Dave Biren were appointed as assistants to the attorney general.

Joe Warner, Ken Friedman and Rury Edwards were appointed to the Campus Cleanliness Committee.

Appointments to the Men's Honor Council were: Jeff Hair, Wayne Bishop and Jim Rose.

All of these appointments were made by Student Body President Don Furtado and have not yet been approved by the Legislature. Approval will probably come at its next meeting.

Six vacant seats due to resignations, graduation or transfers were announced Thursday night. However, appointments have already been made to fill these vacancies and will be read at the Legislature's next meeting.

Vacancies were: two seats in Town Women's District, one in Dorm Women's District, two in Town Men's District I and one vacancy in Town Men's District III.

Rhodes Forms Now Available At 203 South

Students interested in obtaining application forms and information concerning Rhodes Scholarships may apply at the office of Dean George M. Harper, 203 South Building.

A preliminary application should be presented to Dean Harper no latr than October 16, according to an announcement. Students selected to represent UNC before the state committee will be assisted in completing their applications.

The Rhodes trustees recently increased the annual stipenl to L. 750, or approximately $2100. This is usually sufficient for educational and personal expenses, the announcement said.

Informal Rushing Started By Sororities

All sororities began informal rush Thursday, Oct. 9, although pledge quotas are complete at the present.

However, sororities may rush interested girls throughout the year to fill any vacancies which occur.

Girls interested in informal rush are required to contact the office of the dean of women at 206 South Building. During informal rush, coeds are entertained informally with dinners and parties at the sororities.

If the sorority preference of the rushee matches any bid she may receive, she may then pledge.

Eight Social Rooms Open To Girls Today

Social rooms in eight men's dorm will be open at staggered times to 6 p.m. today for coeds.

But instead of a dance in Cobb basement after the social rooms are closed to coeds, free juke box music will be available in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial after the game today.

Social rooms will be open from 12 noon to 1:45 this afternoon and again after the game until 6 o'clock. The dorms included are: Avery, Teague, Parker, Cobb, Conner, Joyner, Winston and Mangum.

Graham Memorial Activities Board is sponsoring free music in the Rendezvous Room after the game for all persons.

The dance in Cobb basement was called off because a combo could not be secured. (Combos were in great demand this weekend especially because of Duke's homecoming.)

Gamecocks After UNC Blood In This Afternoon's Game

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels return to Kenan Stadium this afternoon at 2 with an upset victory under their belt to take on a tough bunch of Gamecocks from south of the border in what shapes up as the leading game of today in this area.

The South Carolina Gamecocks, led by touchdown twins Alex Hawkins and King Dixon, are out for revenge from last year's 28-6 pasting at the hands of the Heels.

The Tar Heels are looking for their second win of the year after losing the first two. They cooled off Southern Cal 8-7 last Friday night in Los Angeles.

The probable starting lineups:

Pos.	Carolina	South Carolina
LE	J. Schroeder	J. Frye
LT	P. Blazer	D. Rogers
LG	F. Swearingen	C. Gaines
C	R. Koes	L. Rogers
RG	F. Mueller	J. Bodkin
RT	D. Redding	Ed Pitts
RE	Al Goldstein	B. Walker
QB	J. Cummings	B. Bunch
LH	W. Smith	K. Dixon
RH	E. DeCantis	A. Hawkins
FB	Ed Lipski	J. Saunders

The highly-touted Gamecocks make their entry into Kenan today with a very creditable 2-1 record, including an upset win over Duke in the season opener. In the other games, Army torned the surprise of their lonesome end offense into a 45-8 rout and last week the Gamecocks whipped Georgia 24-14.

Carolina, having lost two of its first three contests, is still rated as the favorite team by most of the oddsmakers. The Tar Heel line looked tremendous against Southern Cal, and the Tar Heel kicking game got rolling for the first time this season.

South Carolina also has shown promises of a great line in its first three games. Many rate the first two Gamecock lines as good or better than any comparable lines in the conference.

The Gamecocks' big problem last year, a good offensive quarterback, seems solved for good under the direction of Bobby Bunch. John Sounders, along with Hawkins and Dixon, completes perhaps the most powerful backfield in the league.

Carolina has made some changes this week, mostly in the backfield. Scholastic sophomore Rabe Walton, who has moved around in the backfield all season, has been promoted to second unit quarterback and will probably see action today. Nelson Lowe has been moved to fullback.

John Schroeder has been moved up to a starting position at left end as Don Kemper will not see action today due to a bruise suffered against the Trojans.

A wide-open offensive game is expected from the Tar Heel viewpoint, as they will probably mix up passing and running, both from varied formations. South Carolina, though, will probably stick to the ground if they can go that way. The Gamecocks don't like to pass unless they are forced to.

Smoking Garbage Can Brings Fire Department

Hot ashes in a garbage can caused a lot of smoke at the Tradewinds Restaurant on the Chapel Hill bypass at about 8 last night.

When employes of the restaurant could not find the source of the smoke, the Chapel Hill fire department was called.

Firemen located the smouldering garbage and dumped it in a cleared area next to the building.

Local Arnold Air Squadron Made Area Headquarters

The local Jesse J. Moorhead Squadron of the Arnold Air Society, Inc., was recently selected as Area C-2 Headquarters.

The Arnold Air Society is a four-year national honorary society for outstanding AFROTC cadets.

The Moohead Squadron was selected to be Area C-2 Headquarters by the six squadrons in this area. The Units under the jurisdiction of this headquarters, in addition to the University here, are the University of Virginia, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, State College, Duke University and North Carolina Agricultural and Technological Institute.

The headquarters here, which will operate through May 1960, will be responsible for conducting at least one area conclave per year and for all administrative coordination between the units under its jurisdiction and the national headquarters.

Carey W. Daniel was elected to the position of Area C-2 Commander and will hold the rank of Calet Colonel in the Arnold Air Society, Inc.

Daniel has appointed the following men to the position and grade indicated: Cadet Lt. Colonel William F. Parker, executive officer, from Statsville; Cadet Majors David A. Ellis, adjutant-recorder, from Gamboa, Canal Zone; Philip T. Williams, comptroller, from Charlotte; Luther J. Davis Jr., information services officer, from South Mills; and Joel E. Vickers, project and liaison officer, from Chapel Hill.

Opening Made For Student On Merchants Association

Persons interested in becoming the student representative on the Board of Directors of the Chapel Hill Merchants Association should contact Miss Julia Staples, executive secretary of student government, to arrange an appointment with the student body president.

The representative will be an associate and non-voting member of the board. According to the bill passed by Student Legislature Thursday night, the representative will keep the president and student body informed of plans and actions of the Merchants Association.

Recommendations concerning the Chapel Hill Merchants Association are to be given to this associate member.

"The position does not require the knowledge of merchandising or accounting, but merely a desire to carefully convey the sentiments of the students of the University and at the same time to disseminate any information for the association which might pertain to the students," Student Body President Don Furtado said.

He added it was also "an excellent opportunity" for a student to get an insight into the operation of the businesses in the area.

"I think that this contact between student government and the merchants may alleviate problems which might have arisen in the past due to a lack of communication and understanding," he continued.

Furtado expressed thanks to Whid Powell and all the members of the Merchants Association for this opportunity.

Cosmopolitans To View Slides On Middle East

A slide illustrated discussion on Lebanon and the Middle East will be given at the Cosmopolitan Club Sunday by Mickey Gibson, a graduate student here who lived in Lebanon for the past eight years.

Gibson will be the guest speaker at the second meeting of the Cosmopolitan Club at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

An important item of business on the agenda for the club is making plans for participation in the Chapel Hill and campus observance of United Nations Week.

Open House Evening Planned By Sororities

Open house at all UNC sororities will be held Monday night from 7:30 to 9 o'clock.

The Panhellenic Council at a meeting Wednesday night set the date for the annual open house.

Kappa Kappa Gamma, whose house is being refinished, will hold its open house in the Graham Memorial Lounge.

The Panhellenic Council also announced that there will be a reception for Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority on Nov. 6 prior to the installation of the sorority. The place of the reception will be announced later.

Hospital Patient Sets Small Fire On Third Floor

A minor fire in the Psychiatric wing of Memorial Hospital here occurred Friday at 9:30 a.m.

No personal injury and little property damage was reported.

The blaze was believed to have been set by a patient, who then left the room. The bed and mattress in the third floor room were damaged by flames and other furniture slightly damaged by smoke.

The fire was rapidly extinguished by the hospital maintenance department with the use of hand fire extinguishers.

University Day

The University is celebrating its 165th Anniversary, and in doing so it is moving from an old era into a new one. It is moving from a college atmosphere into a large University atmosphere.

The growth of the University is currently being predicted. It is growing at such a rate that its population at present may be doubled by the end of the next ten years.

As a college the University flourished. Its doors were open to all, and the air of academic freedom was evident, as the University was looked on as the leader in the South. It was looked upon in its ideas and in its atmosphere as one of the most liberal in the United States. It was a place where each individual was weighed according to his individual merits, and where the community was small enough so that each individual could be recognized by all other individuals.

The community is growing, and as it grows, the chance for students to be looked on as individuals and to be treated as individuals lessens, as the student-as-number concept heightens. The chance that the University might grow too large to realize the educational values that it has possessed is growing greater every year.

On the 165th Anniversary of the University, this is the challenge of the future. The past is enshrined in greatness. The future can be also.

Visiting Agreement

The new coed visiting agreement promises a great step in the right direction—the direction of constructive campus programming for bettering the social atmosphere and educational climate.

The program agreed to is reasonable, and takes into account the dormitory structures of the various men's dormitories.

The program should be followed up by other programs for student activity and perhaps for bringing Women's College students over to UNC periodically.

Those who have participated in making this possible deserve a vote of thanks from the student body. They have started into a new ground, heretofore almost unexplored.

Merchants Assn.

The Student Legislature last night approved something that has been necessary for so many years, a student ex-officio member of the Merchants' Assn.

It marks the first time in a long while that students have been granted representation in town affairs, and may do well to bring about a closer understanding of the problems that confront the Town and University.

It is hoped that this will bring a further operation between town and student officials, and help bring about more student representation in Town affairs.

During the summer, there was proposed a member of the planning board and other town committees. These ex-officio members would be appointed by the president of the student body subject to the approval of the legislature. It is hoped that this too is followed upon in order to bring about more representation of students in Town affairs, and to bring about a more cooperative atmosphere.

Letters About This, That, And The Other

Segregation

Editor:

I find it difficult to convince myself that Mr. Nick Bagdarsarian in his October 8th article on "Segregation" in The Daily Tar Heel sincerely advocated the parochial views he presented. Nevertheless, the issues are of such moment as to demand some attempt at clarification.

First, Mr. B., in his article, refers to a calculated plot on the part of the "materially rich politicians up North —(to) rule the destiny of our South." These are, he continues, the "masters whose primary objective in life is to subject a once proud people into the filth-infested mire of their own world." he then suggests that there is a Southern problem and should be settled by the people here" as we see fit, regardless of the Supreme Court's opinion." He concludes by saying that the final test of all this is yet to come.

Here I believe is a pretty fair presentation of Mr. B's ideas. It is on exactly these points that I would like to answer the talented editorialist.

Since Mr. B. has an aversion to northerners I think it only fair to state that I am from the North—Boston.

Although, I do not wholly believe this is a sectional issue I, nevertheless, feel compelled to attempt a reconstruction of some of Mr. B's views. Northerners, needless to say, are not all greedy, inquisitorial Phillistines. Sad to say are not even all rich. However, it is a fact that in both sections misconceptions do arise. For instance, emotionalism of the stripe evidenced by Mr. B. does give rise in other parts of the country to the feeling that the South, as D. W. Grogan succinctly voice it, is a world apart. Sontinued stories of school bombings, Ku Klux Klan gatherings, capitulations to mob violence (or the threat of it), and the sympathetic reception of demogogic fanatics has given rise to a picture of the South that is often quite mistaken. Down here I find that the majority of people (of whom I have come in contact with) are relatively even-tempered and rational in respect to integration. They seem to disassociate themselves in whole or in part from the much publicized views of the Almonds, Faubus', Byrds, and Kaspers. It was encouraging to read that the Attorney-General of North Carolina saw fit to question the validity of the "massive resistance" laws of a neighboring state.

Again, it presents an interesting paradox to people outside the South when they see a governor such as Virginia's claiming to speak for the interest of the local citizenry and at the same time these said communities themselves drawing up resolves requesting that the schools be reopened, segregated or otherwise. I personally believe that these politicians have made a serious miscalculation of public sentiment and are now fighting the desperate battle of the cornered man.

Again, Mr. B. infers that every waking hour of a northerner is preoccupied with the South. This, naturally, is far from the truth. In the spectrum of local, state, regional, national, and international problems. The South holds no exalted position. However, the problem they do present is not a sectional one. Far from it! The obstinacy of the South in refusing to grant the very precepts upon which this country was founded (like liberty and equal opportunity (undermines what we as Americans have been taught to believe in. The dignity of man, the faith of our forefathers and the respect and admiration this country holds in the eyes of freedom loving peoples everywhere are all seriously compromised. I repeat, this problem far transcends the boundary of the Confederacy. It is a direct test of the ability of free men to build, govern and propetuate a society based on democratic and equalitarian ideals.

In light of this it is easy to entertain a certain sense of frustration when one sees the repeated attempts to induce the whole question to a local personal level.

In regard to the Supreme Court, suffice it to say that the Court has interpreted the law of the land. The Court is the necessary balance wheel of our government and its decrees shall be enforced. It has survived Andrew Jackson and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. I feel certain it will survive Orval Faubus.

Again, I reiterate this is not a sectional quarrel .The Civil War has been over for nearly one hundred years. It is but a milestone in history. For those whose ancestors migrated to this country after this was the personal animousities were never really felt. Over all, it does not hold in any other part of the country the sentimental connotations that it does in the South. However, this war did settle one issue. This should be fully realized.

As I said, I refuse to believe Mr. B. was in complete earnestness when expressing the views in his article. However, the ideas propounded are a little too important to go completely unanswered.

W. J. CROTTY

Integration

Dear Mr. Bagdasarian:

There are statements in your article on Segregation that demand further development and possibly enlightenment. My desire is not to impress a crown of integration upon Southern heads, but to objectively examine the contents of your statements.

I cannot agree that segregation is a Southern problem — the entire nation must bear the charge that discrimination is present among our people. However, other geographical areas of the nation are actively meeting the problems anl progress is advancing with greater dispatch than is evident in most of the South. To say that one area of the nation—"forcefully tries to compel another society to discard its traditional standards in favor of its own"—is preventing the facts. The rest of the nation has no desire to impose its will upon the South because of selfish ends. In fact, no one geographical area should enter the picture. This is a Constitutional matter which has been settled by the Fouteenth Amendment. —"No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of the citizens of the Unitel States." And has been strengthened additionally by the unanimous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I must also mention the religious and moral supports present in Judto-Chistian and Islamic faiths and the so-called "natural law." With these overwhelming sanctions, I believe that the rest of the nation and the world rests upon firm foundations.

In answer to your slanderous, ill-founded, statements about politicians and the rest of the nation (i.e., "filth-infested mire"), I need only to direct you to compare the following between the two geographical areas that have been mentioned: the contributions to mankind—cultural, economic, political, religious and scientific, the standard of living, and the acceptance by the rest of the enlightened world. If those facts do not sufficiently sway blind faith in petty regionalism, I seriously doubt the amount of progress that could be achieved by the progressive citizens of the area.

One could go further into the blatant, emotional, demigod appeal that was made, but that point should be avoided. However, it was mentioned that the ability to be for or against segregation was not a right. Here I must take issue. People had the time to exercise their rights and privileges to put forth their opinions on segregation. That time has past! The law and the courts of the nation have spoken, and in time integration must be a reality. Otherwise the laws and rules of our nation are a mockery, and our beliefs in "the rights of man" mere empty mouthings.

"Yankee go home" is a crude and effective weapon in the hands of Communistic supporters, nationalists and the uneducated. It is hoped that no correlation is present, although one cannot deny the benefits that our enemies accrue as a direct result of segregation.

In conclusion, only one reality bothers me (I sincerely believe that the people of the South and the nation will voluntarily integrate) and that is the fact that I never considered myself a "damn Yankee" until I came south —I had the strangest sensation and belief that I was an American citizen.

VIN FISHER, JR.

On Paper

Editor:

My first year at Carolina I didn't like the Daily Tar Heel very much, but being a young man with very much love for this University, I didn't make any comments. The second year at Carolina I thought there was too much controversy, but the paper was at least readable. Then, there arrived on the scene the great God "Recall." Well, since I didn't care too much one way or the other I remained silent. Finally there came my third year. Once again there was a recall. I knew the editor fairly well and I liked him. He had many faults, but I wonder who doesn't, (unless it is perhaps Cort Edwards).

Again, being a young man without a worry one way or the other I did nothing. This time there was an editor elected who did a very good job and was well liked. Now here is the twister. An actual election! As many students remember, the editor didn't run, so we got another (excuse the expression) editor.

Now, here I am again. In fact here we all are again, with the addition of few new ones. Much to my delight upon my return to the University I found the paper still in existence. But alas, I fear, only in existence. In the four years I have been at Carolina this is one year that I feel there is a dire need of a paper and it should be more than just a paper this is existing.

I have never been either for or against recall, but I think it is time there was something done, and since I don't know any other solution we may as well follow the past trend and have a recall.

I fully realize that down to this point this article may very well resemble an editorial in the Daily Tar Heel. However, for the first time I am truly concerned with the policies employed by the school paper.

As a student, perhaps too long, but nevertheless a student, I must pay this item called "fees." This is supposed to include the school paper. This alone is enough to make me want to get a paper worth reading. However, this is not my main reason. I have a very great love for the school and I respect it and those connected with it. Because of this I want others to do the same. When I think of the many Alumni and friends of U. N. C. who receive this excuse for a newspaper, I feel sick at my stomach. Who in Hell gives a damn about the process of the birth of puppies except the mother or perhaps a Vet. I also resent the implication that all Carolina Co-eds are prostitutes, especially when it is made by a person who couldn't make out in a house of ill repute with a hundred-dollar bill.

Something that has been bothering me is the thing called "the beat generation." Now, I am completely aware it exists, but how many people know what it is? Why does everyone in the Daily Tar Heel attempt to sterotype it?

I, this year at least am, enthralled with the number of Daily Tar Heel staff who have become experts on: (1) the beat generation, (2) Philosophy, (3) Kerouge (4) Satre, (5) Child birth, (6) Prostituton, (7) Contraceptives, (8) Just about every damn thing in existence. I am amazed at the number of non-fraternity men who have become authorites on fraternity life.

Well anyway, back to my point. If a paper is going to be any good it must have a few basic things. First of all it should have a good world news coverage. Next, it should have a comic section, a sports section, a classified section, a campus coverage, and then, and I say this with great humbleness, a good editorial section.

I appeal to the students of The University of North Carolina, let's get a paper that will do justice to us and for us. It is our paper; it represents us. Let us be worthy of it and most of all let's make it worthy of us.

John F. Miller

DTH

Editor:

I have several things I've wanted to get off my mind—in fact, hardly a breakfast goes by that I don't get riled at somebody, though the library usually takes that out of me, or redirects it—But now things have piled up and I feel as if I must fire all guns simultaneously, so with your permission:

(1) Mr. Young: I liked very much your series with Mr. Holmes on fraternities. I thought you wrote comprehensively, and with gentlemanly restraint in the face of your editor's conflicting views. Therefore, ti was mildly disappointing to me to read that you objected strongly to his presenting his views, mistaken as they may have been.

The presence of widely, or even widely, divergent views on an editorial page makes for good reading, and more importantly, for thought. This indicates a high quality paper, rather than the reverse, I should think. As for the contraception fight, in addition to the above reasons for handling it, isn't it a good thing, Mr. Young, that college students treat an adult subject in an adult way?

More power to your paper—I enjoy it. I think its coverage is more mature and diversified than was the case a few years ago. But may I make a loud agonized plea for higher quality in one area at least—the area of proofreading? I've had to do it so I know it's possible. The quality and comprehension of your paper are maimed for me—when what purports to be straight English prose suddenly turns into cryptography. Missing lines, transposed lines, inverted spelling, a little Dutch or Czechoslovak thrown in do not make for high caliber journalism, in my lay-opinion, anyway.

(2) Mitsou Chou-Ken: What one looks for, one tends to find. As it takes a long time of close association to really know person, so does it in regard to countries. A view over at least several years is necessary for any true perspective, and for observing sub-currents. Those you mentioned, far from being underlying, are among the most superficials, incidental and immediate of the interests among the student body which has not been forced to as grim and serious a view of purpose as has many a student body in other nations. That this is so is not to say that the major tone here is one of frivolity, though at times, especially at end-of-term pressure periods, it may appear so superficially.

There is a carefree atmosphere here because, generally, in regard to the essentials of life, we are free from care. A car, social life, attractive clothes, music, are part of the normal pattern. I will grant you, though, that we'd profit from a slight bit larger dose of purpose now and then. However, I hope you stay long enough to preceive that serious purpose does exist in good amount here on this campus, and that during your "pilgrimage" you will acquire a more varied view.

(3) On this contraception fuss: May I please say weakly and once only to the Romans, why must you fellows have the corner on all divine truth? Why don't you focus that marvelous energy and organization on actual non-Christians, instead of on fellow-Christians, who, with intelligence similar to yours in finiteness, and tradition similar to yours in length and origins, differ mainly in positiveness of being right? You believe you are absolutely right, which can lead to making absolute errors, which can necessitate making absolute about-faces—(which can become part of Holy Tradition and thus all right'. We claim to see truth partially, all the while holding the door open for further revelation or differing views, which, I believe, makes forward progress less complicated. (There are exceptions to this open-mindedness, but they are not in the fore front of Protestant thinking.)

(4) Curtis Gans: Congratulations to you for your (I presume) column on the role of the press. It should be syndicated.

(5) And, thank you, dear editor, for your time. I feel so much better now.

On Pius XII

Joe John

He spread through the world a sacred hope.
Despite aversion and threats did he strive.
Nor could stern frailty his energy quell.

He has passed now, and is mourned;
Another ascends in turbulent times.

The Pope is dead; long live the Pope!

The annals of history have gained a great man; the Twentieth Century has lost one. Pope Pius XII died early Wednesday night, overcome by the effects of two severe strokes.

The news of the passing of the 82-year-old Prelate shocked millions the world over, many of those not of his faith. From every sector of a strife-ridden world came expressions of sympathy at the death of the saintly Pontiff.

In the spring of 1939, Cardinal Eugenio Pacilli was elected to the awesome role of spiritual leader of approximately one-half billion Roman Catholics. His life was to penetrate much more deeply than this into the tragic times that were to be his reign.

He chose "Opus Justitiae Pax—Peace is the Work of Justice" as the papal motto and devoted the next nineteen years to tireless efforts for a universal peace. "Nothing is lost with peace," he said, "all may be with war."

Pius XII remained always a scholar and a person sensitive to the great forces of politics, economics and ideologies that swirled in gnarled passion throughout the world. He made of the Vatican a force for good, speaking out frequently and forcefully on varied crucial problems, ranging from war to questions of family life.

Perhaps the most characteristic tale of this quiet and gentle man was reported by Washington columnist Drew Pearson. It embraces the whole man, his holiness and his wonderful depth of understanding.

A papal audience had been granted to a group of Genoese pilgrims. Among them was a small boy. Kneeling for his blessing, the youngster suddenly blurted out:

"Holy Father, when I grow up, I'm going to be like you. I am going to be a Pope."

The group hushed into a shocked silence.

The Pope, however, smiled.

"Ah, my son," He said, "you do not know what you wish for yourself.

Thus lives a great man. Death will but sanctify him.

Sidelight

Ed Rowland

"When I was a child, I thought as a child."

That quotation points out what I have to say about the annual fall madness that haunts the United States and environs, and which does not evade the cultural atmosphere of Chapel Hill.

This of course is the World Series.

I cannot for the life of me understand why so many persons will forsake their jobs, neglect classes (if they consider themselves unlucky enough to have them in the afternoon) and yell and scream at neighbors and friends in the heat of a ball game. You would think the fate of the world hung on the next pitch.

Perhaps to these addicts it does. After all, is it not named the World Series? I suppose if the Yankees win we will continue to have the vested interests dictate to us in all manner of ways, and if the Braves manage to upset the applecart there will be a turnover sufficient to guarantee a minimum wage of $50 a week to every man, woman and child in the country.

This may be a far-fetched comparison, but to those who sit on the edge of their seat waiting for the announcer's words this is about true. As for newspapers, the death of Pope Pius had to share the front pages with the deathless words of Casey Stengel and on editorial pages writers vied with one another to explain to the literate masses who ever get that far in a paper why it all happened. Sports pages are enlarged to handle the reams of copy and the flood of wirephotos that come into the newsroom. Even such a paper as the Charlotte Observer had to send their executive sports editor to the scene of the action to provide first-hand coverage to those readers of the paper to peruse after they finished with Billy Graham's sermons.

But it will all be over by the time this sees print. I only hope that those who got carried away by the fever enough to bet on one team or another won enough to compensate for the heart murmurs they incurred, and that those who lost went out and shot themselves under the sourapple tree where it was boasted Jeff Davis would hang.

We would be better off without them.

The Reader's Digest

Russell Eisenman

America's most popular magazine is The Reader's Digest. Therefore, it is interesting and significant to look at that magazine's format.

It is a highly unrealistic periodical. Like the movies it gives its audience a diversion, or at least tries to, by painting an almost Follyanna picture of life. It is filled with stories of people who have overcome their environment to become celebrities, millionaires, or just plain happy. It often fails to bring forth anything of a derogatory nature on important subjects, giving the reader who has not looked deeply into the subject the idea that all's well, when in reality such is not the case.

Sex sells, and the Digest exploits this by including, from time to time, articles on sex which give the reader almost no information and serves only to increase circulation.

Politically, the Digest is a conservative Republican publication, constantly presenting views of this nature in the form of articles, giving them the air of objectivity when such is not the case. Westbrook Pegler must enjoy the Digest's consistent attacks on labor unions. While there is certainly need for reform in labor, things have not fallen to the level that this magazine would have its readers believe.

It's all right for people to read The Reader's Digest if they understand the format of that magazine and realize its biasness and lack of realism. However, we have an ignorant society if there is not this realization.

Booters Top Lynchburg 4-3 In Double Overtime Thriller

A determined Carolina soccer team withstood a second half Lynchburg rally for a thrilling 4-3 victory at Fetzer Field Friday in a double overtime contest.

With two and a half minutes left in the second overtime, center forward Mike Thompson took a head pass from right wing Coleman Barks and booted it beautifully into the right corner of the Lynchburg goal.

The victory snapped Lynchburg College's four game winning streak and marked a fine start for Coach Marvin Allen's squad, out to revenge last year's 4-3 loss at Lynchburg.

Not even red-sweatered girl cheerleaders yelling "Go Hornets, Go!" (clap, clap, clap) could divert attention from the hustling Tar Heels.

Carolina jumped to an early 1-0 lead in the first quarter when the Thompson-Barks combination clicked six minutes after the game had begun. Thompson booted the ball in after the Lynchburg goalie had trouble handling a hard kick from Barks and dropped the ball.

Seven minutes later, Barks put the Tar Heels ahead, 2-0, when he punched the ball past goalie Freddie Rittman after taking a pass from left wing Rick Grausman.

The second quarter had no scoring action, but was marked by the surprising and noisy appearance of nine girl cheerleaders who came down in cars from Virginia.

Clad in red sweaters, gray skirts, and red sneakers, the girls cheered in vain for the Hornets to break into the scoring column during the quarter.

However, the second half was a different story as the fired-up Hornets struck twice in the third quarter to tie the game up. In rapid-fire succession, Lynchburg's Don Martin scored the first goal, and three minutes later Tom Welch booted the ball past goalie Jim Rattay after taking a pass from Helmut Werner.

With ten minutes gone in the third quarter, Carolina's Grausman and Barks combined to score again to put the Tar Heels back in the lead.

In the fourth quarter, Lynchburg's scoring hero, Helmut Werner broke loose from three Carolina defenders to tie the score up at 3-3. Werner, who tormented the Tar Heels in last year's contest, has scored now in seven straight games. Sensing possible victory, the Hornets dominated play almost the entire quarter, but couldn't penetrate the Carolina defense, held together by fullback Dave Corkey, and the quarter ended with the teams in a 3-3 deadlock.

Neither team could advance in the first five-minute overtime, but the Tar Heels shone through in the second overtime, constantly pressing the Lynchburg defense, and finally hitting paydirt with Thompson's goal.

Coach Marvin Allen, pleased with the team's initial showing, now has to get the squad ready for its first conference game with Virginia, to be played here next Friday.

Cake Race

The winners in Thursday's cake race in the open division were: David Peltz, Grover Everett, Louis Sullivan, Fred Lauery. These were the first five to cross the finish line.

The winners in the Novice division were: Larry Henry, Don Weathers, Alan Harris, Neal Chappell, and Pete Buck in that order.

The distance covered in the race was 1.55 miles.

Swimming Contest

The fall swimming contest will be held Monday night at 7:00 p.m. in Bowman Gray Indoor Pool. There will be 9 different events in the contest plus a diving event. The events range from the 25 yd. butterfly to the 200yd relay.

Harriers Beat Va. 40-21 Behind Wayne Bishop

Running away with seven of the first nine places and led by the soft-stepping Wayne Bishop, the Carolina cross country team crushed the Virginia Cavaliers yesterday by a 20-41 margin.

This evened the Tar Heel's season record at 1-1 and, in doing so, took away some of the sting inflicted here last Saturday by the Clemson Tigers in a 23-32 upset.

Bishop, whose time of 20:09.5 was about seven seconds over his Clemson effort due to a side cramp, had plenty of Carolina company. Trailing Virginia's John Sabanosh who finished second were three Tar Heels—Cowles Llipfert, who fought off a cold with a great effort, Alex Coffin, and Bing Somers. The latter two ran about as well as they ever have.

Ralph Haven came in sixth for the Cavaliers and right behind him came three more of the Carolina crew, Sonny Sweet, knocking off two minutes and a half from last week, was seventh, and Howard Kahn and Dave Scurlock, who is still waging a battle with his weight, were right behind.

Latching on to the tenth spot was Virginia's Jack Hagge.

The victory served as a great morale booster for the Tar Heels and set them in great spirits for the rugged week ahead which must be fully utilized if they are to beat the highly touted Maryland Terrapins come next week.

Predictions For Football Games

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Last week we were very lucky in hitting six out of six predictions and missing the Duke score by just one point. Here's the way they line up this week as I see it:

Carolina 29, South Carolina 26. Although the Gamcocks have a better record, Carolina's performance last week makes it seem as if they're on their way. This game could go either way, but we'll stick with the home team.

Duke 23, Baylor 8. The addition of the fastest human on earth, Dave Sime, to the Duke lineup at "lonesome end" will be at least a big psychological advantage.

Virginia 32, Virginia Tech 6 Whitely and Company to win in a breeze, most of the breeze created by the many passes thrown by the nation's leading ground-gainer.

Clemson 15, Vanderbilt 7. Purely a guess, as both have been playing good ball, and both are undefeated. Let's stick with the conference in this contest.

Wake Forest 21, State 20. Upset of the week. Going way out on a limb, we think the Deacs will take this one on the basis of past performances.

Maryland 14, Texas A&M 0. The Terps have shown what they can do with the chips down, and the Aggies have won but one game. Mont's seven sticks of dynamite to explode in this one.

Missile May Miss Man In The Moon

By GARDNER L. BRIDGE

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Alive with instruments, the Moon rocket Pioneer streaked through space yesterday on a course that may lead wide of its target but return rich dividends in cosmic data.

Lofted from Cape Canaveral, Fla. at 3:42 a.m. (EST), the 85-pound space craft electrified scientists around the world by hurtling far out on its trail-blazing trip through the celestial void.

In late afternoon the Defense Department reported that an analysis of data from the Hawaii tracking station "has confirmed that the lunar probe has deviated from the planned trajectory."

The Department said further study would be needed to determine just how far off course the rocket was veering and where it might lead to.

Twelve hours after starting its flight, the moon rocket was about 65,000 miles out in space and slowing down rapidly, although that was expected. Its three-stage takeoff zoomed the rocket up to a speed of about 25,000 miles an hour to tear it loose from the Earth's main gravity field.

The continuing pull of Earth's gravity out in space slowed the rocket down after this initial burst of speed, however, and at the 65,000 mile distance it was down to a velocity of approximately 3,000 miles an hour.

One of the officials associated with the lunar probe program at Cape Canaveral said it was obvious the rocket would miss its target by a wide margin

Fantastically complicated plotting of time, distance, Earth and Moon movement and other factors went into the charting of Pioneer's course through the heavens in the hope that it would go into orbit around the Moon.

Hope still remained that the rocket might find its way to the general vicinity of its destination, 221,000 miles and 2½ days out from Earth.

The smooth precision of the Air Force launching, after failure of the first attempt two months ago, drew cheers from scientists around the world. Prof. Alfred Lovell, in charge of the World's largest radio telescope at Jodrell Bank, England, called it "an amazing achievement" even though the rocket was off course.

Frank McGuire Will Receive U Club Trophy

Frank McGuire, UNC's award winning basketball coach, will have another honor added to those he already holds at 4 this afternoon.

At that time he will receive the University Club's annual Service Award. The presentation will be made in the main Lounge of Graham Memorial.

This is the second presentation of this award, established to recognize and reward service to the University.

This year's award was based on work in the field of sportsmanship done by Coach McGuire.

The ward consists of a revolving trophy and a permanent plaque.

The University Club has issued an invitation to the students and faculty to attend the presentation. A reception and refreshments will follow the ceremony.

Last year's award was given to Coach Jim Tatum.

UNC Glee Club Opens Season At Convention

The 55-voice Men's Glee Club presented its first concert of the year Friday night before an enthusiastic gathering of the N. C. Textile Manufacturers' Assn. in Pinehurst.

The club mixed its program with secular music, Negro spirituals, folk songs, a guitar-playing balladeer and a quartet.

Following the performance, director Joel Carter commented, "the very good blend and balance of the chorus and the way the men seemed so relaxed and confident is, I hope, indicative of the spirit of the club."

Their next appearance will be the club's annual fall tour which will take it through North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee.

Work Hunters Meet Tonight In Gerrard Hall

W. Edgar Gift, superintendent of Personnel at Tennessee Eastman Company, will speak in Gerrard Hall Tuesday night, Oct. 14, at 7:30 p.m.

His topic of discussion will be "Finding and Getting the Right Job."

This program is the first of a series of three career meetings sponsored by the Placement Service.

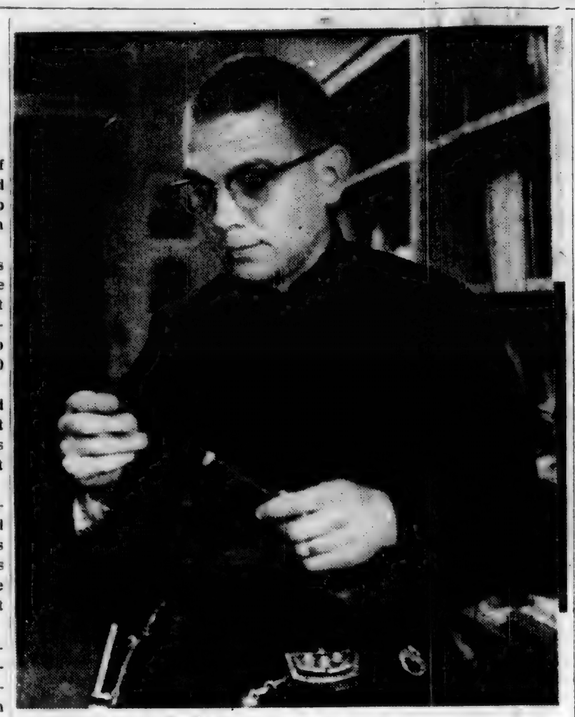
Gift will discuss the job hunting problems facing seniors and graduate students.

Gift went into Personnel Administration in 1946 after having worked several years with Tennessee Eastman in chemical research and production. He previously was associated with Procter & Gamble. He holds a B.S. degree in Chemical Engineering from the University of Kansas and is a member of a number of honorary professional societies.

Gift is also on the board of directors of the Southern College Placement Officers Association.

J. M. Galloway, director of the Placement Service, will also be present at the meeting to explain how his office helps students find jobs and how students can use the Service effectively.

Galloway has urged all students starting their last year in school, both veterans and non veterans, men and women, to attend this meeting.



COSTUME IN THE CLASSROOM—Assistant Professor Robert A. Rupen examines one of the accessories of his outer Mongolian garb.

Outer Mongolian Garb Brightens UNC Class

By PERRIN HENDERSON

He stepped right out of the hills of Outer Mongolia into room 206 Caldwell.

Association Professor Robert A. Rupen, dressed in his brown bathrobe-like attire with an orange sash tied around his waist, walked into Political Science 55 class Thursday morning showing off a few of the souvernirs he brought back from his recent tour of the Soviet Union.

On his right side hung a sheath containing a knife and a pair of chopsticks. Hanging from a 10 inch chain on his left was an ornately designed flint and steel purse.

Not only did this weird attire attract attention, but it brought foreign life into the classroom. These Mongolians have to make their own fires, eat with their own utensils, protect themselves against the wild animals This is the true role of the Central Asian nomad today

Last August Professor Rupen was invited by the Mongolian government to visit this land of secrecy. Since the war very few westerners have been permitted to tour there.

The government of Mongolia had read Rupen's articles on the area and wanted the professor to see how wrong he was by seeing the place for himself.

This trip was not the professor's first behind the iron curtain. He had visited European Russia and the Caucasus in 1956. His biggest impression was the great amount of improvements during the past two years in all phases of Russian life, from consumer goods to construction work.

Great interest was stirred that morning with Rupen's introduction to the Soviet Union instead of a somewhat boring textbook.

The class wondered whether he would lecture on his experiences or stick to the assignment sheet of the course. Mr. Rupen said himself, "I'm afraid the course may turn into a Traveloque."

Rhodes Applications Are Due Thursday

Preliminary applications of students interested in competing for Rhodes Scholarships must be made in the office of Dean George Harper, 203 South Building, no later than Thursday.

Students selected to represent UNC before the state committee will be assisted in completing their applications.

Tar Heels Beat Birds 6-0 On Great Defensive Play

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Halfback Wade Smith crashed over left tackle into the end zone for a touchdown early in the second quarter and his Tar Heel teammates made it stick as Carolina whipped the South Carolina Gamecocks 6-0 here yesterday before 26,000 fans in Kenan Stadium.

Both teams played a great defensive game, with the edge going to the Tar Heels who stopped every South Carolina drive before it could cause any damage.

THE STATISTICS

	Carolina	S. Carolina
First Downs	13	5
Rushing Yds.	169	79
Passing Yds.	83	42
Passes Att.	16	5
Passes Comp.	6	2
Passes Inter. by	0	1
Punts	9	13
Punting Avg.	41.8	34.3
Fumbles Lost	1	2
Yds. Penalized	43	86

The kicking game of both teams was also tremendous yesterday, as each kept the other bottled up in its own territory much of the game.

Carolina's first and winning touchdown drive began when Don Coker kicked the Gamecocks deep into their own territory, pushing them back to the SC 12. After failing to gain, the Birds punted out to their own 44.

Jack Cummings hit Al Goldstein with a 13-yard aerial after a running play which pushed the ball to the Gamecock 27. After another short gain, the Tar Heels came out of the huddle in an unbalanced line right. Wade Smith shot off the weak side (left) and bolted to the South Carolina 1 before being hauled down from behind.

On the next play Smith cracked into the end zone for the only score of the day. The Tar Heels attempted to run the extra point for two points, but Ed Lipski was stopped short of the goal.

South Carolina could never launch a really serious offensive threat throughout the contest, as the Tar Heel line rose to the occasion time and time again to halt the Gamebirds in their tracks.

The Gamecocks' touchdown twins, Alex Hawkins and King Dixon, were both kept dead to rights most of the day by superb line play, although Hawkins did get off one good kickoff return for 35 yards.

The Tar Heel line play was a repeat performance of last week's Southern Cal game as the forward wall held up like a brick wall and continually put pressure on the passer.

THE PROUD PAPA—Although all UNC's football fathers had cause to celebrate yesterday, we reckon the ref's Pop was a proud man too.

Student Party Meeting Postponed 'Till Tuesday

Student Party Chairman Leon Holt has announced that the Student Party will not meet tomorrow night due to a conflict with sorority and women's dorms open house.

However, the party will meet Tuesday night. The place and time of the meeting will be announced later.

Solar Eclipse Visible In Chapel Hill, But Only At Morehead Planetarium

The total eclipse of the sun over the Southern Hemisphere today may also be seen in the Morehead Planetarium here this month.

The natural eclipse will occur over South America but it will not be visible in the northern latitudes. The eclipse, however, is simulated and explained in the current Planetarium production, "Autumn Constellations"

Planetarium Manager A F Jenzano explained why the eclipse will not be seen in the Northern Hemisphere. He said, "As the earth and moon travel around the sun, they each cast cone shaped shadows out into space always pointed in the direction away from the sun."

In today's eclipse, he said, the tip of moon's shadow will cast a dark area at the latitude of central South America. The shadow will be only about several degrees in diameter.

Jenzano also explained that while an eclipse is not related to the constellations, incorporating it in the current program is a part of the Morehead Planetarium policy of offering timely information and entertainment.

He said, "The eclipse was put in the show because it occurs this month, for the same reason the constellations of autumn are being presented."

YM-YWCA 'Faculty Visitation' Set Tuesday And Wednesday

Some 150 members of the YMCA-YWCA will participate in a "Faculty Visitation" Tuesday and Wednesday.

This visitation is designed to solicit support and participation of the faculty and staff members for the Y.

The campus has been divided into four sections with faculty advisers, division chairmen and group captains. Co-chairmen Jane Walker and Frank Elkins announced yesterday that drive members will meet with their respective division chairman this afternoon at the Y-building; teams I and III at 5 p.m. and teams II and IV at 5:30 p.m.

A "Get Acquainted" banquet is also being planned for the first mass meeting at the Episcopal Parish House Monday, Oct. 20, at 6 o'clock.

Faculty advisers for the Visitation are Dr. John Graham, Dr. Fred Ellis and Mrs. Marvin Chapin for Division II; Dr. Edgar Thomas, Prof. Wayne Bowers and Prof. Robert Mann for Division II; Prof. Shepard Jones, and Prof. David Pollitt for Division III; and Mrs. Paul Guthrie, Sam Magill and Prof. Virgil Mann for Division IV.

Division chairmen for the Visitation program are Ann Harvey, Ronald Britt, Betty Zeh, Ed Cox, Lew Wite, Roger Foushee and Evelyn Moore.

Group Captains are Belinda Fay, George Grayson, Joy Little, Jim Butler, Liz Howell, Sid Sowers, Ann Smith, Don Gray, Julia Parks, David Elliades, Catherine Carter;

Nina Hopkins, Harry Elsher, Rosa Dickinson, Sonny Simpson, Virginia Sandridge, Eleanor Martin, Tommy Aldridge, Carolyn Peal, Sam Adams and Diane Simon.

Power Politics

America has for a long time been playing the game of power politics. It has been playing throughout this century, and is currently playing it at a time when power politics is out of date.

Historically the device was most effective in the 19th century. The British used it to their advantage, as it balanced country against country in Eupore in order that a balance of power was created, and Great Britain was in position to call the plays. Under this Britain flourished, and an Empire was born and extended.

The British were skilled at keeping that balance and preserving the peace, but eventually war broke out and the balance had to be reconstructed. No one wins a war, but Great Britain kept itself on the winning side, and still were in a position to call the balance after the war.

However, modern communications and implements of war spelled the end of power politics as a successful means of diplomacy.

The first World War was won by the allies, but the real loser was Great Britain. In subsequent years, it saw its great empire dismembered, not by outside forces, but by internal turmoil. Its policy of colonialism which had sustained the empire so long was proving inadequate to meet the modern situation. A balance of powet was no longer capable in Europe, for not only was Great Britain in a position where it could not control affairs, but also there were other factors to be reckoned with both east and west.

America, after its period of isolation in the twenties, took up the game as did the new Soviet Union. Each was pursuing the game to its own advantage on both sides of a country that was pursuing the game more recklessly to its advantage — Germany. Japan joined in, and England took a subordinate role to the United States, and yet, the game worked to the advantage of none.

World War II came and brought death and destruction to almost all, and victory to no one. Temporary advantage was given to Russia, and long range advantage was bestowed on China, but nobody won, and the people of the world lost.

At the end of all the turmoil in the second world war, there came an event which changes the shape of world politics permanently. On the sands of Alamogordo, New Mexico a group of scientists watched patiently as a brilliant flash burst over the horizon, and a fireball grew and waned into a mushroom cloud. Soon, the same weapon was exploded over Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and a new age was started.

The atomic age brought with it the potentiality of instant destruction, no matter how large the nation was that dropped the bomb. Within a few years, it became a matter of twenty minutes that a hemisphere could be negotiated by guided missile and the countries in between didn't matter any more.

In the atom-space age, the United States has continued to play the game of power politics. It has continued to sacrifice its principles for the sake of retaining allies and a power balance. It has continued to lose effectiveness in this world of mid-20th century.

A quick glance at the world situation today will indicate how great the United States' losses have been.

There are six livable continents. Europe is divided between Russia on the one hand and the Western powers on the other. In the twelve years following the war, the United States' foreign policy has extended Russian domination throughout Eastern Europe and has shown to these people that there is no hope for freedom from enslavement. In the United States, such freedom loving peoples as Sweden and Norway have found that the pretense of freedom the United States offers is merely a pretense, and are currently being swept away, by the lack of principles of the United States. Other countries are moving in one direction or another away from democracy, at least partly due to the example the United States offers as the democratic leader.

In Africa, there is a consistent under current of struggle for independence from colonial domination, which threatens to alienate the whole continent from Capetown to Algiers from the democratic side, spurred by the undemocratic colonialitic policies of the Western powers, and the tacit support of the United States.

The Middle East is in turmoil, and from Moroco to Pakistan strong anti-western movements are springing up, and threatened consolidation of the area against the United States and the west may soon become a reality, unless the United States changes policy quickly.

Russia dominates the northern part of Asia and Communist China seals off the Eastern wall. In the middle, India, Indonesia, and Malaya have evidenced great distaste for the

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

This week the world has somewhat fewer crises to upset the balance of power than in recent weeks, but the total picture is not much improved.

The biggest news was the death of Pope Pius XI, who was called the "Pope of Peace" for 19 years, at his summer castle alongside Lake Albano, Italy. His death Wednesday night came as the result of two strokes that developed into a grave heart and lung condition.

The Pontiff was 82 years old.

The new Pope will be designated by the College of Cardinals in an election expected to be held at the Vatican within the next two or three weeks—after a nine day period of mourning.

All the Popes for the last 400 years have come from Italy. The feeling at the Vatican has been that this will likely be the case again even though Italians no longer command a majority in the College of Cardinals.

Embassies and legations of about 50 nations accredited to the Vatican were immediately notified of the Pope's death. So were Cardinals throughout the world who must come for the conclave to elect the new Pope.

Directed by their Dean, French-born Eugene Cardinal Tisserant, Cardinals will gather as soon as possible to arrange for the "interregnum," the period between the death of the Pope to the election of a new Pontiff.

One of their first tasks will be to arrange for the nine-day period of solemn mourning that will be followed by burial in the Vatican grotto. The Pope's sepulchre will be near the spot where church records say St. Peter, considered by Roman Catholics as the first Pope, was buried.

In the Far East clash between Nationalist and Red Chinese over Quemoy and Matsu the end of the seven-day cease-fire period the Reds inaugurated drew near with no real signs it would be extended. The shelling will probably begin once more Monday.

The Red offer was made on condition the U. S. quit escorting Nationalist vessels to within the three-mile limit off the islands. But with caution the State Department said they would stop only if the firing stopped first—which took place—and what the U. S. did in international waters was its own business.

Sec. of State Dulles told reporters, "Worldwide condemnation of the Communists will be assured if they again resume the fighting." However, he and the State Dept. also said they recognized the political implications of the Red offer and would not knuckle under to any compromising demands.

In another development in Asia the corrupt government of Pakistan was overthrown in a one-day bloodless revolt Tuesday and the citizens of that country looked forward to better days. In the streets of Karachi prices immediately dropped, the blackmarket went out of business and the new leader declared an end to anarchy.

CHAPEL HILL OCCUPATION — WATCHING THE SERIES

In the United States a private school corporation in Little Rock announced plans to operate high schools for white children in private buildings. The schools would be financed by private donations.

The announcement came shortly after a federal court ban on operation of four Little Rock high schools as private, segregated institutions was extended until a new hearing.

Meanwhile, Federal and state authorities looked for clues to the identity of the dynamiters who wrecked the Clinton, Tenn., high school Sunday. No progress has been reported.

Thursday the 850 white and 11 Negro pupils of the school began classes in a vacated building in nearby Oak Ridge offered by the AEC. The 25-room school will be used until the Clinton school is rebuilt. Anderson County officials have consulted with top White House aides in an effort to get Federal aid in rebuilding the totally-wrecked school. It was not announced exactly what the group discussed, neither was it announced what results, if any, were obtained.

Later in the week a Federal judge knocked one more prop from beneath the segregations' plans for circumvention of court rulings by declaring that Virginia teachers may not work in private segregated schools as long as they are paid by the state.

The judge declined to order the reopening of the schools as requested by the NAACP, because the constitutionality of the law closing the schools was being tested in a state court. He said the court has the right to declare that a state must abandon public education completely if it is to abandon it at all.

Gov. Almond of Virginia said he was not going to buck a court order in reopening closed schools. He was under pressure from petitionists in Charlottesville and Norfolk to reopen the schools.

In Louisiana a coalition of Gov. Earl Long and segregation leaders branded a Democratic national committeemen unfaithful to his post and ousted him in the state's central party meeting. The man, Camille F. Gravel, had been under fire for a year because of his stand favoring the civil rights plank in the national party platform.

Gravel was accused with working hand-in-hand with Paul Butler, national Democratic chairman, in trying to alienate the South from the party. He was accused of being disloyal to his own people.

Gravel emphatically stated his belief, that as a Catholic layman and a father of 10, segregation is morally wrong.

On the other hand, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell of New York made peace with the Democratic party and pledged to work for the entire state Democratic ticket in next month's election. In recent years Powell had supported the Republicans and had been read out of the party.

He reportedly was guaranteed that his seniority gained under the Republicans would be retained if the Democrats retained leadership in Congress.

Vice-president Nixon accused the Soviet government of ordering the Moscow CBS bureau closed because it feared the truth. Earlier in the week the Russian ambassador had protested a CBS telecast of a play, "The Plot to Kill Stalin," saying it was distorted and strained relations between the U. S. and Russia. Later the Russians ordered the CBS bureau to close.

"In my opinion," Nixon said, "far more than war, far more than our armies and far more than us and our free world allies, the leaders of the Soviet government fear the truth."

President Eisenhower settled down for a long weekend at his mountaintop resort, Camp David, to consult with leaders in preparation for a long political campaign and to celebrate his 68th birthday. The celebration is premature, since the President's birthday is Tuesday.

He left on the trip after a check-up at Walter Reed Hospital pronounced him in excellent health, even after his three major illness suffered while in office. He left the hospital and went to Burning Tree Club for a round of golf in beautiful autumn weather.

Later, Republican leaders said after a conference with the President that continued Democratic control of Congress would take the nation down the left lane which leads inevitably to socialism.

Republican national chairman Meade Alcron made the statement. He said Eisenhower is in a "real fighting mood" and is all set to help the party to the utmost in the fall campaign.

This week also the President named Judge Stewart Potter of Cincinnati to be an associate justice on the Supreme Court after Justice Burton stepped down. He had held a post on the U. S. Court of Appeals for six years. The appointment runs the list of Eisenhower appointees to five on the Court.

On Clinton

Joe John

It was a murky Sunday morning. Only the earliest of risers had begun to stir. Then, suddenly, three explosions rocked the little town. The treacherous silence had been broken.

At 4:21, integrated Clinton High School was ravaged by a successive series of dynamite blasts. The irrepressible monster Violence had appeared again. To use an old cliche, this blast will be heard 'round the nation, if not around the world.

The integrity and sincerity of the South has again been damaged by the actions of an inane few. That the bombers were financed, and their work planned, by one of the lunatic fringe extremist agencies, such as supported rabbling-rousing John Casper, cannot be doubted.

Once a scene of integration disturbance, the little Tennessee town had met its problem manfully. Not a single incident marred the orderly opening of the school. Such peaceful organization tried the endurance of the fanatics. Their reaction was characteristicly odious.

In throwing state-wide law enforcement bodies into efforts for immediate apprehension of the criminals, Gov. Frank Clement said the choice was one of education by democratic means or by dynamite. He could not have been more correct. The entire South will reverberate from this action, and its effect will not be short.

Possibly four states have made the dubious decision of closing their public schools when and if presented with a court order. This right is inherent in their liberties. The federal government cannot and will not interfere.

Tennessee was not one of these states. But are they to be denied the same freedom of choice granted to those of a different bent? Violence at Clinton precipitated the entire present educational crisis by forcing immediate court decisions which should not have come for some years. This was the result of the mobs.

The South has now fallen from any sympathy they may have had from persons opposed to a tyrannical court. National opinion has shifted to the nine men in black.

Congress, too, cannot support mobs and bombs. It will assuredly do nothing to curb the court. Rather, it may strengthen its policies through legislation.

I am certain that the greatest majority of American people support the law and wish to act within it. Schools may be open or kept closed—legally. The choice is offered to the individual states concerned.

Whatever this decision, however, and no matter what attitude toward segregation is maintained, anarchy and defiance of the law must not be condoned.

Letter From Olympus

The stark realization of the threatening world becoming imminent to us as graduating seniors steered our conversation to the usefulness of our educations. We had run into an old friend having coffee at a local bistro, and, having been invited to join him, we sat down, eager to compare notes on what had occured since last we met. College, he said, is a duplication, or at the very least a good indication, of later life. There are organizations, there is the room, the poker table, good books, not-sogood books. The type of interests formed in college will be pursued later. But there is one chief difference, he said. That is this: at college there is the authority of choice, but with few of its responsibilities.

His biggest regret was majoring in Business Administration. After four years of ledgers, cycles, and trends, he said, the well oiled business machine will discharge me, a finished product. He lamented that a higher education should have challenged his values and stimulated his thoughts. We could say nothing. We agree with him. The undergraduate Business School is giving the students the business. It is paradoxical. More and more business firms are requiring liberally educated employees to fit into their own training programs. The future uselessness of the business education is becoming more and more evident, and more and more seniors are speaking in regret when they speak of this practical, ever so practical, institution. Why is it that seniors are the most suseptible to education, when it is too late? Specialization has advanced to the point where more and more is known about less and less, and eventually everything will be known about nothing.

We are reminded of that famous quotation. "Waste is despicable. But the largest and most shameful waste is wasted human potential. Happiness can only be achieved through fulfilment, and the greater the area of fulfilment the greater the happiness. Fulfilment can only be achieved through self-knowledge and world-knowledge. It can be achieved by looking at a beautiful painting, mastering a profession, gaining understanding. It can be achieved through friendship and it can be achieved through love. Ignorance is the enemy of fulfilment and happiness . . . the key to wisdom is perception."

We are hopelessly addicted to an evening cup of coffee, and we are sure that in the future months we will run into many old friends. By the way, coffee is a social necessity on campus. If you do not like coffee you will feel socially inadequate because you will be socially inadequate. Luckily, our friends like coffee. We are sure we will be besiged by wailing cries from the netherlands of regret, but we have listened to our last. They are all too pathetic.

The revision on committee of the Election Board has been considering some important changes in the rules concerning class officers.

With the exception of president, the officers of the Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior classes will no longer be positions. The Seniors will elect five class officers.

This change is certainly a needed one. With the enlargement of the University the class as a unit has lost its effectiveness.

With the abolishment of hazing — a very sensible and mature action — students have become much less aware of their class.

The interests of the students have become more diverse, and the living quarters are now more widely separated.

The legislative power of the students has been delegated to the Student Legislature. The shift left the class officers with virtually no power.

It is doubtful, if many students can name more than two of their class officers. They don't make news — I intend no slur upon the present class officers; there is simply very little they are authorized to do.

As the present system now stands the class officers are sometimes used to reward the party faithful. There are several serious drawbacks to having these class officers with the exception of president.

The campus political parties nominate capable men and coeds to run for class officers. These people, if interested, could be used in more important positions on student government committees.

The campus political parties spend much of their time before elections nominating class officers. Sometimes the battles for a nomination are fought with more ardor than those for seats in the Student Legislature.

The election of these class officers adds to the election Board's burden and helps to confuse the voter.

The exception to what I say comes from the class officers of the senior class. These officers have to plan for class day in the spring.

The presidents of the classes may at some time have to serve at some official function. There is rarely an occasion when more than one representative might be needed.

It is time this archaic system was changed to a more efficient system.

Thanks should be extended to the IFC for "voting to allow" a DTH reporter to cover its meetings. It appears that the IFC is doing the DTH a great favor.

Does this mean the IFC is dictating to the press when a meeting can be covered and by whom it can be covered? Since when did the IFC assume the role of determining the public's right to know?

policies of the United States, and support of these countries becomes less and less certain.

Indo-China has been in turmoil, and Japan has currently been pressing the United States for its restrictive policy with respect to trade with Communist China. Indeed, the only firm ally the United States has in this area is Nationalist China, who sees through the maze of unreality the hope of returning to the mainland.

Australia for what it is worth is solidly behind Great Britain, and hence fairly solidly behind the United States, but its value is limited.

South America and Canada have been solidly behind behind the United States, but rumblings of unrest, such as those occasioned by Vice-President Nixon's South American tour, evidence the lack of solidity in that area.

Obviously, the situation looks unfavorable, and it will look worse as long as the United States is dishonest with itself as well as with other nations.

It will be bad as long as the United States makes committments which are inconsistent with its own principles, and consequently cannot be kept.

It is high time that the United States awakened to the fact that the world is growing smaller, that a war can begun and terminated without another nation having brought into the conflict except the two promulgators of the conflict, and that this war can bring total destruction on the world.

It is high time also that the United States realized that the respect of all nations can bring more pressure to bear on the political situation, than can any alliance system built on the balance of power. The Russians have realized this and have used this to great insight to undercut the United States in everything it does. They have been successful, for they have sounded as if they were on the side of principle while the United States was on the side of expediency, and the further America compromises itself the the farther down it will go in the eyes of the nations of the world. The chances then will be great that Russia will be able to start a conflict that will be a popular war, a chance which it did not have after World War II, and indeed does not have now.

The United States has fired many missiles, including the one yesterday that may or may not hit the moon. In most cases the missiles have not hit their targets or have misfired at the start.

The element of preparation, of a world view, of intelligent planning has not been there in foreign policy heretofore. It can only be hoped that the United States will make sure every detail is checked, and correct aim is taken before it launches foreign policy again. It may even be too late.

Yes, we've done it! The Instant Sport Shirt is a reality. With the new Van Heusen Vantage Sport Shirts, all you do is add water . . . and presto . . . a fresh, handsome sport shirt springs to life before your very eyes. And a sport shirt that's all cotton! Is it a miracle? Is it a powder? Is it a pill? A grind? Read on.

You see, the new Van Heusen Vantage Sport Shirts work this way. First, you buy one (this is terribly important), then you wear it for a while. Then you remove it from your pampered body, drop it into the sink, and ADD WATER. In moments, a new sport shirt begins to appear, a sport shirt as fresh and new-looking as the one you bought in the store. Amazed, you remove it from the water, hang it up for a bit, and it's ready to wear. Friends will ask, "How do you manage to afford a new shirt every day?" You will answer, "I was left a huge sum of money by an aunt in Texas." And we will not divulge your secret!

The all cotton Van Heusen Vantage Sport Shirts that drip-dry so quickly (tumble-dry automatically, too) and wear so wonderfully are available in a wide range of checks, stripes and solids. All have sewn-in stays that can't get lost and keep your collar always neat. They cost a mere $5.00. (It's time you wrote home, anyhow.) And remember, all you need do is ADD WATER. If you haven't any water, we'll send some FREE. Write Phillips-Van Heusen Corp., 417 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

Too Many Mistakes To Win—Giese

By STEWART PHINIZY

It wasn't the Gamecocks' day to crow.

"We made too many mistakes out there today to win," said a dejected Warren Giese. The youthful South Carolina coach remarked, "Only in little burts did we look like a good team. Fumbles and penalties stopped us from every getting in motion a strong offensive drive."

Birds Never Got Close

This was never more in evidence than in the third quarter. Alex Hawkins, the speedy blond halfback, caught a pass from his running mate, King Dixon, and Hawkins raced to the NC 25 only to have the play called back because of a penalty. Moments later Hawkins moved the ball deep in Carolina territory, only to find the Gamecocks guilty of another infraction.

Someone remarked that he never would have guessed that one touchdown would have won the game.

"North Carolina had us defensed very well, this has always been a trademark of any team coached by Tatum," said Giese. "Our quarterback was continually hampered by their fine defensive line."

Praises Kicking

Giese was quick to remark that, "it was their kicking that kept us in a whole all day long."

"Cummings (Jack) and Smith (Wade) are two fine ballplayers. Smith is one of the finest backs we've seen this year," Giese added.

Giese paused for a minute and then went on "I don't mean to take anything away from the Carolina team, but when you make as many mistakes as we did, you just don't deserve to win."

"Mistakes, Mistakes," repeated Giese.

It just wasn't the Gamecocks day to crow.

Tatum Happy With Defense

By ELLIOTT COOPER

"You all want some cokes?" That was the way Jim Tatum started off his press conference after his team had just beaten South Carolina 6-0 for its first home victory of the season. No one wanted a drink except Jim himself, and after he had secured said beverage the post mortum got underway.

"Well fellows," Tatum began, "that didn't look much like pro offense. I was quite disappointed again in our offense." The Tar Heel coach qualified this statement by explaining that the defect was partly due to the changing of positions the backfield.

It Won't Happen Often

Commenting on the rather weak passing display Tatum stated, "I don't believe that you'll see Al Goldstein miss many passes like the one that went through his hands in the end zone." Instead of a touchdown for Al it was just another incompleted pass for quarterback Jack Cummings. "That was about the easiest chance he had had all season," the coach added.

When asked for an opinion of Wade Smith's play, Tatum quickly answered, "I couldn't increase my admiration for the boy if he had scored five touchdowns."

"South Carolina is a team which plays pro football. In playing them the idea is to keep 'em in the hole so they won't open up their offense." This was the reason Tatum gave as to why he chose to kickoff rather than receive after he had won the toss of the coin for the first time this year.

"My Biggest Regret"

"That was my biggest regret of the game," said Sunny Jim to a query concerning the pass play from Clements to Turlington which was good for a touchdown but was nullified by a Carolina holding penality. "If it had been good the play would have given him (Clements) a lot of added confidence."

With all the copy in the papers about the lonesome end formation, Tatum was quick to state that his flanker was far from being the lonesome end used by Army. Those who came to the game hoping to see Goldstein or Schroder refusing to go back into the huddle to get the signals, left the contest still hoping that maybe next week . . . . The Carolina coach said that his split end was simply a maneuver to make Alex Hawkins play a linebackers spot forcing John Saunders to be a defensive halfback.

DeCantis And Koes Hurt

Co-captain Moe DeCantis walked off the field with the game ball under his arms and a broken blood vessel above his ankle. The only other casuality of the contest hit Ron Koes who came down with a hip injury. Both boys, however, should be ready for homecoming next Saturday.

If you are wondering what the tent near the South Carolina bench was, here is the answer. In the tent is Warren Giese's closed circuit television. Would Tatum like to have a similar TV? "You bet," said the coach, "but they cost three thousand dollars you know."

Ever meet a Doubting Thomas?

A college senior once remarked to a Bell System interviewer: "A telephone career must be a mirage. I hear talk about fabulous training, fascinating work, grade-A job security, and rapid advancement in management. Sounds a bit too rosy. What's the real story?"

The interviewer knew mere talk wouldn't sell a skeptic. So he showed him some "profiles" of recent college graduates who had enjoyed that fabulous training, had worked at intriguing jobs, and had won early management promotions.

Our once-skeptical friend has been with the Bell System 3 years now—and is currently supervising the work of 55 people.

We've converted a host of Doubting Thomases. Whether doubtful or not, you'll learn a lot about rewarding telephone careers by talking with the Bell System interviewer when he visits your campus. New Election Law Clarified Before Entering Committee

By STAN FISHER

The election laws revision bill introduced last Thursday night in the Student Legislature has been clarified as the bill neared completion before going to the Legislature's Ways and Mean's Committee.

The proposed revisions are aimed at clarification of the Elections Board's position as an administrative organ and at attempting to provide for possible exceptions in the old laws.

Under the new laws all class officers, with the exception of the president, will be eliminated in the freshman, sophomore and junior classes as superfluous.

The Senior Class would still be permitted to elect a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman.

Other proposed changes deal with the election of editors of campus publications, the creation of new voting districts, revised candidacy qualifications, and rougher penalties for failure to submit records of financial expenditures.

The abolition of class officers was explained as resulting from a present arrangement in which nothing was expected of the class officers and nothing was done.

Erwin Fuller, speaking as a member of the special committee to revise the old laws, said, "We felt it was wrong to consider a student government position in such a light and that an office, to be meaningful, must render a definite service."

Suggested changes in voting districts would be as follows: (1) Joyner dormitory would be moved from Dorm Men's IV to Dorm Men's III;

(2) Creation of a new voting district — Dorm Men's VI — consisting of Avery, Parker, and Teague;

(3) Division of the existing Dorm Women's district. McIver, Alderman and Kenan would constitute Dorm Women's I, with the Nurses Dorm, Whitehead, Carr and Smith comprising Dorm Women's II;

(3) The corporate limits of the city of Chapel Hill would form the far boundaries for all town voting districts, with all students living outside the city limits voting in Town Men's IV district; (4) Town Men's IV would also include Victory Village and Glen Lennox and would vote in front of Woollen Gym. Formerly Town Men's IV consisted solely of Victory Village and voted there.

If passed, the revised election laws would require all elective editors of campus publications receive a majority of the votes cast rather than the present plurality.

Under the proposed legislation, candidates for student government offices would have to obtain a signed statement from the dean of their respective college stating that they are students in good standing," according to the University scholastic requirements and standards.

Fuller said that this clause would provide a more flexible arrangement as the University has a detailed policy as to what constitutes a "student in good standing."

"It takes Central Records nearly an entire semester to compile all the forms and records from the previous semester, so it is quite possible that they might not have the records for the fall semester up to date in time for spring elections. This would be impossible under the new proposal, because the dean's information is more accurate and more easily accessible," he explained further.

Another objective of the suggested changes would be to channel judicial questions to the appropriate council, namely the Student Council. This was done because the Student Constitution provides that the Student Council shall be responsible for hearing appeals concerning the election laws.

The Student Council would have the authority to decide what cases come under its authority and which would be passed on to the Honor councils.

Two other offices would be eliminated as elective by the general student body under the proposals. These would be the offices of NSA coordinator and the head cheerleader.

The new regulations would prohibit any campaign literature, personal solicitation and any form of commercialization within 50 feet of the ballot box. No candidate could serve as a poll tender in the district in which he was a candidate. Any violator of these rules regardless of sex, would be tried by the Student Council.

Any candidate who failed to attend a candidates' mass meeting would be fined $5 rather than the previous $1. The same amount of fine increase is included in the bill for a candidate who fails to submit a report of financial expenitures befre a deadline. An increase from $10 to $15 would be made in the fine for political party's failure to submit a report of financial expenditures before deadline.

Erwin Fuller said the objective of the revision committee was "trying to study the old laws, spotting all possible exceptions, and then providing for them. We have tried to work from exceptions in the past and areas in which there has been confusion and an ambiguity of wording."

The bill will go before the Ways and Means Committee this week and will probably be considered at the Student Legislature meeting Thursday night. However, the Ways and Means Committee may hold the bill until the following week for further discussion.

The special legislative committee for revising the campus election laws consists of the following members: Dave Biren, University Party floor leader; Rudy Edwards, Student Party floor leader; Bob Furtado, chairman of the Elections Board; ;John Minter, representative from the Elections Board; John Brooks, Legislature Parliamentarian; and legislative representatives Tom Kenan (UP) and Erwin Fuller (SP).

Law Revision Explanation Slated For SP

An explanation of the proposed election law revisions will be included in the program of the Student Party at its meeting tonight.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2.

John Brooks and Erwin Fuller will explain the election law revisions, also explaining the election districts and reapportionment of the legislative seats. Student Party Chairman Leon Holt has urged anyone interested in running for the Student Legislature to attend this meeting.

Also scheduled for the program is a discussion on changing the meeting night of the Student Party.

Campus Code Is Topic Of YMCA Workshop

"The Campus Coed — Does It Work?" will be the topic for discussion tonight at 5 p.m. at the Campus Social Problems Workshop in the Cabinet Room of the YMCA.

A representative from the IDC, the Women's Residence Council and the Women's and Men's Honor councils will be special guests of the Workshop.

The Workshop, which will be held every Tuesday, is open to all students.

Discussions concerning delinquency in dormitories, dormitory social activities and sorority and fraternity life will be held in future meetings.

'Operation Open-Mouth' Attracts Large Crowd

Hundreds of people submitted to examinations for oral cancer at the UNC School of Dentistry Friday, according to Dr. Marvin R. Evans, chairman ofthe Cancer Committee of the North Carolina State Dental Society.

The free clinic, which was co-sponsored by the American Cancer Society and the North Carolina Dental Society, was open to the public. Similar examinations were given at Duke and Watts Hospitals.

Dr. Evans said he was extremely pleased with the number of people who came to the clinic, the second one of its kind in the nation.

The importance of clinics of this kind was pointed out by Dr. Richard E. Richardson, one of the 50 dentists in Orange and Durham Counties who volunteered their services.

"If we could look into the mouth of every individual in North Carolina," he stated, "we could save approximately 100 lives a year."

The results of the project will be evaluated by the Dental Society to see if similiar state-wide clinics will be practical in the future.

Members of the Junior Service League, the Dental Auxiliary and UNC coeds helped with the clinic.

Phi Schedules Debate On School Closings

A debate on the closing of schools in Virginia and Arkansas will be the main order of business at tonight's meeting of the Phi.

The bill, which will be introduced by Rep. Bob Morely, roundly condemns the two states for their action. It takes the opsition that Virginia and Arkansas have denied their citizens a universally acknowledged right of man, public education.

Education is an indispensable requirement for the preservation of a democratic nation, although it is a function reserved to the individual states by the Constitution. The United States, faced with the loss of such a valuable asset as the schooling of its children, can hardly afford to stand idle.

Thus the most appropriate action for the states would certainly not be the closing of schools, since the federal government would be sure to act to prevent it.

Arguments along this line and many contrary arguments will be presented in what promises to be an interesting and informative debate. All students have been invited to attend the meeting at 8 p.m. on the fourth floor of New East Building.

Staff Meeting

An important meeting of The Daily Tar Heel staff will be held Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

All staff members have been urged to attend.

$15,000 SAF Budget Tentatively OKayed

A $15,000 budget for the Student Activities Fund was tentatively approved yesterday by the Student Board.

An increase in the auditor's salary is still under consideration.

Two other salary increases were appoved for employes of the Student Activities Fund. The Audit Board also approved the employment of Vera Prosper as a half-time clerk-typist.

An expected increase of nearly $800 in income was estimated as a result of $50,000 invested by the Student Activities Fund. The investment is made through the University Fiscal Officer from surpluses and funds not immediately needed.

In other action the audit board decided yesterday to clarify policy concerning personnel. At present the University Personnel Office is used as a guide. Under the new proposal overtime, sick leave, vacancies and other personnel problems of the Student Activities Fund will be handled by the Audit Board policy. The auditor will be given the discretionary power to shift funds for expenditures within the budget under the new policy.

Drinking Rules Will Be Topic Of Di Meeting

A bill advocating the abolition of the University drinking rules will be presented at the meeting of the Dialetic Senate tonight at 8 p.m.

The debating society which meets on the third floor of New West will discuss both the rule of the University trustees and the rule of the administration regarding drinking. The trustees' rule states that "the faculty is directed to discipline or dismiss from the University any student who is known to engage in drinking intoxication liquors."

The administration rule calls for no liquor in the dormitories, and no drinking in fraternities when girls are present. The Di bill states the rules are not enforced; therefore, they should be removed in order to remove the hypocracy involved in their existence.

The Dialectic Senate meeting will be open to all who way be interested in the bill.

Rocket Misses Moon's Pull; Plunges Into Pacific Ocean

By FRANCES WALTON

Early yesterday the rocket Pioneer returned to the earth and plunged into the Pacific, having only reached one third of its trip to the moon.

Dr. Bryce DeWitt of the Physics Dept. reported that the rocket failed to reach the moon because it never got near enough to be pulled into the moon's gravity.

He added that despite the initial failure of the rocket much valuable information concerning the distance the layer of intense radiation extends out from the earth. Previous estimates have been about three to four thousand miles.

DeWitt said this information is essential in sending man out into space because he is unable to live very long in intense radiation. Means must also be found to shoot man out of the radiation layer quickly.

DeWitt was host in January, 1957 to a World Conference on Gravitation held here. Physicists from all over the world met to work on the role of gravity in physics.

No discussion of moon-bound missiles as such was held. The physicists did talk about Einstein's theory of Relativity and the feasibility of space travel today. They concluded that such travel is possible, but present day equipment is too bulky.

DeWitt emphasized that some day in the future such travel will occur with a big enough artificial satellite and enough funds and know-how to make an experiment worth while.

University Party Organizing Tonight

An organizational meeting of the University Party will be held tonight in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial at 7:15.

Featured speaker will be Charles Bernard, acting director of admissions, who will talk on the role of student government and political parties.

Jack Lawing, party chairman, has urged all freshman and transfer students to attend before definitely becoming a member of eithe party.

Iso on the agenda will be several recommendations to be presented by the excutiv committee to the party members.

W. EDGAR GIFT

W. Edgar Gift Speaks Today On Placement

W. Edgar Gift, superintendent of personnel at Tennessee Eastman, will speak to senior and graduate men and women at a meeting sponsored by the Placement Service tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

Gift will discuss the job hunting problems facing seniors and graduate students.

His subject will be "Finding and Getting the Right Job."

Gift is on the board of directors of the Southern College Placement Officers Association.

J. M. Galloway, director of Placement, will explain how students can use the service most effectively. Officials urged all students seeking employment after graduation or military service to attend the meeting.

This program is the first of a series of three career meetings sponsored by the Placement Service.

G. M. SLATE

The following activities are scheduled for Graham Memorial today:

GMAB Executive Committee, 2-4 p.m., Grail Room; Young Republicans, 2-4 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; GMAB Recreation Committee, 4-5 p.m., Roland Parker Lounge No. 1; Debate Squad, 4-5:30 p.m., Roland Parker Lounge No. 2; Women's Residence Couuncil, 7-9 p.m., Grail Room; Student Party, 7-9 p.m., Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2; University Party Reception, 7-9 p.m., Rendezvous Room; Student Traffic Committee, 7-10 p.m. Woodhouse Conference Room.

'NOT JUST ANOTHER DJ STATION'

WUNC-FM Aiming For Top Programming

By JAMES HOLMES

Providing top quality programs, raising the cultural tone of North Carolina, and training students in radio work are the the goals of the WUNC adio staff for this coming year.

Promotion manager student Ken Alvord said: "We could be just another DJ station if we wanted to be. But one of our highest goals is to raise the cultural level of radio broadcasting, to give the people of North Carolina something that they want but can't get from other stations. I guess that's why so many of us sit down here up to eight hours a day spinning records and shouting ourselves hoarse into a mike."

This year, WUNC will be able to come closer to reaching that goal of public service than ever before in the 6 year history of the station. Station manager Jack Mayo pointed out that every day WUNC is on the air one hour longer than ever before. Also, he feels, a higher level of broadcasts in the form of classical music is being sent out. Many letters from all over the state have been received requesting more classical music, he said.

During the summer months the station had a complete technical and housing overhaul. Still a non-commercial FM radio station operating on 91.5 megacycles it is able to give a strong signal for 50 miles "although people regularly listen from as far away as the coast and the mountains."

Radio station WUNC is assigned on an FM band to the University of North Carolina by the Federal Communications Commission. Jim Szilagy, production manager, and station manager Alvord both think they would prefer broadcasting on AM, the band of commercial stations, if the FCC would allow it.

"One of our problems," said Alvord, "is that so few students are able to listen because they possess only AM radios. If we were on AM we would be able to reach a lot more people throughout the state as well as to have a closer contact with the student body."

"But then," he continued, "FM radio has the advantage of giving a better sound, which is important with the type of high level music program we give to our listeners. We are able to put out as good or better radio reception as any station in this area."

Jim Szilagy mentioned that the station is often considered as "educational". This is a little misleading, he said, as the station spends the majority of its broadcasting hours playing clasical music and presenting up-to-the-minute news, which is not educational in the strict sense of the broadcasting word.

"In fact," Szilagy said, "probably at 8. This features Norman Cordon our most popular program is 'Let's Listen to Opera' every Friday night who presents each opera with specific items of interest and a brief commentary. Mr. Cordon is North Carolina's first and only Metropolitan Opera star. Every week we get letters from people commenting on how much they enjoyed this program.

Some of the programs are taped by organizations off the UNC campus and distributed to stations thrugh such organizations as the National Association of Educational Broadcasting who may get them from such sources as the British and Canadian Broadcasting Systems. Some programs also result out of an idea by one of the WUNC staff members who is able to carry out experiments with it. This would be impossible under the conservative influence of commercial stations, Mr. Alvord said.

Jack Mayo said special emphasis is being given to the WUNC news service this year. Receiving off the AP wire and from information given by the university, they also will do much leg work and telephoning to give "a complete coverage of the news."

The staff of WUNC numbers the largest in the history of the station—76. About half of these are connected with the Department of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures, the other students being interested in constructive work in the radio field though they are in other departments.

Only one of the 76 is a faculty member, Mr. Don Knoepfler who is University Director of Radio and advisor to the WUNC staff. WUNC is therfore a student station, "operated in the interests of the state of North Carolina and its university."

None of the students are paid for their efforts.

"But," said Szilagy, "we are getting more experience operating this station ourselves than we would get in years of occupational radio work on the outside."

The station has no official budget but receives all funds from the RTVMP Department. No figure was given as to how much it requires for one year's operation.

"The two goals that we are always striving for," said Mr. Alvord, "are first to operate on strict and high professional standards, training students to these standards as their individual problems require, and second, to serve the state by providing high quality programs which the people can't receive anywhere else. As North Carolina's university station, that is our duty and goal."

Campus Messengers Fouled; Folks Not Reporting Moves

All students have been urged to make sure that their correct address is filed with Central Records. The students also have been urged to put their correct return address on all mail.

Ray Jefferies assistant to the dean of student affairs, said the post office is receiving many letters each day with the wrong address. Since the post office does not have a directory service, it does not look up the student's address and send him his mail.

Jefferies has pointed out that this is an extra burden for his office and asked for the students help in remedying this situation.

Students who have changed their address have been asked to file a change of address slip with Central Records so as to speed up mailing service.

Contest Prizewinner Predicts 9 Out Of 10

Frank Miller won the first Merchant's Football Contest in The Daily Tar Heel. Miller accurately predicted nine of the ten games which were in last week's contest.

Miller won a tie bar and cufflinks, a roll of black and white film, a cartoon of flashbulbs, a long playing record a free haircut, and a sport shirt.

A new contest will appear in tomorrow's paper with a new set of prizes.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Charles Thomas Davis, Carl Cecil Hendrickson, John Eric Parrish, Franklin Pope, Inman, James Ronald Shumate, John Wayne Parkin, Richard Lewis Collins, John Hastings Cutter and James Ray Welborn.

Dorm Law Revision

The new dormitory court program should be passed.

It embodies the necessary program for student government to carry out the necessary discipline to keep dormitories quiet when quiet is necessary, and to prevent chaos when that comes.

The dormitories have been placed when study is possible, recreation improbable, and quiet is non-existent.

The IDC's taking responsibility and trying to better the situation is commendable. However, it is the enforcement of the new system that counts.

The old system did not work. The new system may, but a close watch should be kept. The right to study is more fundamental in a university situation, than is student autonomy. Student autonomy is a good idea in all areas where student government serves an educational function, and where the system is effective in bringing the desired results. Without this, student government has no justification for existence.

Student government has been effective in many areas, however, with regard to dormitory management it has failed miserably. The new program offers hope. For the sake of student government in the dormitorites, this hope must be fulfilled. c

On Saturday's

The football team may have won Saturday, but in the stands the students lost. They lost the respect of anyone who watched them.

The number one affront was throwing the cardboard pieces down from the stands, endangering people in and out of the stands, to say nothnig of spoiling long periods of effort on the part of the Cardboard organization and damaging the property that they have produced.

This kind of conduct is reprehensible and there is no excuse. At a football game one can get quite enough outlets for one's emotions without being malicious. Student government had better take charge at the next game.

Military Science

Every institution in the country views for a program of military science. They offer students the program and reap the benefits of getting some of the brighter students in the country at their institution of higher learning.

Yet, despite the fact that UNC has a military science program, and despite the fact that students spend more than five hours a week at classes in the program, the University sees fit only to give half credit for Naval or Air Science courses taken. Thus, the progress toward a degree is impeded by taking the program.

It would behoove the University to get off the fence. If the University wants the program, then it should offer full hour credit for students who take the program in order that their course of study might not be impeded and that they are not forced to take an overload at some point in their curriculum. If they feel that the material covered is non-academic, then they should dispense with the program. At present partial credit gets students entering the program who withdraw due to academic deficiency. The problem merits attention.

Dorm Court Revisions Proposed

(The following are the proposed IDC court revisions which will be voted upon at Wednesday night's meeting of the Interdormitory Council. They are reprinted here so that dormitory residents will have a chance to talk to their representatives about these rules and court provisions before tomorrow's meeting.)

ARTICLE I

The name of this organization shall be the Men's Interdormitory Council Court. The shorter name of IDC Court is approved for use whenever no ambiguity results.

ARTICLE II

The purpose of this Court shall be to provide judicial justice in an effort to stimulate gentlemanly conduct among residents of men's dormitories.

ARTICLE III

The Student Constitution, Article II, Section 3, Sub-section d, provides that there shall be a Men's Interdormitory Council Court which "Shall have original jurisdiction in all cases involving infraction of dormitory rules of conduct as outlined in the By-Laws of the Men's Interdormitory Court and in all Cases involving damage to dormitory property.

ARTICLE IV

The Court shall be composed of the IDC Court per se, and the individual Dormitory Council Courts.

ARTICLE V

Section 1. Membership

a. The Men's Interdormitory Council Court shall be composed of seven (7) IDC members during the regular school session and five (5) members during the summer terms.

b. The members of the Court, except the Chairman and the Clerk, shall be elected by the Men's Interdormitory Council in the fall for a term of one year.

C. Any member of this Court may be removed by a two-thirds vote of the Court for inefficiency in carrying out his duties.

Section 2. Officers

a. The Chairman of the Court shall be elected by the Men's Interdormitory Council at the time of election of other officers of the IDC.

b. It shall be the duty of the Chairman to: (1) Call and preside at all meetings; (2) issue summonses to defendants and witnesses; (3) vote in decisions only to create or break a tie; (4) see that the Clerk submits proper information to The Daily Tar Heel; and (5) designate members of the IDC Court, per se, who shall attend the first hearings of the Dormitory Council Courts to assure that they are functioning properly, and to supply Dormitory Council members with all materials necessary for the performance of their duties.

b. The Clerk of the Court shall be elected by the Men's Interdormitory Council at the time of election of officers of the IDC.

It shall be the duty of the Clerk to: (1) notify Court members of all meetings, (2) record in all cases the testimony of the defendant and witnesses; (3) notify the Dean of Students, on forms provided for the purpose, of all actions taken by this court and the various Dormitory Council Courts; (4) request the Dean of Students to notify the Housing Office in any case of removal from one dormitory to another or suspension from dormitories; (5) submit to The Daily Tar Heel information for publishing cases including the place, time, offense, and sentence; and (6) turn in to the Chairman of the Rules Committee the names of any absentees from Court meetings.

Section 3. Procedure

a. A quorum of the Court shall consist of five (5) members in any case during the regular school session and four (4) members in any case during the summer session.

b. Every member present must vote in all decisions except in cases of admitted prejudice of a member. On such occasion he must notify the Chairman of the Court in advance and excuse himself from debate or vote on such case.

c. An offender must be notified of his right to appeal the decision of this Court at the time of the trial. Such appeal is to the Student Council, and notice of intention to appeal must be given to the Chairman of the Court within fourty-eight (48) hours after the verdict has been rendered. Appeal may be for the following reasons only: (1) A violation of the constitutional rights of the offender.

d. All members of this Court are sworn to secrecy regarding the testimony, verdicts, sentences, or other items connected with the procedure of any trial. Any violation will result in immediate removal from the Court.

e. A summons must be served on the accused at least forty-eight (48) hours before the time of the hearing.

f. Before each trial, the Chairman shall desig nate a Court Member to investigate the case thoroughly and present all evidence at the trial.

g. A majority of those voting shall be required to convict.

Section 4. Powers

a. Original Jurisdiction

This Court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases involving violations of the dormitory rules of conduct and the rules governing the use of University residence halls, when one or more of the defendants is not a resident of the dormitory in which the violation occurs, or when the defendants are officers of the dormitroy or members of the IDC. It shall not be necessary for the IDC Court to try cases which are judged too trivial in nature and which are uncontested by the offender. In such cases, the amount of damage shall be determined by the dormitory manager and shall be charged to the offender. The offender may appeal the adjustment of the dormitory manager to the IDC Court.

The IDC Court shall have original judisdiction in all cases occurring during the summer session.

b. Appellate Jurisdiction

This court shall hear appeals from the Dormitory Council Courts.

If, before a vote of the DCC is taken on a case, the DCC believes a violation to be serious enough to warrant such action, or if it is unable to make a decision, it may send a case directly to the IDC Court to be tried.

c. This Court shall have the power to supoena any dormitory resident as a witness. Any accused person or investigatin gmember will submit to the Chairman the names of those persons whom he would like to have called as witnesses, and the Chairman shall have such witnesses summoned.

d. The penalties which this Court may prescribe are: (1) a fine of not less than $2.00 nor more than $10.00; (2) official reprimand, which shall be recorded on the offender's University record; (3) permanent probation, during the first year of which the violator may not serve as a dormitory officer; (4) removal from one dormitory to another with permanent probation; (5) suspension from dormitories indefinitely for a period of at least one semester; (6) suspension from all dormitories with recommendation never to be re-admitted to a University Residence; and (7) All persons incurring any of these penalties, with the exception of penalty (1), shall in addition be fined not less than $2.00 nor more than $10.00.

e. This Court shall refer for trial to the appropriate Council all cases which it considers serious enough to warrant suspension from the University.

In all cases where probation shall have been prescribed, the provisions of this probation must be removed before the offender may receive a a degree from this University. All petitions for release from probationary provisions shall be directed to the Chairman of the Court, and shall bear the signature of two persons attesting that the petitioner has shown good behavior during the probationary period; one of these persons shall be an officer, advisor, or manager of the dormitory in which the petitioner resides. The Court shall review and rule on such petitions within 7 days after receipt by the Chairman.

Violation of probation will result in the expulsion from the dormitories for a period of time to be determined by the Court.

ARTICLE VI (Dormitory Rules)

The dormitory rules are those posted on the back of the room doors pertaining to conduct and use of Residence Halls.

ARTICLE VII Dormitory Council Courts (DCC)

Section 1. Membership

a. The DCC shall be composed of seven (7) members: the four executive officers of the dorm, and three members to be secured from the dorm roster before each Court session.

b. Chairman—the Vice-President of each dormitory shall be the chairman of his respective court. It shall be his duty to: (1) Call and preside at all trials; (2) isue summonses; (3) vote in decisions only to create or break a tie; and (4) secure the three temporary members in the following manner: An alphabetical roster of dorm residents shall be prepared. Each defendant and IDC Representative may exclude from jury duty any person whom he thinks will be prejudiced against him. From those names remaining, the top three names shall constitute the temporary DCC members for that Court session. This same procedure is to be followed before all subsequent trials. A resident shall not be required to serve at another court session until all residents have served.

c. Clerk—The secretary of each dorm shall be the Clerk of his DCC. It shall be his duty to: (1) record in all cases the testimony of the defendant and witnesses; (2) notify the IDC Court Clerk of all actions taken by the DCC; and (3) notify DCC members of all meetings.

d. Prosecutor—The IDC Representative of each dorm shall act as prosecutor. It shall be his duty to investigate all cases and present hsi findings to the Court. He shall have no vote in the trial.

Section 2. Procedure

a. Quorum. A quorum of the court shall consist of five (5) members in any case.

b. Every member present must vote in all decisions except in cases of admitted prejudice of a member. On such occasion he must notify the Chairman of the Court in advance and excuse himself from debate or vote on such Case.

c. An offender must be notified of his right to appeal the decision of this Court at the time of the trial. Such appeal is to the IDC Court, and notice of intention to appeal must be given to the Chairman of the Court within forty-eight (48) hours after the verdict has been rendered. Appeal may be for the following reasons only:

(1) A violation of the constitutional rights of the offender
(2) New evidence
(3) Insufficient evidence to convict
(4) Penalty not commensurate with the offense.

d. Trials may not be held within forty-eight (48) hours of the infraction without the consent of the defendant, nor shall they be held later than ninety-six (96) hours of the infraction (Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays are to be excluded).

e. A majority of those voting will be required to convict.

f. All members of this Court are sworn to secrecy regarding the testimony, verdicts, sentences, or other items connected with the procedure of any trial. Any violation will result in immediate removal from the Court.

Section 3. Powers

a. This court shall have original jurisdiction in all cases involving violations of the dormitory rules of conduct and the rules governing the use of University Residence halls except in those instances reserved to the IDC Court. It shall not be necessary for the DCC to try cases which are judged to be trivial in nature and which are uncontested by the offender. In such cases, the amount of damage shall be charged to the offender. The offender may appeal the adjustment of the dormitory manager to the DCC.

b. This Court shall have the power to enact those penalties listed under Article V, Section 4, sub-section d, of the By-Laws of the Men's Interdormitory Council Court.

c. In all cases where probation shall have been prescribed, the provisions of this probation must be removed before the offender may receive a degree from this University. All petitions for release from probationary provisions shall be directed to the Chairman of the IDC Court, and shall bear the signature of two persons attesting that the petitioner has shown good behavior during the probationary period; one of these persons shall be an officer, advisor, or manager of the dorm in which the petitioner resides. The IDC Court shall review and rule on such petitions within seven days after receipt by the Chairman.

Violation of probation will result in the expulsion from the dormitories for a perior of time to be determined by the Court.

ARTICLE VIII Dormitory Rules

The dorm rules are those posted on the back of the room doors pertaining to conduct and use of Residence Halls.

ARTICLE IX Amendments

These By-Laws may be amended by a two-thirds majority of the IDC Court, subject to the approval of the Men's Interdormitory Council.

"You Fellows Forget I Was Shanghaied"

Two Party System

Jeffrey Lawrence

The November congressional elections are approaching and campaign charges and countercharges have already begun to inundate the American people. Some will not bestir themselves from their television sets, but others will want to give careful consideration to the difficult problem of choosing a candidate who will best represent the country's intersts, both domestic and international.

The greatest confusion in the voter's mind stems from the fact that the words Democrat and Republican are laregly meaningless. Campaign oratory degenerates into stereotyped issues, those of the "in" party and the "out" party. The "ins" stand on the record and claim that the national interest is best served by a maintenance of the status quo. They chant such slogans as "two chickens in every pot" and "He kept us out out of war." The "outs" concentrate on the incompetence, extravagance, or corruption of the "ins." Their favorite tune is "Clean up the mess in Washington."

This is not to say that the parties have no political shadings. The Democrats are generally more tolerant of Labor than the Republicans, and they condone high farm price supports. The Republicans are more sympathetic to Big Business and display more isolationist tendencies than the Democrats.

But these shadings are unreliable as a guide to voting for two reasons, First, party policy can change drastically over a short period of time. Second, there are often wide splits within the party, both sectional and intra-state.

One outstanding example of a policy about-face is the shift in the Democratic attitude towards congressional appropriations. Before Sputnik and the emergence of Russia's ICBM they harangued the Administration because of its supposedly oversize budget. They made near-fatal slashes in Defense and Foreign Aid allotments. But after the Russian bonanza they were angered at the Administration's failure to keep America's missile defense on a par with those of the Communists. Futhermore, they were ready to pull the plugs out of the Treasury, tub to make up the deficit.

Just a few months ago the full extension of this shift was reached. The Democrats wanted to indulge in an anti-ression spending spree which would have been unequaled since New Deal days.

Of greater significance are splits within the parties themselves. The most obvious is the Democratic schism over Civil Rights. But the Republican are not free from these conflicts.

Many liberal Republicans support the farm policies of Ezra Taft Benson, feeling that price support cuts are a logical answer to the surplus problems. However, Mid-Western Republicans are crying for Benson's resignation because they do not agree with his policies and because he is a political liability.

The California gubernatorial election demonstrates that party disputes may be just as heated within a state as on a sectional level. The Republican candidates are William Knowland for governor and Goodwin Knight for senator. Since Knowland took a terrible drubbing from Democratic candidate Pat Brown in the cross-filing primary, the Republicans are in desperate need of unity if they are to have a chance in November. But no such unity exists. Knowland is campaigning on a vigorous anti-Labor platform, advocating a "right-to-work" law. Knight owes his former governorship largely to union support. So he is refusing to endorse Knowland's Labor stand, greatly weakening the Republican position.

When the voter goes to the polls in November he will find that the parties have no real identity. He will be reduced to playing personal rivalries, he can pick a group of men who can give the United States intelligent leadership through these times of crisis. In a situation where the voter often has nothing more to go on than a fleeting personal impression from a T.V. speech or vacuous campaign propaganda, this is extremely unlikely. Just a few months ago the full extension of the shift was reached,

A Letter

EDITOR:

North Carolina's Attorney General Malcolm B. Seawell is a credit to his state. He has told the state that "'massive resistance" means the massive closing of the public schools, and this solution to integration will not be used in North Carolina.

The Attorney General's first thought is the education of our children and not our prejudices. Secondly he "noted a fundamental point of law: The U. S. Constitution is the supreme law of the land and the U. S. Supreme Court is the final arbiter of that Constitution." He has spent his time wisely trying to educate the citizens of this state by his actions and words. For this he has been called a "Judas Iscariot" and other names unfit to be printed. Every champion of democracy has at one time or another been called simular names to no avail.

If the stand which Mr. Seawell has taken, as our Attorney General, is that of spokesman for this state, then we should be proud to be citizens of this state during this time of racial tension. If we are "saved" (so to speak) and refuse to sin no more, then we are a bright spot in an area of black prejudice. On the other hand, if we pretend to be "saved" and continue to sin then we are worse than any of our neighbors because of our "holier than thou" attitude.

This public stand at a time like this is commendable on the part of our Attorney General, but I question the source from whence it comes. It of course is the duty and responsibility of the Attorney General to interpret the laws of our state, and to propound the position of the state in these matters. But it would appear that "Luther-the-Lionhearted" would speak out in favor of the position which the Attorney General has taken, or tell him publicly that he has gone too far. I question whether this is not political expediency on the part of our "industry-finding, moderate" Governor. He appears to be afraid to speak in favor of the statement, possibly because it might alienate the convention votes of several states when his name is placed in nomination for the second place on the ticket as a southerner. Conversely he will not speak against the views of Mr. Seawell beacuse then he might loose his cloak of southrn moderation that he so ably has shrouded himself in.

It is time for the Governor to speak out in favor of the position taken by Mr. Seawell. The time has come when our colored folk are suspicious of statements on integration not issued by the head of the state. Mr. Seawell was justified the other night of accusing the NAACP of "irreparable harm" in the race relations and said its activities could result in closing of some North Carolina schools. Thurgood Marshall, NAACP general counsel, shot back the statement that it appeared to him that Seawell was contemplating closing down schools and was "looking for someone to blame." This is certainly a harsh statement to make about a man who refuses to use "massive resistance" by "massive closing of public school doors."

Therefore, now is the time for the Governor to speak out loud and clear so that all the people of the state and south, especially the so called "Patriots of N. C., the Kaspers, and the Thurgood Marshals can hear. Let the Governor tell them that we will never close our schools under pretense of protecting white from black. Tell them we will continue gradual integration until our prejudices are broken down into accepting the fact that "All men are created equal."

It has often been said that North Carolina is a valley of humility between two mountains of conceit. I wonder, Mr. Governor, how true this statement is?

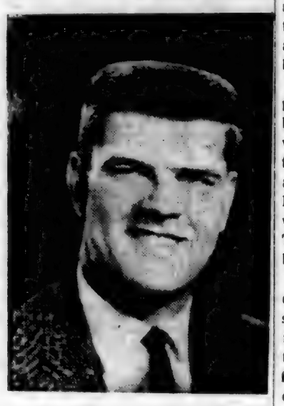
Quigg Returns To Carolina

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Joe Quigg, the handsome cager who gave Carolina its first National Basketball Championship, will return to the scene of his many triumphs today when he comes back to Chapel Hill to aid Frank McGuire and Dean Smith with the 1958 version of Tar Heel basketball.

Firmly imprinted on all Tar Heel fans' minds is the moment in Kansas City when Quigg calmly sunk two foul shots in the third overtime to pace Carolina to a 54-53 win over Kansas and the NCAA Basketball Championship.



JOE QUIGG . . . returns to UNC

Last year hard luck dogged the hustling Yankee in King McGuire's court when he suffered a broken right leg in an intra-squad game before the beginning of the season. The injury forced Quigg out for the entire season.

Th other blow came to Quigg when the conference ruled that he would be elibible only for the first semester of this year if he chose to play. The ruling was a fair one, as Quigg had played 5 semesters before and had only one left.

At this point joe signed with the professional New York Nnicker bockers, deciding not to play ball with the Tar Heels this year and to sign a pro contract while he had a chance to do so. Teammate Pete Brennan joined Quigg on the Knicks while another former Tar Heel, Tommy Kearns, signed with neighboring Syracuse.

But this fall lady luck again failed to come through with a favoring smile. Quigg's leg was removed from the cast last March, but continued workouts and treatments failed to bring it around. The knee didn't respond, and Quigg found himself unable to make the necessary turns and rebounds.

After three weeks in the Knicks' training camp at Stamford, Conn., New York finally was forced to put big Joe on the disabled list for an indefinite period.

"Losing Quigg for possibly the entire season is a tough break for us," said coach Fuzzy LeVane of the Knicks, "He was one of the best pro prospects I have seen in college basketball in recent years."

Then when coach Frank McGuire was in New York for the World Series and business matters, he got together with some of the Knicks officials and came up with the solution. Why not let Quigg return to Carolina; for two purposes. First, to help out with the coaching of the frosh and varsity squads, and second, to try to get his knee back into top shape.

So, although Quigg is still the property of the New York club, coach McGuire and athletic director Chuck Erickson have invited him back to Chapel Hill, scene of many former successes. Quigg arrives today from New York, and Carolina fans can look foward to seeing him on the bench with McGuire and Smith during the basketball games.

Once again the name of Joe Quigg will be associated with Carolina basketball. It couldn't happen to a nicer guy.

Maryland Game On TV

GREENSBORO (AP) — The first of four regional telecasts of Atlantic Coast Conference football games is scheduled Saturday.

ACC Commissioner Jim Weaver announced the Maryland-North Carolina contest at Chapel Hill will be the TV feature.

The regional game will be carried in Maryland, the Carolinas and parts of Tennessee and Georgia.

Weaver said dates of the other three gams for the regional hookup will be announced early in the week before the Saturday games. proceeds from telecasts are divided among the league's eight members.

Jaywalking was costly in the U.S. last year—2,600 were killed.

Wade Smith Is Athlete Of Week

Wade Smith, a 5-10 170-pound junior from Albemarle, who both set up and score Carolina's winning touchdowns Saturday is The Daily Tar Heel's Athlete of the Week.

Smith, who had been running well all season, really poured on the steam Saturday to turn in one of the finest performances of his career.

Afer South Carolina had punted the ball out to its own 44 Saturday, Smih carried on the first play for four yards. After a Cummings to Goldstein completion had given the Tar Heels a first down on the SC 27, Ed Lipski ran for three yards to the 24.

Scores Only To

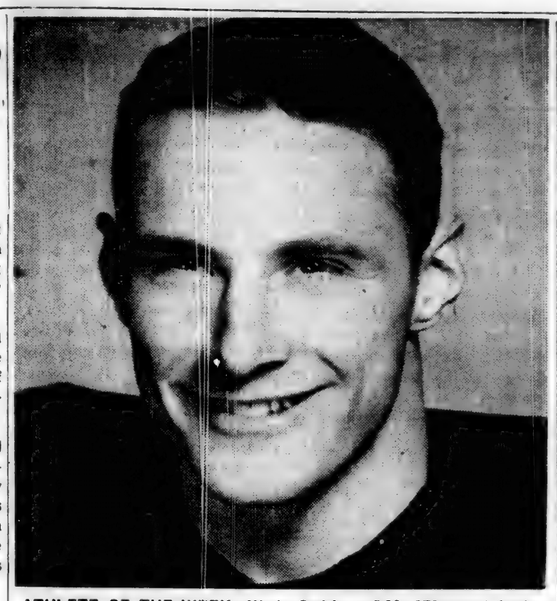
The Tar Heels broke out of the huddle into a split-T with an unbalanced line to the right on a 2nd and 7 situation. The ball went to Smith who shot off the left side (the weak side) and scooted to the one yard line before being pulled down from behind. On the very next play Smith cracked across left tackle for the touchdown, the only one scored in the contest.

In the last quarter, near the end of the game, Carolina gained the ball deep in its own territory. Once again it was Smih who broke loose for two long gains, one on a pass and one on a run, to cinch two first downs and the ball game.

Morehead Scholar

Smith got into nearly every game as a sophomore last year and built up a fine 2.3 rushing average. He is known on the team for his spirit and hustle. He is a Morehead Scholar and a member of Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity.

Speeding was blamed for 13,200 deaths on U. S. highways in 1957.



ATHLETE OF THE WEEK—Wade Smith, a 5-10, 170-pound junior halfback from Albemarle is Daily Tar Heel Athlete of the Week. Smith scored the winning touchdown against South Carolina.

ABOUT OUR 97¢ TREASURES

Perhaps the most neglected treasure in our Old Book Corner is the 97c shelf.
It is there that the really nice books go when you fellows, in your buying wisdom, decide that they aren't worth the market price. It is there that overlooked first editions, and really hard-to-get books first come within range ofthe canny sharp-shooter.
For example, as we write this, the 97c shelf contains a very good copy of Stuart Chase's MEXICO, a wonderful old period piece, called AMERICAN FEMALE POETS, and a nice copy of Markham's biography of Sir John Franklin, the Arctic explorer.
Perhaps there's real treasure for you there. Come in and check up, anyway.

IDC Court Revision Proposals To Have Fate Decided Tonight

Passage Of Bill To Put Two Courts In Operation

The Interdormitory Council meets tonight in special session to decide the fate of the dorm court revision proposals.

Instead of one IDC Court to try all violations of dorm rules, the court revision proposal calls for two types of courts. One is the IDC Court and the other type is the Dormitory Council Court (DCC) in each men's dorm.

If the bill is passed, the IDC Court will have original jurisdiction in cases where the violation of dorm rules was committed by a person residing in another dorm other than in the one where the violation took place and by dormitory officers.

For the most part, the IDC Court would have appellate jurisdiction. Membership on this court would be seven IDC members during the regular school session and five during the summer.

The significant part of the proposed revisions is the Dormitory Council Court. In each dorm, a DCC will have original jurisdiction over dorm rule infractions committed by residents of the particular dorm.

Membership on the DCC will consist of: the four executive officers of the dorm and three members of the dorm to be selected before each court session. These three dorm members will act as a jury.

In both the IDC Court and Dormitory Council Courts, decisions must come from a majority of those voting.

For the most part, the procedure for both courts will be the same.

Glen Watkins To Play Organ Tuesday Night

Glen E. Watkins, new faculty member of the UNC Music Dept., will make his first public appearance in Chapel Hill in an organ recital set for Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall.

London and Oxford as a Fulbright

The concert is the second on the Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Dept. The programs are given bi-monthly and are open to the public without admission charge.

Dr. Watkins was appointed to the Music Dept. faculty to succeed Dr. Jan Schinhan who retired in June. He comes to Chapel Hill from Southern Illinois where he was assistant professor and university organist from 1954 to 1958.

A graduate of the University of Michigan and the Eastman School of Music, Dr. Watkins has also studied with Nadia Boulanger in Fontainebleau. While in France he was an organ pupil of Rolande Falcinelli and Jean Langlais.

In addition to his studies in France, Watkins spent a year in London nad Oxford as a Fulbright scholar in musicology. At present he is working as co-editor of the Complete Works of Carol Gesualdo.

Dr. Watkins, who is now assistant professor in organ and theory at UNC, will play a varied program of music by German composers Buxtehude and Bach; French composers Daquin, Langlais and Dupre; and American musicians Searle Wright and Edmund Haines.

GM Board May Act On Employes

The Graham Memorial Board of Directors is expected to act today on recommendations from the Personnel Policy Committee concerning the status of student government employes.

This problem, according to Student Body President Don Furtado, could develop into a threat to student autonomy.

Generally, what must be decided today by the GM Board of Directors is: should these student government employes be subject to University control or student control.

But the decision expected today will be much more complex and detailed that a mere selection of who will control the employes.

Other business on the agenda for the Board of Directors includes: appointment of the Building, Budget and Space committees.

The Building Committee will work on recommendations for a new student union building.

Queen Contest Entries Must Be In By Tonight

Tonight is the deadline for submitting entries in the Homecoming Queen Contest.

Final plans for the contest have been released by University Club President Dave Jones.

Mrs. William C. Friday, wife of the Consolidated University president, will serve as hostess and as a judge for this year's contest.

Her home will be the scene of the judging Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The other judges for the contest are Mrs. Kay Kyser, Miss Margaret Carmichael, Ty Boyd and Don Furtado.

University Club President Jones, in announcing these plans, said, "I am grateful to Mrs. Friday for offering her home and her time. I am sure that UNC will have a charming queen this year because we already have a large slate of charming coeds."

The choice made by the five judges from among the entrants submitted by the men's dorms and fraternities will be announced Friday night at the Homecoming Dance. The dance, co-sponsored by GMAB and the University Club, will be held in Woollen Gym from 8 until 12.

The queen will be crowned and her court presented at halftime at the game Saturday afternoon.

What Is O.G.H. Said Related To Geetus Ads

What is it? A printed sign certainly, but what does it mean and where does it come from? All printing shops in Chapel Hill deny printing the signs. The Duplicating Dept. knows nothing about them.

The Buildings Dept. reports that no one has asked permission to hang the signs. The posting is therefore illegal.

An anonymous source said "O.G.H." is related to the "Geetus" ads that have been currently running in The Daily Tar Heel. The "Geetus," to appear Nov. 21, has been variously described as "unexplainable, something that must be experienced existentially" and "a new innovation."

Others have suggested that "O.G.H." has either to do with the problem of organization on campus or with "Our Great Homecoming."

SAYS SCHOOL OFFICIAL HERE

U. S., Russia Swap Education Theories

Russia's educational system is moving toward more freedom and recognition of individual differences, while the U. S. system heads toward greater rigidity and uniformity, a Virginia school official reported here Monday.

M. Lester Carper, superintendent of schools in Martinsville, Va., addressed the annual banquet of the Associated Public School Systems' zone meeting at UNC.

CAN'T BE MOLDED

Reporting on a month's tour of European schools which he made this summer with a Columbia University group, Carper reported that Russian educators realize now that an individual cannot arbitrarily be molded to step into just any occupation and perform satisfactorily.

After seveal decades of rigid classification, the Russians have begun to recognize the ability differences of the individual student, "event though he remains a pawn to serve the state," Carper said. Testing and grading systems are used in the schools along with counseling to guide youngsters to vocations or professions for which they have talent.

Carper added however that the basic aims of the USSR and American educational systems remain far apart: U. S. goals come from the people and work upward to the decision-makers, while in Russia the goals are decided upon at the top and then "push down to the people."

"We must recognize that the educational system in any society is aimed at (1) perpetuating that society, and (2) improving that society to help it meet its goals," Carper said.

British schools are the prime example of perpetuating the society, he said, while in Russia the principle of society improvement is foremost and in the U. S. development of the individual is considered first, as a means to help society's advancement.

Microscope Worth $400 Said Stolen From Hospital

A binocular type microscope worth $400 apparently was stolen Monday from the UNC Medical School.

The instrument—enclosed in a black wooden box—was reported taken from the north hall of the hospital. Hospital authorities valued the microscope at $400.

Local police had found nothing on the disappearance as of Tuesday afternoon.

Summer Gone Fall Crocuses In Arboretum

The fall-blooming crocuses are prolonging the summer at Coker Arboretum.

Over 2,500 bulbs of crocus zonatus which is a rose-lilac, free-blooming species, were planted August 6th and are at the height of their beauty right now.

Prof. C. Ritchie Bell, director of the Arboretum, points out that the autumn crocus is an innovation in keeping with the new botanical policy of having something blooming in all parts of the garden as a plant that blooms in the spring. But there are several species that are, at their best at the time the leaves begin to fall from most of the trees.

Bell said the fall crocuses came in the nick of time. Usually the thousands of spider lilies can be depended upon to add fall color along the paths of the Arboretum. However, the cold and rain of last winter have kept the lilies from blooming. The crocuses which come in the fall help to make up the deficiencies.

Coed Released From Hospital Snakebite O.K.

A UNC coed who suffered a poisonous snake-bite Thursday evening was released from Memorial Hospital Monday.

Sandra Carlton, a freshman dental hygenist from Lexington, was bitten when returning from supper with two classmates about 6:30 p.m. They were walking up the usual path through Kenan Woods used by students housed in Nurse's Dormitory when Sandra felt a sharp pain in her leg. The pain immediately became so severe that she couldn't walk.

Peter Foley, who happened to be nearby, placed a handkerchief tourniquet above the bite and rushed her to the emergency room of Memorial Hospital. Dr. Mauro, who administered emergency treatment, said Foley's quick action saved her life.

Hospital staff members said Thursday that the bite was definitely from a poisonous snake and from the size of the marks, appeared to be a large copperhead. None of the witness saw the reptile at the time nor has any sign of snakes been seen in the vicinity.

Plans Begun For Student And Merchants

Plans are under way to have a student representative present at the full meeting Monday night of the Chapel Hill Merchants Assn. Election of officers will be held at this meeting.

Anyone interested in the position has been asked to contact Miss Julia Satples, executive secretary of student government, to schedule an appointment with Student Body President Don Furtado.

Duties of the non-voting representative will be to keep the president and student body informed of plans and actions of the association.

The position does not require a knowledge of merchandising or accountaing, according to Furtado. But the student must possess the desire to be a link between the downtown merchants and UNC students.

N. C. Memorial Hospital Needs Child's Toys

Toys are needed for the children's playroom at N. C. Memorial Hospital.

Persons having toys that are no longer needed are urged to donate them to the hospital. Civic, religious and fraternal groups also are invited to participate in this project. Toys or money for the purchase of toys will be welcomed.

Individuals or groups who wish to make donations are asked to contact Mrs. Viola Jacobs at the hospital.

Staff Meeting

An important meeting of The Daily Tar Heel staff will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the newspaper office.

Monday Meetings Approved By SP

By STAN FISHER

The Student Party last night defeated a motion to change its regular meeting night from Monday to Tuesday by a 17-12 vote.

An announcement was made by Party Chairman Leon Holt that party nominations for legislature seats would begin next week. It was decided that next week's nominations would only be for dorm women's and dorm men's seats.

The party accepted a proposal from the Advisory Board urging all candidates for party nomination to the legislature to acquaint themselves with parliamentary procedure. This proposal also urged these candidates to present their desire and qualifications to the chairman of the Advisory Board as soon as possible.

Erwin Fuller explained the proposed election law revisions to the group.

The motion by Paul Woodard to change Student Party's meeting night to Tuesday met with much opposition from many of the party's members.

Student Body President Don Furtado spoke in favor of the proposed change, pointing out that several fraternities held their pledge class meetings on Monday night and that The Daily Tar Heel did not publish on Mondays which resulted in many students failing to hear of the meeting or forgetting to attend. He also pointed out that other organizations meeting on Tuesday night take advantage of SP decisions.

Roger Foushee in speaking against the proposal pointed out several conflicts that would result in the motion were passed, adding that he was not sure changing the meeting night would result in more fraternity men attending the meetings.

Foushee added that it wasn't so bad if other bodies copied SP ideas as long as thought initiated in the Student Party for the campus. As for the lack of Daily Tar Heel advance coverage, Foushee expressed the opinion that students would attend meetings regularly if they were made worthwhile.

Other party leaders spoke against the motion, most of whom expressed ideas and opinions in agreement with Foushee, before the final vote was called.

Erwin Fuller in the course of this explanation of election law revisions stated that he expected most discussion to arise from the abolishment of class offices with the exception of the class president, in the freshman, sophomore and junior classes.

Police Action Includes Four Arrests, Charges

Chapel Hill police action last weekend included the following arrests and charges:

Gerald G. Reynolds, 20, was charged with public drunkenness and resisting arrest. A second and separate charge was filed against Reynolds for malicious damage to property and forceable trespassing by breaking glass and entering a rest room at the University Service Station.

Lee M. Weinstein, 18, was charged with reckless driving Saturday.

John A. Knight, 18, was charged Sunday with tampering with an auto.

Peter Townsend, 18, was charged with speeding in a 20 miles-per-hour zone Sunday.

AIMS OF ENTIRE GROUP IMPORTANT

Bernard Speaks At UP Meeting

By DEE DANIELS

The purpose of a political party is to put into effect what it considers to be the principle aims of the group stressed Charles Bernard, acting director of admissions, at the first meeting of the University Party last night in the Rendevous Room at GM.

Mr. Bernard brought out that a political organization should have a central committee with the purpose of directing the whole group. "The main thing you want to do is to have your organization express the aims of the whole organization," he remarked.

Mentioning that many officers have lots of questions after they get into office he expressed the need for needling, but in the process some needlers are also necessary. So he continued, "Utilize every individual you can."

He further stated that a political party must be concerned with certain things, particularly the "candidates you propose and the issues you decide."

In selecting candidates, he said to be sure they are the best the party has to offer as "We don't want domination by one particular group." He said this is true in national politics as well as local.

Further business on the agenda was the presentation by the Executive Committee of a motion that the prerequisite of a petition signed by 25 persons for new members be dispensed with. It was decided to present this to Legislature.

John Minter gave a report on the changes made in the election laws.

Membership cards were distributed after the meeting and refreshments were served.

Covering The Campus

ALPHA EPSILON DATA

A meeting of Alpha Epsilon Delta, pre-med and pre-dent fraternity will be held Thursday in the chapter room at 7:30 p.m.

All members have been urged to attend.

MATH CLUB PROPOSED

The organization of a mathematics club will be discussed at a meeting today at 4 p.m. in room 320 Phillips.

Sponsored by Pi Mu Epsilon, mathematics fraternity, the meeting is open to all undergraduate majors in mathematics.

EVENING SKETCH CLASS

The evening sketch class conducted at Ackland Art Center is being divided into two sections due to the large registration, class teacher John Allcott reports.

In addition to the scheduled Wednesday night meeting, sketch sessions will be held also on Tuesday nights at 7 p.m. Interested persons may still contact the UNC Art Dept about participating in the class. Allcott is a professor of art in the department.

STUDENT WORSHIP SERVICE

The Campus Christian Council is sponsoring a student worship service each Wednesday from 5:30 to 5:45 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The services will be led by a different religious group on campus each week. The Baptist Student group is in charge of this afternoon's service.

EPISCOPAL COMMUNION

The Holy Eucharist will be celebrated and Holy Communion administered today at 5:30 p.m. at the Chapel of the Cross.

The celebration is for a corporate Communion for all Episcopal students; the Rev. Robert Insko, Episcopal priest, will be the celebrant.

Students, faculty, and townspeople are invited. All orthodox Christians are especially invited since there is no orthodox priest in Chapel Hill.

JOINT DUKE-UNC PHYSICS COLLOQUIUM

A joint Duke-UNC physics Colloquium will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in the Duke Physics Building.

Dr. Eugene Greuling will speak on "The Revolution in Beta Decay."

CHESS CLUB MEETING

The UNC Chess Club will meet tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounges I and II.

GLEE CLUB

Glee Club director Joel Carter said Tuesday that formal pictures of the club will be made Thursday night at 7:30 in Hill Hall auditorium.

He said dress for the picture will be tuxedoes and dark socks. All members of the Glee Club, old and new, have been urged to be present.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Sarah Marjorie Lewis, Tony Lynne Thompson, Margaret McLendan, Evangelos Stassinos, Charles Thomas Davis, Carl Cecil Hendrickson, John Erick Parrish, Franklin Pope Inman, Jr., James Ronald Shumate, John Wayne Partin, Michael Young, Richard Lewis Collins, Lawrence Harlan Snyder and James Ray Welborn.

Subversive Organizations

The University used to be a political hotbed. It used to be a place where Communism ran rampant and radical organizations sprang from the ground.

There is no such organizations currently present on the campus, and this is indicative of a bad state of affairs.

It wasn't very good for the campus to have the chairman of the North Carolina Communist Party running for president of the student body, but at the same time the unhealthy calm of no controversy, no radical thought, no stimulation to anything has pervaded the campus for too long.

It is indicative of a lack of thought rather than of a maturity that has sprung up upon the campus, for Saturday nights have shown no great change in the campus atmosphere.

People today are afraid to think outside of a limited framework, and although it would not be nice to have the University the hub of Southern Communism, it would be exceedingly beneficial to have people thinking and acting somewhat separate from the stolid Colonel Robert McCormick "Be American" framework.

The world is large. There are places for ideas that differ from the conventional, and one of the best places is a college campus. It is hoped that those with ideas will come out, discuss, and bring their ideas to the fore.

The campus has been dead too long. Let there be at least some life.

Election Laws

The Election Law Committee has come up with several important revisions of the election law, but in certain areas they have not revised enough.

In setting up two new districts, both for the growing female population and the expanding dormitory situation, the lawmakers saw ahead. It is up to the elections board to follow through to make the number of seats equitable with the population.

In abolishing the minor lower class officers, the committee did a commendable act, however, the abolition of all class officers except senior class president is what should be desired. An office for the sake of "prestige" is not an office at all, but a liability on the student electoral system. It is high time that these needless offices were gone.

The provision to revise the balloting for editor of The Daily Tar Heel and Yackety-Yack is a commendable one. As one who campaigned for office, the editor can say that it is exceedingly difficult to go through once to say nothing of a runoff, but it would provide for a definite majority, and make the mandate more sure.

The deletion of the offices of NSA coordinator and head cheerleader are also good additions, for neither one, for different reasons, has any claim to being an elected official. The first is the Student Government representative with NSA and thus clearly should reflect the viewpoint of the government in power, and the second's competence cannot be judged by a campaign in which handshaking and walking are the order of the day rather than cheering.

The fact that all violations of elections laws will be tried by one court is significant also. Not only does it make for a clear judicial procedure, but it also equates men and women on the basis that they should be equated in all judicial proceedings.

The main thing that the legislators left out was elimination of fall elections as both being a too great thorn in the side of the campus, and secondly at the present time an encouragement to inexperience. It is sincerely hoped, that through a one election system the legislature can assume a little more prominence, and that the Student Legislature can see fit to bring this about.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N. C., under the act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.

Neither Black Nor White . . . Mostly Shades Of Gray

Norman B. Smith

For many people the old God no longer holds any attraction, so new gods have come to take His place. They say He hasn't performed any miracles as He did in days gone by — He hasn't made the sun stand still nor caused the Red Sea to open up a passageway in recent centuries.

Oh, occasionally a lame man is cured by Oral Roberts or a Catholic woman swears she sees a small statue shedding tears, but for the most part people don't believe these thing really happen. Perception distorting phenomena arising from traumatic emotional experience is the usual categorization of such an event nowadays.

And the old God no longer delivers his chosen people from hunger by sending manna or making a few fishes and loaves feed a multitude. it now is scientifically done by complex systems of modern agriculture and commercial distribution. Nor does He stand by in time of war in the form of a mighty pillar of cloud and flame; nor does He clog the chariot wheels of the enemy. Instead the churning mushroom cloud of the man-made atomic bomb stands by and the treads of the tanks are clogged by expertly placed land mines

Out of a sort of reverance for their ancestors' beliefs many people still take an hour each week to go to God's church, and some of them even go as far as putting a dollar in the collection plate. But they don't have the feeling that God is right there with them as in olden times when He occupied the Ark of the Covenant or when His Son came to the Upper Room.

The new gods belong to the system of technological-materialistic worship. One of the chief deities of the system is the auto god, and since he is quite similar to the others in the group, I am going to mention some of his characteristics.

It is evident that the auto god is a valid deity for he is omnipresent in man's civilization especially in the United States where the new religion is the most highly developed. Our campus and town are typically filled with idols of the auto god. There are so many graven images of the god around here that strict parking regulations must be observed and some of his devotees mus: leave their idols as far as a half mile away for periods up to four or five hours while they work and attend classes.

Along Franklin Street alone there must be at least ten shrines where the images are fed, bathed, watered, and given cures for various maladies to which they are subject. On Franklin Street, too there are three cathedrals where new idols are distributed. About this time of the year religious activity becomes most pronounced at these places, for it is the month of the auto showing festival, celebrating the coming of the new models. Much mystery surrounds their planning and construction in the holy cities of Pontiac and Detroit before they are carefully wrapped, given a final blessing by the advertising agency, and shipped to our local cathedrals.

The auto god has many qualities attractive to worshippers. First of all, one need not revere it from afar or from out of sight as the worship of the old God required, foranyone can buy now and pay later in order to have his own true image of the deity. The idol has great physical beauty, also, in the form of dazzling chrome ornaments gleaming sets of double eyes, luxurious insides, magnificent bi-color and tri-color painted skins, stupendous fin-like hindquarters.

What's more this god isn't hesitant about giving physical manifestations that his worshippers' prayers have been heard. Their idols whisk them to a destination with unbelievable speed, in great comfort. The roaring pickup, purring smoothness on the road, lurching stop, tire-rending start are all at the fingertip control of the worshipper handling the dashboard prayer beads.

This is no static deity. It evolves brilliantly year by year in appearance and performance dictated by new tastes in "art" and new technological advances. There is none of the old cultural lag problem here.

This is no god serving a certain class or group. The ayrious sub dieties of Ford, Chevrolet, Cadillac, Dodge, are designed for every personality, every income level, every utilitarian purpose.

In return for all the benefits bestowed by the auto god, all the fulfillments of prayers, all the thrills and satisfactions, the worshipper in turn has very few responsibilities to his deity. He must, of course, give gifts of money to priests, shrine attendants, and others of the holy orders. And only occasionally must be given an arm or his sight or his life as a blood sacrifice when the auto god wills that there must be an accident.

Carter Jones Invites Cheerleading Hints

To The Student Body:

After the game Saturday many of my friends told me that I cheered a good game. Mostly praise was given for my assistants who had some novel ideas for different yells. My wife sat on the South Carolina side to see how the cheering sounded. She, too, was all compliments. These people were all close to me personally. Later in the evening a not-too-close friend who graduated last year told me that the yelling was lousy and it was no one else's fault but my own. He was the one that made me mad, but made me think—it was true. After a cheer (which only had half-hearted participation) I was content to sit down. That is poor on my part. I should get a good and genuine yell out of the crowd. I am no good at making serious talks about school spirit or yelling better. I lead the cheer—not cheer for five thousand. I need your help, the needs everyone's help in the form team needs your help, the school of spirit.

School spirit was buried years ago. A new spirit wants to be born. Let's let it! I want criticism, I need ideas. Any letters to the editor, or phone calls to me (7-2393) with suggestions would be greatly appreciated. Those who have written in the past complaining about school spirit can do something about it. Every Tuesday evening at 7:00 on the third floor of New West, the University Club has meetings. Anyone can come—you come with suggestions, ideas, and willingness to work for better school spirit.

Saturday anyone who has a novel yell who hasn't contacted me may come and lead it over the microphone as long as it is in good taste. School spirit, though intangible, can somehow be felt. Let's get it and give it to the best team, the University of North Carolina's team.

CARTER JONES
HEAD CHEERLEADER

ANTHONY WOLFF:

We have read with growing contempt and disgust your repeated literary efforts. It seems that you take a fiendish delight in criticizing people, literature and institutions that have gained prominence in their respective fields. A case in point is your attack on Billy Graham. It appears to us that you have gone too far in criticizing the opinions of a man more learned in matters of the Bible than you are. We remind you that Mr. Graham has a doctorate. We feel that your ridiculing of Mr. Graham's interpretation of the Bible was in poor taste. And may we remind you that it was you who likened Christ to a football player. The wolf is a animal that survives by preying on others. Could there be a connection?

If the quality of your work does not improve over the past attempts, we would like to recommend to the editor that you be dropped from the staff. Since we are required to pay for the paper, we deserve more than degrading comments from an egotistical boor. An advertisement placed in your column space would be more profitable and much more enlightening.

"You Wanta Take Another Look At That Front One?"

North Carolina Opposes Arkansas Resistance

Gerald W. Johnson

They don't like Faubus in North Carolina. On segregation, opinion is divided, but not on the Governor of Arkansas. A bull in the china shop is the mildest term they apply to him; and it is the stoutest segregationists who speak of him most bitterly. Faubus' clumsy blundering has upset their applecart.

To the historically-minded among the Tarheels the present situation has another tinge of bitterness. It is that "this is where we came in," feeling. In 1861 North Carolina, sandwiched between Virginia and South Carolina, was swept along into a war that a majority of the people of the state regarded with very little enthusiasm. Yet before it was over they had furnished one-fifth of all the Confederate troops and had suffered one-third of the casualties. She is in the middle again, and what it may cost this time is something that realistic Tarheels shudder to contemplate.

Unfortunately, the best leadership in the state is the very element that was hardest hit by the Court decisions. That leadership has now been deprived of one of its most effective weapons, which was a shrewd appeal to local pride. It has argued for many the relation of the races is diffi- years that while the problem of cult, nevertheless the brains and character of North Carolina are potentially equal to any problem that the state has to face. This was effective enough to open one field of opportunity after another to North Carolina Negroes; and as opportunities increased the economic and cultural level of the minority group steadily rose, and race Relations steadily improved.

In the matter of schools, for example, North Carolina more than 20 years ago began to shift the stress from "separate" to "equal" in the "separate but equal" doctrine. Several years ago the average salary of a Negro elementarf school teacher was actually higher than that of a white teacher because more of the Negro teachers had gained seniority and, to the extent that experience could make them so, were better teachers. This is certainly one reason for a curious development in Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Greensboro, the three largest cities in the state. Regardless of the legislature, these three cities abolished legal segregation—and a total of 13 Negroes transferred to white schools. Apparently the Negroes believe that there is something to be said for segregation as long as it is purely voluntary.

Nevertheless, the North Carolinians who have worked hardest to abolish second-class citizenship in the state find themselves brought up with a round turn by the Supreme Court decision, because their operative method was based wholly on an appeal to the sense of decency and fair play of the white majority in the state. Now the whole thing has been snatched out of their hands and their driving energy is stalled.

Perhaps it is their own fault. Perhaps they are to be blamed for not having made faster progress. Nevertheless, they had worked hard to make any progress, and their reward is to be denounced by both sides, by the Ku Klux element for moving at all and by the rest of the country for not moving faster. It is idle to expect them, blameworthy or not, to be gay and jocund in the circumstances.

So the stillness in Tarheelia, like that noted by Bruce Catton at Appomattox, must not be mistaken for an indication of indifference. It will not last long, and it may be followed by anything. A triumph of statecraft is within the range of possibility, and so is lunatic frenzy.

But this refers to the immediate succession, next week, or next year. The final, inevitable outcome was foreshadowed, I believe, in two remarks made, not by any political leader, but by a housewife who is a grandmother with most of her active life behind her, and by a young man just beginning the practice of law with his career ahead of him.

To both, the visitor had presented the argument that the South should devote itself to the task of raising the black 30 percent of its population, now below the national average in production as in nearly every other respect, nearer to the level of the rest of the country, which would raise the South from the bottom of all statistical tables to the median line and perhaps into the upper half; but this is not to be accomplisehd by segregation.

"Besides, it is not right," said the housewife.

On another day, at another place, the young lawyer listened to the argument. "True," said he, "but when all is said and done the basic thing is the moral flaw in segregation."

Neither of these people wields any wide public influence in the state But I hazard the prediction that time will prove that they voiced the final decision of North Carolina more clearly than any of the honorable gentlemen whose utterances command front-page top-of-column in the newspapers.

On Pledging

Last Saturday, several hundred men, made decisions to join one of the twenty-four campus social fraternities. In addition, others have and will make this certainly in the days ahead. But, one who seriously ponders this question may, want to ask himself, a few questions!

Is a Pledge Pin just a piece of metal with a splash of paint on it, or does it signify something special, something worth fighting for? What is the force that draws some or the nation's future political, economic and social experts into the Fraternity movement?

There must be something more than a party or two involved, or the mere meeting of people — because both can be obtained elsewhere! Or take the Life Membership which comes when one becomes a Brother in many of the fraternities; isn't this different, doesn't this signify something more than the receiving of a magazine in the mail?

As I see it, We've got a job to do! There are men coming into the campus fraternities from very diversified backgrounds — no two are alike, there may be similiarities, but that is as far as it goes. Out of these conditions it seems to me there are two possible results:

(1) A closely knit group of men with a common interest or

(2) A disorganized group meeting "for meals and social affairs."

It is my sincere belief that most of you hoped you would get into a closely knit group! Why? Because with unity comes strenght that can move mountains. A unified group will have the means to help one another, whether it be academically, socially, psychologically or later on after you leave the campus.

It is with a feeling of pride and humility that I now wear this symbol. I realize it places a great responsibility on my shoulders. The Brothers felt enough of me, with my human weaknesses, to extend an invitation to me to join them in a job which will not prove easy.

My goal is to show loyalty to the cause which unify's them and at the same time to continue successfully in this academic community.

This pin, which I may now wear, carries with it a challenge, and to that end I felt obligated to express my deep convictions. If the challenge is met successfully, I may become an active initiated member in one of the nations fraternal organizations.—Bob Leonard

On Rain

P. W. Carlton

The monsoon season has arrived at last. All encumbents are advised to accouter themselves with boots and raincoats immediately if not sooner.

This is the cry of the University officials. For every year at this time the rain clouds hold a convention over Chapel Hill. Up at Gimghoul one can watch the huge thunder heads rolling in and piling up towering pillers of cloud, as though some general were amassing his troops for a heavenly charge. The lightning flashes about, giving ominous tint to the atmosphere and all is deathly still. Eventually it is possible to see the little drops falling across the valley and then, with a rush of wind the observer is enveloped within a cloud of cooling softness. The drops play on the one's hat, touch the face gently and drop quietly onto the carpet of pine needles that ornament the ground.

There's somethnig beautiful about the rain. It mellows the personality, making people quiet nad congenial, especailly those few that furtively don slickers and boots, slyly stealing out to walk in the wetness.

There's something touching about the wonderful look of awe that enters a companion's face as she pauses to observe a crystally raindrop bending a green pine needle. She captures it with the tip of her finger and there it dances, shimmering proudly against the background of her white skin. Everything is clean and fresh.

We all grow tired of rain. It falls, and falls, plunking against the sodden ground leadenly. It can be a drug to industry if the individual isn't careful. The merchants rub their hands gleefully, anticipating a rise in the sale of rubber boots and life jackets. Students mysteriously disappear, sucked down by the treacherous mud of the arboretum. Up at Wilson Hill the hapless Zoology students succumb to Newton's law and slide downhill, employing as vehicle such portion of the anatomy as is convenient. Over in Davie the Botanists hack manfully with machetes in an attempt to hold back the jungle. Eventually the torper will get some of the weaker ones and they'll run screaming into the woods, hurling imprecations at whoever forgot to turn off the shower up there. We lose a lot of good students that way, mostly uninitiated frosh.

But eventually old Sol breaks through and the sullen overcast is replaced by the fleecy cumulo nimbus of fair weather. (Big words, eh?) The birds shake their feathery heads and burst into a slightly damp song, something about "The Day that the rain came down," hopping about with their feathers puffed up and looking for all the world like animated balls of fluff. The inmates emerge from Joyner Dorm, blinking at the light, their wan faces drawn and unshaven. They converse is shaky tone, scratching their jungle rot and staring at the unfamiliar sun. Some of the frosh have never seen the sun during their stay at the Hill.

Soon, however, all will be well. The mud dries up and life returns to normal. Chapel Hill is a lovely spot and all who live here grow to be a part of her. We sort of take root as the tropical fungus covers us and reaches for the soil. I like it here.

Letter From Olympus

We were invited to have coffee with Russell Link, chairman of Les Petites Musicales committee of GMAB, and headed straight for his second-story Rosemary Street apartment. Mr. Link, an Air Force veteran, greeted us and served us coffee in a black ivory container, which he explained had been bought in Africa in '53 and was a prized possession.

"The music committee depends entirely upon the taste and managerial drive of the chairman and members involved. Our purpose is to complement the musical activity of the campus, and to present music not offered by any other local series. We love music and want more of it.

"I dislike the descriptive title of our series of concerts, but it unites quite nicely the series of recitals we present, and it does have a certain tradition. For the most part we present our recitals in the Graham Memorial Lounge, which combines bad acoustics with relaxation and intimacy. Occasionally, we utilize Gerrard Hall and Hill Hall. When we are in Hill Hall, where intimacy is non-existant, we like to call our recital a "grand" petite musicale.

"We have a very limited budget, but we think we've met the challenge. This year we have a superb program. Our first program will be presented this Sunday evening in the Lounge. Ethel Casey, soprano from Raleigh, and Walter Golde, voice teacher, composer, and pianist from Chapel Hill, will present four Debussy song cycles. In December, Tom Rice and Peter Ford, from the local department of music, will present some of their own compositions. In February, Dr. Francis Hopper, Professor at the University of Louisville, Dr. Wilton Mason, from the faculty of our Music Department, and Effrim Fruchtmann, graduate student, will present a concert of Baroque music. In the spring we have the Pasquier Trio coming down from New York, and a brilliant young pianist from Philadelphia. Our most ambitious project, though, is an original opera by Tom Rice and myself, slated for production in late April and based on the Perseus-Medusa-Andromeda legend. Our schedule is not yet full, however. There are several concerts not definitely established as yet, but all in all it will be an exciting and busy year."

As we left Mr. Link, humming a Bartok melody, we thought thoughts of praise for his thankless work, and resolved to call Mr. Golde at our earliest possible moment. —C.L.

The Lowdown From Upstairs

By RUTH GORDON

Hi there . . . this is the start of a series of words from us to you. . . . We think "a word to the wise is sufficient" and we do think you are wise. Now it remains to be seen if you are wise enough to find your way up to RUTH GORDON FASHIONS, 122½ EAST MAIN STREET in DURHAM, to find the most exciting collection of clothes you have ever seen . . . and at prices that are downright dull (they are so reasonable) . . . We cater to all the hard-to-fit gals as well as the absolute normal — we carry hard-to-fit sizes (size 5's and so all the way up to TALL size 25 — equivalent to a 44). We have the most complete tall department in this part of the country . . .
Right now we are bragging about a 100% camel hair boycoat at $49.50 — unbelievable, but true . . . they say that "Time is Money" but in this case, "Space is Money" and we just ran out of space . . . so see you next week—in the meantime, just remember:

IN DURHAM

WAA Schedule Given For Week

By JACKIE WOMBLE

Intramural tournaments for coeds have begun down at the Women's Gym. Tennis and golf are already in progress. Sixty-one girls are participating in the tennis singles and thirty-six in the doubles matches. Marion Eells, last year's singles champion, is seeded one in the tennis singles. Also seeded in the singles are: Carolyn Vaught, Prissy Wrick. Seeded in the doubles matches are: Vaught and Spears; Arbogast and Posgate; McCrory and Wyrick; and Bolton and Thomas.

All singles matches must be played by Oct. 27, and the first and second rounds of the doubles should be completed by the same time. Girls should check the W.A.A. bulletin board for a schedule of matches. If scheduled matches are not played by the deadline, the matches will be forfeited.

Golf is also in progress, and an elimination "Scotch Foursome" tournament is being played. There are thirty girls participating.

Play in volleyball begins on October 21. Each girl is required to practice at least once before playing. Practice times are between four and six, now through October 17.

W.A.A. sports clubs are also in full swing now. The tennis club met Tuesday on the clay courts. Splash Club meets every Monday at 7. Tryouts will again be held for Splash Club next week, and all interested girls are urged to join. The Modern Dance Club has been divided into three groups:

1. Wednesday 6:15-7:45
2. Friday 2:15-3:30
3. Tuesday 4:00-5:15

All girls interested in becoming members of these clubs should come at the above times.

Frosh CC Opens Today

The 1958 edition of the Carolina freshman cross country team officially opens its seven meet schedule today when it takes on N. C. State at Raleigh.

The Tar Babies, who will be out this year to keep the state championship won by last year's crew, are packed with potential. Led by 1:56.4 half-miler David Peltz, who won the open division in the Cake Race, they appear headed for a great season.

Making the trip to Raleigh this afternoon will be Peltz, Rett Everett, Louis Sullivan, Fred Lavery, Dennis Rash, Tam Lefler, Larry Henry, Don Jeffries, Tommy Stack, and George Noel.

The meet is scheduled for 4:15 o'clock.

To The Ladies . . .

Although the old bookshop is usually slightly perfumed with tobacco, and we haven't had a lace doily in the joint since way back yonder, we resent the implication that ours is a strictly masculine oasis.

Ladies, we need you! We spend our lives trying to keep away from that atmosphere of whispers and fraudulent awe that is the curse of most bookshops, and nothing is so deadly a weapon against masculine hocuspocus as a well-rolled feminine eye.

Matter of fact, the shop is full of books to tempt you. In the old book corner, there's a biography of Mary Somerville — a right lively dame of yester-year who cavorted with scientists and men of letters. On the bargain table (at $1.39) there's a pile of Helen Hokinson's THERE ARE LADIES PRESENT, which is about as nice feminine wit as you'll ever find. And of course there is a table of humor, just made for two-some reading, and right near it a pile of THIS IS MY BELOVED.

So come see us, chick-a-biddy. You'll be surprised how well the smell of Chanel No. 5 mingles with that of old leather and pipe smoke!

G.M. Board Of Directors In Policy Freedom Fight

By CHUCK FLINNER

The Graham Memorial Board of Directors yesterday prepared to fight for freedom and autonomy in regard to GM policy.

The board moved to approach Chancellor William Aycock to reach an agreement which would provide the board with powers of hiring and firing and controling student government employes.

The board would assume the responsibilities as employer if the University would recognize the board as such. The move entails revocation of the North Carolina attorney general's opinion of May 1957.

Under the attorney general's opinion all full time employes of the Student Union are considered as employes of the University and paid by the University Personnel Office.

Under the present ruling Student Union employes are paid by the University which is in turn reimbursed by the Student Union with funds for that purpose. The Student Union lacks, however, the power of the employer, which it considers an infringement of its powers.

The Student Union would take the employer powers in return for assuming the employer responsibilities. These responsibilities include social security, retirement and other employe benefits. Independence could be maintained by the Graham Memorial if employer rights are regained. It is already independent in every other aspect, but is ultimately under the control of the chancellor.

In addition to a discussion of the proposed motion, the Board of Directors approved the following appointments to board committees:

Building Committee, John Brooks, William Gear, Bill Wilson, Jimmy Wallace, Don Furtado and Joel Fleishman, chairman;

Space Committee, Frank Elkins, Jason Saunders and Charlie Wilson, chairman; and Budget Committee, Pat Wall, John Sanders, Dr. Charles Henderson and Gary Greer, chairman.

Nine Elected To WR Council Tuesday Night

Women's Residence Council announced the election of nine new members to the Council at their meeting Tuesday night.

The junior representatives and their dorms are: Tony Brady, Alderman; Nancy Aubrey, Carr; Martha Wellins, McIver; Dona Thompson, Nurses' Dorm; Kay Boortz, Smith; Lu Ruth Sutton, Spencer; and Sally Ziegler, Whitehead. Diana Harmon is the new president of Whitehead, and Louise Crumbley is the Honor Council Coordinator.

Women's Residence Council also announced the election of five Council members to Women's Honor Council. These girls will alternate, there serving at a time on Honor Council. They are Lu Ruth Sutton, Diana Harmon, Katie Stewart, Sally Ziegler and Linda Howard.

Queen Candidates

Entrants in the Homecoming Queen contest have been requested to wear "dressy dresses" for the judging Friday at 3 p.m. in the home of Mrs. William C. Friday, according to University Club President Dave Jones.

At this contest the queen's court will be selected and announced. The identity of the queen will be revealed at Saturday's game.

Phi Condemns States' Acts In Schools

By STAN BLACK

Virginia and Arkansas were condemned by the Phi Society Tuesday night for their action in closing schools in the face of forced integration.

Rep. Bob Morely introduced the bill for the Ways and Means Committee, asserting that "the governors have defied the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States." He agreed that the responsibility of education lies with the states, "but this responsibility must be carried out in harmony with the Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

Former Phi President Jim Tolbert took issue with the portion of the bill condemning the states. "Help is what they need, not condemnation. The leaders of the South should get around a table with the President and the attorney general and thrash these things out."

"The people of Virginia and Arkansas are living in the past and must be re-educated in the values of freedom and equality," according to Rep. Clarence Simpson.

Rep. Bill Jackson said that the President should take the iniative in achieving an understanding with the Southern states to win popular acceptance of integration.

The control of government in the two states by minority groups was denounced by Rep. Eric Deaton. He said "the majority should reassert itself and comply with the court order."

After a brief flurry over an attempt to introduce a substitute bill, Jeffrey Lawrence made the point that segregated schools do not afford equal opportunities for Negroes. The schools should be integrated at once, he said.

In opposing the bill, Rep. Carl Matheson suggested that this is not the time to solve the problem. The Supreme Court should leave social problems like this one to the states.

Rep. Don Jacobs denied the right of any state to refuse public education to its children. "The South is not living in the days of the Confederacy any more."

When the issue came to a vote, it was passed four to three, with five abstentions. A vote of those present also passed the bill, nine to four.

New Parking Regulations Approaching

Parallel parking on West Franklin St. is moving nearer the business district.

The Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen Monday night passed an ordinance requiring parallel parking up to Mallette St. Parallel parking will be enforced between Roberson St. and the Colonial Press driveway on the North side of West Franklin.

On the South side of West Franklin parking between Berman Court and Mallette St. and between Roberson St. and Long Meadow Dairy drive way will be parallel.

Enforcement begins Oct. 20 and a $1 fine for violations will be imposed. The right wheels of parked automobiles must be no more than 12 inches from the curb.

Date Tickets Available For Maryland Game

Woollen Gym still has plenty of date tickets for the Maryland game Saturday, according to Student Body President Don Furtado.

The tickets are on sale at half price, $2.25.

Action Is Due On Five Bills In Legislature

Five bills await the action of the Student Legislature tonight as it convenes for its second meeting of the semester.

The meeting will be at 7:30 in the Phi Hall, 4th floor New East.

Bills awaiting legislative action are:

(1) A bill to establish a five member committee to study Lenoir Hall;

(2) A bill to establish the office of filing clerk of the Student Legislature;

(3) A proposal to appropriate funds for the purchase of typewriters for the Yackety Yack;

(4) A bill to establish a student government publication by the name of Playbill; and

(5) A proposal requesting a definite policy concerning student government publication of the Yackety Yack and the funds necessary for the enactment of such a policy.

Other measures currently slated for introduction tonight include a bill calling for the appropriation of funds to buy a TV set for Whitehead dorm and a request for the appropriation of funds for the room rent of a foreign student.

The election law revisions article introduced last week is not expected to come before the assembly tonight.

O.G.H!

JERROLD ORNE
. . . strife among the stacks?

No One Complains Says Library Chief

By PRINGLE PIPKIN AND CLARKE JONES

A committee of angry graduate students Wednesday demanded better service from the Wilson Library here.

The graduate group is pressing mainly for representation on the Student Library Committee, restoration of the graduate study and non-separation of reference facilities.

The committee is behind the O.G.H! signs that have appeared on the campus this week. The initials stand for "Orne UNC Librarian Jerrold Orne) Get Hot" or "Orne Go Home."

Large black letters saying "Orne, Go Home" were also printed on the wall of the graduate study room. They apparently were drawn by someone who has access to the room on the fifth level of the stacks.

About the study room restoration, the committee hotly demanded that Orne "bring back those sofas! Paint those walls. Prison cell atmosphere is not conducive to scholarship!"

Members of the committee are unidentified.

One graduate student, who did not wish to be identifided, explained that some were dissatisfied because the grad study had been redone without their consultation—specifically, the old lounge furniture had been removed and not replaced.

The splitting of the reference service had worked a hardship on some, the graduate student asserted. He described the people in the reference room as being "overloaded."

"We feel a great deal has been done arbitrarily," he claimed. The grad student was aware that there is a Student Library Committee but he added there is no grad student on it.

He suggested that the grad students should get together and put forth their demands as a body.

Dr. Orne said he had received no complaints from any students concerning the library. "If any student has a beef, I think the student committee should take care of it," he commented.

PLANS REPLACEMENT

He stated he plans to replace the old lounge furniture with proper furniture as rapidly as possible. "It is part of our plan to euip the library for the best possible use," he said.

"We are not going to police any single student or small group of students," he asserted. That should be a function of the students, he added.

He urged the students to take advantage of the student library committee. At his first meeting with the student Library committee he had suggested that a grad student be included.

He was disturbed by the O.G.H. signs and did not know where they were coming from.

Speaking Tuesday night, Larry Taylor, chairman of the library committee, said, "The committee is primarily to act as a link between the students and the library staff and to hear student complaints and suggestions."

He could not be reached for comment last night.

The committee is planning to hold open meetings beginning at 8 p.m., Tuesday, in room 315 in the Library.

SPECIFIC AIMS

The committee last night released a statement of its aims:

1. Graduate student representation on the student library committee.

2. Maintenance of the Public Documents Collection by a trained and qualified librarian.

3. Restoration of the graduate study.

4. Union Serial File for periodicals.

5. More thoughtful consideration about the needs of those who use the library most—the graduate student and faculty.

The group also said "Separation of reference facilities has led to inefficiency and confusion."

About the Union Serial File, the committee said "There is no central place where a student can find out where a periodical is located."

IDC Approves Revision Of Dormitory Judicials

The IDC last night in special session passed the new IDC court bylaws.

The new bylaws provide for individual dormitory courts, and a jury trial system.

The old IDC court would have jurisdiction over all cases on appeal from the dormitory courts and would have original jurisdiction over all cases in which a member of another dormitory violated a regulation in a dormitory not his own. The court will also try cases involving violations of rules by dormitory officers.

The dormitory court will consist of the four dormitory officers, with the vice president serving as chairman. The secretary will serve as clerk of the court, and the treasurer and president will be members.

The IDC representative will be the prosecuting attorney, and three dormitory residents taken in alphabetical order from the dormitory roster will serve as a jury.

The new court will start in effect after a training period by members of the IDC court.

The proposal includes a revision of the penalty system, eliminating unofficial reprimand as a punishment and substituting a $2-10 fine. For each penalty a resident suffers, he is liable to be fined by the court.

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, expressed his happiness at the council's action.

"Tonight, I feel we of the IDC have reached a milestone," Edwards said.

"For many years our court system has been meffective and impractical," he explained and added, "I feel the revised court will do much good by placing a court system in each dormitory under the supervision of the dormitory officers.'"

Visitation

The YM-YWCA Faculty Visitation Drive ends today. Faculty members have been urged to help the Y reach its $1,600 goal when a student volunteer contacts them.

Money from the drive will provide operating funds for the various services the Y undertakes.

Student representatives have been asked to bring the contributions to Gerrard Hall by 4:30 p.m.

United Nations To Be Honored October 24th

Mayor Oliver K. Cornwell has proclaimed Friday, Oct. 24, as United Nations Day, and has officially urged all citizens of Chapel Hill to participate fully in the observance.

The U.N. General Assembly has set aside this day, which is the anniversary of the United Nations Charter, as a time to make known the purposes, principles and accomplishments of the world-wide organization.

Community programs have been planned to provide a better understanding of the U.N.'s aims, problems and accomplishments.

Outing Club Formation Being Attempted

By STEWART PHINIZY

Carolina may have an Outing Club after tonight.

Those interested in such a club will meet tonight at 7:30 in room 304 of Woollen Gym.

Walter Rabb, head of the Intramural Department, said, "The meeting is an effort to bring together all students and faculty members, who are interested in outdoor recreation. If response is sufficient to warrant forming an Outing Club, we will take the necessary steps to formerly organize such a club. It's a wonderful opportunity for the entire student body to have a chance to participate in some form of outdoor recreation."

"We have realized that for a number of years there has been a tremendous amount of interest among the student body in the general area of outdoor recreation," Rabb continued.

Three years ago the Intramural Department started a Rod Gun and Field Meet because of campus interest in hunting and fishing. In the past there has always been a number of participants who have wanted to continue activities related to hunting and fishing, Rabb added.

Rabb pointed out that it is not the intention of the Intramural Department to run the club, but only to sponsor it and see that the people that want such a club are brought together.

Rabb said that there would probably be two or three major projects annually.

Such projects as weekend camping and boating trips to the University property on Carr Lake, weekend trips to the beach for surf casting, camping and hiking trips to the mountains in spring and autumn, and bow hunting deer shoots would be features of the club's annual program.

There is a National Organization of University Outing Clubs at the present time. It is the Intercollegiate Outing Club Association, formed in 1932. Many Universities in the east and south belong to the IOCA, Rabb added.

According to Rabb should an Outing Club become a reality at Carolina, it would most likely become an affiliate with the Intercollegiate Outing Club Association.

Open Room Elections Being Held In Dorms

Elections are currently being held in all but three men's dormitories to determine if the residents want to open their social rooms to visiting coeds three days a week.

Interdormitory Council President Rudy Edwards said yesterday election results will be released the first of next week.

The only dorms not voting are Old East, Old West and Battle-Vance-Pettigrew. These dorms do not have physical facilities for social rooms, Edwards said.

Freshman Forum Featuring Jazz

Ed Crow and his Combo will be featured at the Freshman Forum tonight at 6 p.m. upstairs in Lenoir Hall. After the entertainment Jim Carse will comment on jazz.

After the program there will be discussion concerning the New York trip for freshmen. Everyone planning to take the trip must pay a $5 registration fee which will be deducted from the total cost of $30. Tonight is the last time the fee may be paid.

As there are a limited number of seats on the bus, registrations for the trip will be taken on a first come, first served basis.

All freshmen are invited to attend the meeting. Trays should not be taken to the meeting.

Drinking Rule Revocation Asked By Di

By ELLEN STEIN

The Dialectic Senate Tuesday night unanimously passed a bill advocating the revocation of the "drinking rule" originally issued by the trustees.

A bill favoring the abolition of the Campus Code was also proposed on the Senate floor. Because the drinking rule is associated with the Campus Code the Senate wished to determine its value. The second bill was not voted on and will be next week's topic for discussion.

Senator Curtis Gans illuminated the unjust and hypocritical character of the "drinking rule" saying. "Rules within a society place limits on drinking but people have no authority to control another's individual right to take a drink."

President Gary Greer spoke negatively on the bill. He stated that drinking was morally wrong, and it is only the liberal who engages in this pastime. "The liberal," said Greer, "is a man in favor of doing all thing that will destory the things from which today's world is made." He said, "That general group of freethinkers are advocating in this instant the one thing that will direct man straight to hellfire. This thing is contrary to the will of the Lord."

Senator Fredrick Wolfer said, "The code functions as a tradition only and unless it is expanded to have some finite meaning it should be thrown out."

Senator Bill Porter spoke on behalf of the Campus Code. He mentioned the elaborate set of rule that once governed Carolina and the resentment they aroused. This resentment, he said, became an incentive for the formation of the Di and the Phi. Afterwards the Student Council summarized what they considered to be good conduct and put into effect the Campus Code.

Navy Holding Officer Plan Interviews

Interviews concerning the Navy's commissioned officer programs will be held today and Friday at YMCA building. A team of representatives from the office of Naval Procurement of Raleigh will conduct the interviews.

There are openings available for assignment in aviation, general line, and in numerous specialty categories. Most of the programs are available only to the college seniors who expect to graduate; however, undergraduates who have completed 60 hours of accredited college work may apply for appointment as naval aviation cadet.

On Hodges

The Governor of the State of North Carolina has opened his mouth and shoved his foot in it. In his statement on Attorney-General Malcolm Seawell's speeches on the race question, Gov. Hodges has denied the truth of Seawell's statements and by implication his right to say them.

The Governor not only has denied the right of free speech to his subordinates, which he would so much cherish himself, but he has also given tacit consent to acts of violence and massive resistane to the law.

The Governor is making himself out to be just another Southern politician, instead of a great leader in the south for the cause of legality. He has chastised a man who, by his actions during the past several months, has proved himself of such a stature that Hodges could not touch.

The Governor ought to beware of denial of the rights of individuals, for if he persists those rights may be denied him. Instead he ought to encourage every citizen of the state to be critical of the environment here and in other areas, so that change can be effective and the right to speak will never be voided.

Malcolm Seawell has made many courageous speeches, it is hoped that neither a narrow-minded governor, nor the hope for higher office and the necessity for political expediency will soften his tongue. Good men are hard to find, the Hodges' are expendable.

Compulsion

A couple of nights ago a sorority voted to be a member of the University Party, following on the heels of several sororities which reached this decision before.

That sororities are members of a party is not an issue, but when pledge classes are required to go to a particular party, and when at nomination time some sororities require their membership to go for fear of fines, then the compulsion to go to a particular party meeting is a denial of individual freedom.

Political allegiance is an individual decision, and should not be regulated by the dictates of any group. This is clearly guaranteed in the constitution, no matter how much a group like a sorority would like to deny this.

This freedom of action should be available to all members, and anyone who fines someone for not attending a particular party meeting ought to be subject to disciplinary action.

It is high time someone realized that freedom is an individual matter, and that the individual's right to thought and allegiance must be protected. No sorority should be so great as to place a taboo on individual viewpoint. This compulsion is reprehensible. Participation in student government is a good thing. Participationby force is not.

Grad Students

Admissions Director Charles Bernard presented a problem last night, but was as far away from the solution as he could be.

He pointed to the graduate student participation in student government as being small, but complained about grad student control of student government, and said that this should be stopped.

The graduate student is indeed a problem, but not in the way that Mr. Bernard mentioned. Indeed, the graduate student has been too much left out of student government and has abdicated his right to leadership in a climate which needs his leadership.

The question is not how to rid student government of graduate students, but how to get more graduate students into student government to assert mature leadership, so that student government may have more respect than it does as a government of sophomores and juniors which has supposed jurisdiction over the entire campus, but in reality materially affects maybe two hundred or three hundred.

The problem is to urge graduate balloting and representatives to have graduate students incorporated into the framework of student government, and to make student government the respected government of all students. This is the challenge that faces both parties.

A Letter

EDITOR:

After reading such an editorial as the one you wrote in last Sunday's DTH, I am glad that the DTH has no more coverage and influence than it does. I am referring to your discourse on "Power Politics" and its outlived usefulness. You have maintained that our foreign policy should be based more upon moral principles and international law. If the U. S. policy makers were to accept your views there would be a celebration party in the Kremlin, the likes of which we have never seen.

Please allow me to state my views on this matter. Sir, haven't you looked around at the various troubled spots in the world and seen what has happened in the past and what is likely to happen in the future? You seem well read, but you seem to think that we are living in a vacuum.

Power Politics has never been more important than it is today. I thought the extreme idealists had faded away with the passing of Wilson. We must realize that in international relations that the "law of the jungle" has always been and always will be supreme as long as we have sovereign states. Competition is vicious and ruthless among dynamic peoples in a world that is changing every day.

Every nation, including Hitler's Germany and Japan, has always rationalized its actions. Witness the British and their "white man's burden" and the Japanese and their "liberation" of the Chinese before WW II. To even seriously discuss moral principles in the international arena is useless because each nation has a set of moral principles which usually differs from those of other states. The one common denominator which all nations understand and are forced to respect is armed might. It is not easy to determine "right" and "wrong" of actions between nations. Right and wrong are subjective concepts. If ever the saying that "might makes right" was true, it is so in international politics. We can only deal with facts and armed might is a definate fact which is accepted by all nations.

Our problem of trying to apply moral principles to international affairs probably stems from the relative success we have had on the domestic scene using these methods. Within the U. S. we all, for the most part, agree on the same moral principles. This is not the case in international affairs. No nation agrees, unless by agreeing that nation's interests won't suffer. The whole principle of international law is based upon principles which states have already agreed to accept. International law deals with matters which have already been disposed of to the general satisfaction of the parties concerned. International law has no binding force unless a nation wants to recognize it as so.

I am reminded of the story of the group of international lawyers who meet at the Hague to draw up a set of nice and concise rules under which the expected war with Germany would be fought. The one principle to which all of them agreed was that open, civilian populations would not be bombed or shelled. During the meeting the German airforce sent a rain of bombs down upon the court itself.

Who was morally right when the Jews pushed the Arabs out of Palestine? Who would be right if the Arabs, by armed might, forced their way back into Israel? Both Israel and the Arabs realize that this is not a question of Morals, but one of who is the stronger. Only armed force is respected in the final outcome of any change.

And so until we have one world government, which all nations must obey, might will continue to make right. Of course every nation realizes the value of public opinion and tries to shape it to its aims. However, no nation has ever let adverse world opinion prevent it from obtaining some objective which it wanted very badly — if it had the armed might to carry out its wishes.

In a way power politics greatly simplifies matters which are very complex at best. All nations can tell power when they see it and all more or less realize where they stand on the totempole. Things may not be as agreeable as we would have them, but it is less frustrating when we know where we stand, even it isn't on top.

Once upon a time there was a group of people who sincerely felt that things could be better. They were a freedom-loving bunch from various backgrounds. Nobody thought much about the backgrounds then, because everybody was too busy making plans.

And then one bright morning, they set out from home and never came back.

A few years later, a visitor from home went out to find them and he came back home with stories of the way they had made the corn grow on the land and the way they stuck together against anything that threatened them and the way they respected each other just as if they were all kings or something.

Soon other visitors went out to see for themselves and a lot of them didn't come back either. After a considerable number of years all these people formed a small civilization. It was then that they decided to break off completely with their former home and to establish ground rules for their own area.

A small war was fought between the folks who stayed home and these people who had left because the folks at home wanted to retain some share in the great harvests and the rapid growth of the new civilization. But the folks at home lost and the new civilization shrugged off its last shackle. A paper was signed by all the leaders declaring that all the people in this new area were to be regarded as individuals because they were born that way.

And the new civilization grew and grew and grew in size and strength and spirit. The people fought a few more wars and made more explicit rules for the governing of their territory. In all these rules the precedent of individual pride and respect always ranked first.

As the civilization grew, its industry and agriculture increased by leaps and bounds. One section of the area was more suited for industry, while the other section was agriculturally finer. The people in the agricultural area used serfs to til the land. These serfs belonged to the owners of the land and were not paid in wages for their work. They lived on the land, just like tenant farmers do today.

Then, one day the two sections of this civilization came to blows because the industrial section felt that the agricultural section was violating the rules of the pact. The agricultural section did not feel this way, because their whole system had come to depend on the serf man. So an internal war was fought in which the industrial section emerged the victor and the serf man went free. However, the gash was deep between the two sections and it bled profusely for a long, long time.

But then other crises and other wars came and the two sections merged to stand against the enemies. By this time the civilization had developed a name as sort of a haven for outcasts and people who weren't welcome elsewhere because their thoughts conflicted with the thoughts of the area in which they lived.

And so when these outcasts possibly could, they would set out from their homes and go to the new place where backgrounds didn't matter because everybody came from a different one. For instance, there was a scientist in one place who happened to belong to the wrong group. This group was very much disliked by the leader at that time in that place. So the scientist came to the new civilization and gave to it all his great findings and research and died right there in a civilization that had accepted him.

There were many men like the scientist who found love and acceptance in this place we are talking about.

And then, all of a sudden, too many years passed and the memory of the first bright days of the civilization were forgotten. And the people began fighting among themselves and classifying each other in groups. They became very background conscious in this land of no backgrounds. Some of the children were not allowed to go to certain schools because their grandfathers had been serf men.

One day, some people blew up a building that meant very much to the group that gathered there. This group happened to be the same one that the scientist belonged to. A few days later some people blew up another building that belonged to the same group.

It happened that a visitor was visiting in this new civilization which had suddenly aged quite a bit. He watched the people carrying on about who was to go to what school; he watched them classifying each other; he watched them blowing up buildings.

And he came back home with many stories, and everybody sighed and said "Isn't that a shame. I'm glad I don't live over there after all."

Letter From Olympus

A hasty determination of our financial situation unhappily revealed that we were forced to forego our usual coffee break. Who says the recession is over? Suddenly we remember the University Party Reception in Graham Memorial, and the assured refreshments. A few minutes later found us poised to enter the Rendezvous Room.

Much to our chagrin, the meeting had already started, but, dauntless in love and war and politics, we sauntered in and fortified ourselves near the door. Stoically, we prepared to suffer out the duration. But someone dropped an ashtray and the meeting was over! Joining, the milling throng already congregated around the refreshment table, we at last found surcease from thirst.

But the coke was bitter. The bitterness was not concrete, it was intangible — the intangible bitterness of disgust. We did not feel guilt, no, we are contributors to the University Party's substantial coffers. The object of our disgust was the Party itself. The UP has forsaken its objective of providing an organ through which the students may express their views and, after discussing them thoroughly, come to intelligent conclusions. A freshman asked us, "What was the purpose of this meeting? The next meeting is a nominating session. Nominating for what, and why?" How the UP can blithely ignore the proposed IDC Court revisions, the deferred rush question, dormitory financing, a new student union, faculty salaries, dormitory visiting agreements, the university drinking rules, the decline in student stimulation, the Russian revolution, etc. is beyond our comprehension.

According to present policy, the UP serves one purpose: nominating candidates. Even this singular goal is not accomplished in the best interests of the student body. Whether or not the candidates themselves are outstanding is a matter of individual consideration. But the method of choosing the candidates is ludicrous. More than three hundred students are members of the University Party, yet, last spring, when nominating proceedures for the four top Student Body officers were in progress, three of the four were nominated by acclamation. Certainly there was more than one person out of well over three hundred that was capable of being Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer of the student body. Was there mation, or was some capable candidate's ambition stifled by the party?—C.L.

Probably the one group in history that has been the most segregated, the most persecuted, the most ridiculed, and the most despised is that group called WOMEN!

This same group has also been the most idolized, the most worshipped, the most respected, and the most sought after throughout the history of mankind.

Would it be correct to call this situation paradoxical?

Paradoxical or not, the fact remains that since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution (1750's to 1800's) women have been asserting themselves more and more and have acheived legal and occupational equality.

From time immemorial man has treated women as inferior, weak, and subservient. This has been emphasized through the teachings of St. Paul and maintained by Christianity.

Furthermore, man convinced woman that her inferiority was the true nature of things. And today, many women still believe it!! Poor souls.

Through woman's drive towards emancipation during the past 150 years, she has proven that not only is man not superior to woman, but that in many ways woman is actually superior to man!

This superiority lies in the biological realm and it has disproven once and for always many of the old theories regarding the supposedly inferior status of woman.

The answer to the superior-inferior dichotomy should be obvious to any person with AWARENESS: that is, Aware of life other than that in their own small circle.

Woman is an equal, but she has not been given the opportunity to prove it completely.

The majority of men only pay lip-service to the equality of woman (guaranteed by our Constitution). Hypocrisy of this sort has left woman in a frustrating dilemma.

This dilemma facing the woman of today is how to complete her emancipation from the chains of the male ego!

This is not an easy task.

Woman has gained equality in both the division of labor and in her legal position. But she still remain chained to a world which is commandeered by masculine ideology.

Woman has gained what freedom she has by slowly squeezing into a ready-made culture. She has had no share in the formation of the government, law, science, morality, religion, or in the conventions.

Since she makes up approximately half of the total population, she should share an equal part in the society.

But she doesn't!

And because of this denial she has had to play a double role. She has been forced to combine her need for independence (job, or profession) with that of a wife and homemaker.

In other words, if she goes into a business or even to college, she is expected (by males) to be efficient, courageous, determined, responsible, and intelligent. This is good and is well within the capabilities of most females.

However, as soon as she leaves the confines of her office or classroom she (for the benefit of the same males) is supposed to be pretty, sensitive, unassuming, good-humored, yielding, non-aggressive, and not too intelligent.

What happens?

This duality creates frustration! Incompleteness! and much Insecurity!

The frustrations woman has felt in trying to fulfill this duality has forced many women into neuroses and many of the remaining women into going back to the old idea that they are inferior.

Which side of the fence do you coeds place yourself?

Do you believe in Freud's conception of the female? That is, do you believe that woman is innately modest, vain, jealous? That she has a weak super-ego, a weak sex urge, and an inferior capacity? Do you agree that she has masochistic tendencies, that she lacks social conscience or social justice? Do you agree with Freud that the byword of the female is her passivity and the lack of the male sex organ?

Or do you believe that woman can be equal to man if she is given a fair opportunity?

Under the Honor System you are on your honor not to cheat, lie or steal; and if you see another student doing so, you are on your honor to report him to the appropriate student council. —THE HONOR CODE

Under the Campus Code you are bound on your responsibility as a lady (gentleman) to conduct yourself as such at all times, and further to see to it, insofar as possible, that your fellow students do likewise.—THE CAMPUS CODE

The Campus Code and the Honor Code form the foundation for student self-discipline on this campus. They are committed to memory by each student as he enters the university, and he is reminded of them constantly throughout his Carolina career.

It seems obvious that the Honor Code and the Campus Code, as they now exist, are reasonably operative: that is, there is probably no more lying, cheating, stealing, or unacceptable conduct on this campus than there is on any other similar campus, or, for that matter, in the outside world.

Many Carolina citizens are unduly proud of this record, their pride stemming from the misconception that adherence to the Codes as stated is due to the higher standards of honor and conduct which the Codes engender.

If this is the case, then their pride is misplaced, for not only are the Codes not liable to raise the students' standards, but they are also designed on the assumption that they will not. In other words, a student is advised that under the Honor System he is on his honor to lie, cheat or steal. And then, after a semicolon's pause, he is advised that his "honor" is subject to the surveillance not only of his own conscience, but also of the conscience of every other student on the campus.

In short, the student is not on his honor at all, except in the least valuable sense of the word. Rather, he is asked to subject his honor — his private morality — to the standards of of the group.

The considerable effectiveness of the Honor Code is due mainly to the fact that its strictures against lying, cheating and stealing are deeply ingrained in our common moral heritage. The majority which has internalized its inherited mores cannot but consider the Honor Code redundant in its first clause and oppressive in its second; the rest will disobey it with varying degrees of success.

This is not to say that the Honor Code is entirely without value. Certainly its first clause, which puts the student on his honor, may well stimulate the student to become more conscious of his personal morality, to question it, and to formulate it in his mind as a clear principle.

The second clause of the Honor Code could well be erased from the books. Not only does it discredit the first clause, but it may well thwart the aim of the Code to educate the student in greater self-reliance. By refusing the ultimate responsibility for the interpretation and enforcement of honor to the individual, and investing instead in the community, the Honor Code lessens the responsibility of the student for his own actions.

In its most valuable statement, the Honor Code should read, "Under the Honor System you are on your honor."

As it now reads, the Honor Code is ambiguous only as it clouds the sense of the word "Honor"; the Campus Code, on the other hand, is totally ambiguous.

Like the Honor Code, it contains a contradiction in terms. In its first clause it makes the student responsible for his own conduct, and in so doing it asserts the students' competence to make the judgments involved. Following the semicolon is the injunction which empowers every student to attempt to impose his standards of conduct on his fellows.

The entire statement of the Campus Code is ambiguous, and, like the Honor Code, it is self-defeating. There is no pat definition of "lady" or "gentleman," and no operational definition is supplied in the Code.

It would also seem evident that if one is to be bound on one's responsibility as a lady (gentleman), one is presupposed to be, in fact, a lady or gentleman and thus legitimately able to accept such responsibility; and, if this is true, then one is unable to act in any other way. In short, only ladies and gentlemen can accept the responsibility as ladies and gentlemen to act as ladies and gentlemen; and as they are ladies and gentlemen in the first place, the rest is strictly excess verbiage.

But there is something more seriously wrong with the Campus Code than its formulation, and it is strange that its essential error should not be more generally perceived in a section of the country which stands on the principle that it is impossible to legislate mores.

Despite this principle, the Campus Code makes it possible for any student to at least threaten the moral integrity of any of his fellows, and possibly to impose his moral standards on others.

Even if a student is never brought into official conflict with the Campus Code, its very existence fosters in him an unhealthy respect for the opinion of others on matters that should be decided by him alone. If the individual's decisions regarding his personal morality are unacceptable to others, those offended should restrict themselves to social rather than legislative correctives.

While the Honor Code is essentially valuable, then, the Campus Code is quite useless and harmful. As a legal prohibition, the Honor Code is effective only to the degree that its precepts are already part of the moral fibre of the individual; the Campus Code is effective only in punishing flagrant abuses of established standards of conduct. The same effect could probably be gained by simply putting every Carolina student on his honor.

SAIL ON, SAIL ON!

I suppose October 12 is just another day to you. You get up in the ordinary way and do all the ordinary things you ordinarily do. You have your breakfast, you walk your ocelot, you go to classes, you write home for money, you burn the dean in effigy, you watch Disneyland, and you go to bed. And do you give one little thought to the fact that October 12 is Columbus Day? No, you do not.

Nobody thinks about Columbus these days. Let us, therefore, pause for a moment and retell his ever-glorious, endlessly stirring saga.

Christopher Columbus was born in Genoa on August 25, 1451. His father, Ralph T. Columbus, was in the three-minute auto wash game. His mother, Eleanor (Swifty) Columbus, was a sprinter. Christopher was an only child, except for his four brothers and eight sisters. With his father busy all day at the auto wash and his mother constantly away at track meets, young Columbus was left pretty much to his own devices. However, the lad did not sulk or brood. He was an avid reader and spent all his waking hours immersed in a book. Unfortunately, there was only one book in Genoa at the time—Care of the Horse by Aristotle—and after several years of reading Care of the Horse, Columbus grew restless. So when rumor reached him that there was another book in Barcelona, off he ran as fast as his fat little legs would carry him.

The rumor, alas, proved false. The only book in Barcelona was Cuidar un Caballo by Aristotle, which proved to be nothing more than a Spanish translation of Care of the Horse.

Bitterly disappointed, Columbus began to dream of going to India where, according to legend, there were thousands of books. But the only way to go to India was on horseback, and after so many years of reading Care of the Horse, Columbus never wanted to clap eyes on a horse again. Then a new thought struck him: perhaps it was possible to get to India by sea!

Fired with his revolutionary new idea, Columbus raced to the court of Ferdinand and Isabella on his little fat legs (Columbus was plagued with little fat legs all his life) and pleaded his case with such fervor that the rulers were persuaded.

On October 12, 1492, Columbus set foot on the New World. The following year he returned to Spain with a cargo of wonders never before seen in Europe—spices and metals and plants and flowers and—most wondrous of all—tobacco! Oh, what a sensation tobacco caused in Europe! The filter had long since been invented (by Aristotle, curiously enough) but nobody knew what to do with it. Now Columbus, the Great Discoverer, made still another great discovery: he took a filter, put tobacco in front of it, and invented the world's first filter cigarette!

Through the centuries filters have been steadily improved and so has tobacco, until today we have achieved the ultimate in the filter cigarette—Marlboro, of course! Oh, what a piece of work is Marlboro! Great tobacco, great filter, great smoke! And so, good friends, when next you enjoy a fine Marlboro Cigarette, give a thought to the plucky Genoese, Christopher Columbus, whose vision and perseverance made the whole lovely thing possible.

INTERRACIAL SPEECH

Louis E. Austin of Durham, editor of the Carolina Times, will speak at St. Paul's A.M.E. Church on Merritt Mill Road today at 8 p.m. on "The Negro's responsibility in Interracial Relationships." The public has been invited to the meeting, which is sponsored by the Chapel Hill Fellowship for School Integration.

Well known as a spokesman for his race, Austin has edited the Carolina Times since 1927. He is a native of Halifax County and attended North Carolina College, known in his years there as the National Training School.

According to Austin, the Times was founded in 1919 and has a circulation today of 22,000. Subscribers are scattered all over the United States and there is a large overseas mailing to Negro soldiers stationed in foreign countries.

Austin is the first in a series of prominent Negro and white speakers who will be invited to address the Fellowship, which meets regularly every third Thursday of the month.

To The Ladies . . .

Although the old bookshop is usually slightly perfumed with tobacco, and we haven't had a lace doily in the joint since way back yonder, we resent the implication that ours is a strictly masculine oasis.

Ladies, we need you! We spend our lives trying to keep away from that atmosphere of whispers and fraudulent awe that is the curse of most bookshops, and nothing is so deadly a weapon against masculine hocuspocus as a well-rolled feminine eye.

Matter of fact, the shop is full of books to tempt you. In the old book corner, there's a biography of Mary Somerville — a right lively dame of yester-year who cavorted with scientists and men of letters. On the bargain table (at $1.39) there's a pile of Helen Hokinson's THERE ARE LADIES PRESENT, which is about as nice feminine wit as you'll ever find. And of course there is a table of humor, just made for two-some reading, and right near is a pile of THIS IS MY BELOVED.

So come see us, chick-a-biddy. You'll be surprised how well the smell of Chanel No. 5 mingles with that of old leather and pipe smoke!

Carolina Defense Potent; Football Back In Football

By RUSTY HAMMOND

"A good defense is the best offense." Somebody said it a long time ago, and he was right. Carolina has proved it in its last two games.

Although the Tar Heels certainly haven't been scoring many points, and the coaches bemoan this fact, neither have the opponents. The Heels have developed in the last two weeks into an Auburn-like team. Auburn will usually score only one or two (at the most) touchdowns in a game, yet they keep on winning. If the Tar Heel defense stays as tough as it has been, Carolina will keep on winning.

Statistics-wise, Carolina leads the ACC in both passing defense and total defense. The fact is, though, that the Tar Heels have not shown an inability to move the ball. They have moved it all over the field in every game this season. But when they get past the opponents 20 yard line, the attack has been bogging down.

Another item that has led the Tar Heels to two straight victories—Carolina has put the foot back into football. The kicking game Coach Jim Tatum talked about in the early weeks of the season has emerged recently to furnish an added boost for his team.

The leading kicker is Don Coker, who has really been getting the ball down the field. Coker ranks with the nation's leaders with his phenomenal 46.5 punting average, and for some reason when Don kicks the ball it always rolls the right way. He got one off for 64 yards against South Carolina Saturday.

Jack Cummings has also done his share in this department, although his average doesn't bear it out. Cummings dropped three punts inside the Southern Cal 15 at Los Angeles.

In the individual events the winners were: in the 25 yard butterfly, Williams from ATO; 50 yd. backstroke, Dunlap from Phi Delt; 25 yd. freestyle, Williams from ATO; 50 yd. breast stroke, Briggs from Chi Phi; 50 yd. free style, Rogers from Phi Delt; diving,

Coker Leading ACC Kicker

Don Coker of Carolina, the Atlantic Coast Conference's leading punter, and Ulmo (Sonny) Randle of Virginia, No. 1 pass-receiver, are off to starts which could lead to conference records.

Coker, junior fullback, has averaged 46.5 yards on 14 punts in four games, compared to the conference punting record of 43.9 yards set by Carolina's Jack Lackey in 1953.

'O. G. H.' Sign Is Not Mass Movement Comments Rennick

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

Attacks against the administration of the Wilson Library "is not a mass movement of grad students," Bob Rennick, president of the graduate club commented yesterday.

LARRY TAYLOR
. . . library committee head

The criticism comes from "half a dozen disgruntled persons who frequent the library and feel that certain of the problems there can be solved by tacking up offensive and apparently unidentified symbols on trees and bulletin boards around campus," he explained.

Rennick described most of the grad students as being "pretty satisfied with the running of the library."

The recommendations of the "O.G.H." Committee (erroneously attributed to the Student Library Committee) were discussed by Dr. Jerrold Orne, University Librarian, yesterday.

His statement read: "I have received an anonymous communication from an apparently self-appointed committee of which copy to The Daily Tar Heel is noted.

"In order to assure correctness of facts, and for on other reason, does this communication merit publication."

In answer to the charge there is no graduate student representation on the Student Library Committee, he commented, "the student library committee is appointed by the President of the Student Body, without reference to the Librarian. At the first meeting of the Student Library Committee, he pointed out the lack of graduate student representation."

Concerning the maintenance of Public Documents Collection and the Union Serial file for periodicals, he said, "no student or faculty member has complained directly to me or my staff concerning service of documents" (or periodicals).

In regard to the condition and furnishing of the Grad Study, Dr. Orne stated, "The sofas were totally unfit for further use. New sofas and lounge chairs are planned and will be obtained as funds permit.

"The painting of the walls was ordered of the Buildings and Grounds Dept. at the time of beginning repair, at least two months ago. The repair department is busy. The monastic atmosphere pleases some, others perfer soft lounges."

Speaking of the separation of reference facilities, he explained, "we realize that a new arrangement may be confusing to some. We believe that given a fair trial, it will be better in the long run. One month of experience is hardly a fair trial."

As far as consideration of the grad students and the faculty was concerned, he pointed out a student could take his problem to the Student Library Committee, "which may call for a full meeting with the Librarain at any time."

"He may also go directly to the Librarian, where the door is open to any who choose to come," he concluded.

Student Body President Don Furtado asserted, "I think that the people (the "O.G.H." Committee) will accomplish much more towards their goals if they would try to work with those agencies which are designed to handle that special area."

Furtado termed the markings on the walls as showing "a lack of respect for the property of others. I question the maturity of anyone who would vent his emotions in such a childish manner."

Hearing Set On Selection Of Trustees

A public hearing has been scheduled for Tuesday to discuss changes in the manner of selecting trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Robert W. Proctor, chairman of the commission studying the manner of selecting trustees, announced the hearing after a commission meeting Tuesday.

He said the group had considered recommending that the number of trustees be reduced and that appointment be made by both the governor and the General Assembly.

Proctor invited interested persons to send written suggestions to him or to attend the meeing at 2:30 p.m. in the Highway Building auditorium.

There are now 100 elected members plus several ex-officio members such as the Governor and ex-governors on the board. The elected members are chosen for eight year terms by the General Assembly.

Driving On Campus? Check That License

Need your drivers license renewed?

According to state patrolman Henry H. Dunlap, license examiner in Chapel Hill, out-of-state students can have their licenses renewed by writing the department of motor vehicles in their home state.

Most states renew licenses by mail, he said. Students are not required to have a North Carolina license if they are licensed in another state.

Examinations for renewal of North Carolina licenses can be taken on the second floor of the Chapel Hill Town Hall on N. Columbia St. Exams are given by examiner Dunlap Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The written exam is all that is required for renewal.

Entertainment Season Opens Next Friday

The Carolina Playmakers will open their forty-first season with a production of the musical play "Oklahoma!" in Memorial Hall October 24-26 at 8:30 p.m.

"Oklahoma!" is a musicalized version of Lynn Riggs' folk comedy, "Green Grow the Lilacs," which was produced by the Theatre Guild in 1930. The musical version has a libretto by Oscar Hammerstein, II, and score by Richard Rodgers. The original production of "Oklahoma" in 1943 marked the first time that these two collaborated on a play.

With an orchestra under the direction of Gene Strassler, of the music department, the Playmakers production is being directed and designed by Tommy Rezzuto. Choreography is by Foster Fitz-Simons of the dramatic art department who was once a member of the famous Ted Shawn dance group.

In the leading roles of Curley and Laurey are Hunter Tillman and Carolyn Myers. This is Tillman's first performance with the Playmakers. Miss Myers was seen last year as Maggie in "What Every Woman Knows." Lillian Prince, who has appeared with the Theatre Guild in their touring production of "Dark of the Moon," plays the role of Aunt Eller.

Margaret Starnes is Ado Annie and Darwin Soloon is Will Parker. Dan Linney will be seen as Jud Fry; John Sneden, as Ali Hakim; and Jim Potter, as Andrew Carnes. Others in the cast are Donna Hastings, Barbara Bounds, Bobbi Bounds, Bobbi Dixon, Gerry Ham, David Jackson, Jack Jackson, Nelson Lambe, Jim Poteat, Marti Preston, Gail Rice, David Richardson, Megan Stuart, Jane Walker, Bill White, Chet Wilkinson, Jim Villas, Larry Barnes, Marty Chesson, Bill Dixon, Vicky Ferguson;

Pete Flahive, Joel Fleishman, Harvey Miller, Carl Hinrichs, Gene La Nier, Larry Levine, Russell Link, Evelyn McKnight, Alfred Miller, Bill Monell, Mary Orne, Jane Payne, Tabby Shuler, Betty Rhodes, Fred Sitton, Roy Weaver, Marilyn Zschau and Catherine Orne.

Tickets for "Oklahoma!" are available in the business office of The Carolina Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall, and Ledbetter-Pickard, downtown. All seats are reserved for $2.00.

Opponents Petitioning Self-Liquidating Plan

Opponents of the self liuidating dormitory plan are circulating a petition in all dormitories as one step in a concentrated effort to abolish this policy.

Under the self liquidating plan, costs are financed through extra room rent. This financing plan is used because the North Carolina Legislature has not appropriated funds for dorm construction.

Rudy Edwards, Interdormitory Council president, said yesterday he feels the extra cost of building construction should not be paid by students.

The petition opposing the self liquidating policy asks Chancellor William Aycock to do what he can to abolish the plan when he goes before the North Carolina General Assembly in February.

Lillian Shannonhouse, Women's Residence Council president, is working with Edwards in distributing petitions.

The IDC is also asking North Carolina newspapers to publicize the self liquidating policy and its effects on student room rent.

Grad Student To Be On Library Committee Soon

By STAN FISHER

The Student Legislature last night by the passage of special orders enacted a bill entitling graduate students to representation on the Library Committee. The representative will be appointed by the president of the Student Body.

Such representation as provided in the bill is one of the primary aims of a controversy in which signs have appeared purportedly meaning for Head Librarian Jerrold Orne to "go home."

Another bill passed by special orders was a resolution declaring Oct. 21-26 as United Nations week.

The legislature passed unanimously a bill establishing a student Dining Hall committee. The committee when appointed, will have full investigative power and authority to make positive recommendations to the administration of Lenoir Hall and the Student Aid office.

Also passed by the legislature were: a bill to appropriate $525 for tht purchase of four typewriters for the Yackety Yack, and an act creating a student government playbill publication.

A bill to establish a policy for student government publication of the Yackety Yack, the appropriation of the necessary funds for such a policy and another bill revising the election laws were held in committee.

A proposal to establish the office of filing clerk for the legislature was referred back to committee for amendment and the revision of legislative bylaws to insure the permanence of the position.

Bills introduced last night were:

(1) A proposal to include the Ram and Ewe and the Carolina Handbook in the Yackety Yack;

(2) A bill appropriating funds for a TV for Whitehead dormitory;

(3) A bill to establish a committee to study the fraternity parking problem;

(4) A proposal changing the method of selecting jurors for trying Honor Council violations;

(5) A bill to delete an amendment made last year by Charlie Gray to the NSA basic policy declaration on academic freedom;

(6) A bill to establish a study area committee; and

(7) A proposal establishing a committee to investigate the need of bicycle racks.

Debate Squad To Meet Virginia In Atomic Weapons Discussion

The UNC Debate Squad will send eight delegates to the University of Virginia discussion tournament today.

The topic of discussion will be: Resolved: that further development of nuclear weapons should be prohibited by international agreement.

The delegates from the Debate Squad are: Charles Carroll, Tally Eddings, Russell Eisenman, Jeffrey Lawrence, Taylor McMillian, Clay Simpson, Rust Sharp and John Snyder.

Some of the possible issues to be used in the discussion are: Does the acceptance of this topic assure a balance of power? Is it to the advantage of the USSR as they are supposedly superior with conventional weapons? What physical effects do nuclear tests have on human beings and other forms of life?

At a meeting of the Debate Squad earlier this week, Gen. F. C. Shepard spoke to the members regarding the topic of discussion at the University of Virginia.

He pointed out that it would be almost impossible to develop nuclear weapons if an international inspection team were established and that the possibility of a limited war must be explored before an acceptance of the agreement would be practical.

Sororities Making Plans For Picnic

The Panhellenic Council this week set Oct. 29 as the date for the annual picnic for sorority pledge classes.

The picnic is to be given by the Stray Greeks. Each pledge class will give a skit.

A Panhellenic reception for Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority will be held on Nov. 6 from 4 to 5:30 Invitations will be sent out shortly.

A report on the Panhellenic tea was given by Mary Ann Keith.

Jury Duty Interviews Set This Afternoon

Interviews with students interested in serving on the men's and women's juries will be held this afternoon from 2 to 4 o'clock in the Council Room in Graham Memorial.

Applications are available in the student government office.

Conducting the interview sessions are members of the Jury Commission, headed by Ken Hall.

Interviews will be held next week also.

Bennett Cerf Talks At State This Evening

"Changing Styles in American Humor" will be the topic of a talk by Bennett Cerf, New York publisher, humorist, and TV panelist, in the North Carolina State College Union Building tonight at 8 p.m.

Cerf's appearance at State College is sponsored by the College Union's library committee.

Cerf is the author and editor of humorous books and a magazine and newspaper columnist.

His lecture is open to all members of the State College Union free of charge. There will be an admission charge for all others.

This afternoon at 4 there will be a book autographing session in the Watauga Bopk Shop.

Eight Social Rooms Will Open Saturday

Social rooms in eight men's dorms will be open Saturday before and after the football game.

IDC President Rudy Edwards announced yesterday that the following men's dorms will open their social rooms to visiting coeds from 12 noon to 1:45 p.m. and after the game until 6 p.m.:

Cobb, Conner, Joyner, Winston, Mangum, Avery, Parker and Teague.

Policy Group Created By UP To Write Bills

The University Party has created a legislative policy committee to discuss and draw up bills which after passage by the party will be presented to the Student Legislature.

"This measure will involve the University Party more directly with the legislative body and give both parties issues rather than personality on which to campaign," Party Chairman Jack Lawing asserted.

The UP legislators will not be bound by the proposals passed by the party, but the party will have a definite program, Lawing explained.

He declared in the past there has been little differentiation between the parties, and the parties have seldom taken definite stands on issues.

Members of the committee include the party chairman, vice chairman, treasurer, secretary, floorleader, Al Goldsmith, Dave Davis and Martha Wilkinson.

Dept. Of Air Science Adds Two Instructors

Two new officers have been added to the staff of the Department of Air Science. Both Major William D. Locke and Captain William E. Moore began their teaching in air science with the beginning of the fall semester.

Major Locke, from Enfield, N.C., came to Carolina from a station with the Air Force in Europe. With 16 years of service in the Air Force, Locke has earned his Command Pilot wings with more than 3200 hours of flying time. He has had experience in both World War II and the Korean conflict.

In Europe he flew 83 combat missions in the famous P-47. In Japan and Korea he flew 41 combat missions in P-51's and F-80's. While flying combat mission in Korea in 1950 he was shot down and was a POW for 65 days.

In October 1950, some 65 days after his capture, Locke was able to escape and return to freedom. Among his many decorations and awards are the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal, Korean Service Medal with 3 battle stars and the United States Air Force Service Ribbon.

Captain Moore, a native of West Point, Ga., and a 1951 graduate of the UNC School of Journalism, returned this year to teach in the program through which he received his commission.

He is experienced as a Tactical fighter pilot and has been stationed at several places in the United States as an officer in different capacities. With a strategic fighter squadron in Texas, he served as flying safety officer; with the 79th Fighter Bomber Squadron, he was assistant operations officer, and as the special weapons officer and assistant plans officer he served with the 20th Fighter Bomber Wing Headquarters.

Major Locke is the Air Science III instructor and Captain Moore is the Air Science I instructor.

Capital Letters

Many leaders, statesmen, columnists, and other spokesmen have commended the state of North Carolina on its moderation in dealing with the segregation-integration controversy.

They have commended the partial integration that has taken place, and the way that North Carolinians have taken a constructive approach to bring about integration gradually with as little violence as possible.

They have commended the fact that segregationists have for the most part kept their hope of retraction of the 1954 Supreme Court decision regarding segregation by pursuing the matter through legal means.

The Pearsall Plan, which this observer does not feel a good measure, has been taken as a rational measure towards integration and a moderate plan that would only be used in extreme cases. Those observers look with favor on the fact that the plan has not been invoked in any important case in North Carolina.

With all this praise for moderation, and all the praise for North Carolina not making a major issue of the race issue, it is indeed a shame tthat the admissions department of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill sees fit to put in large capital letters, standing out on the admissions form—on the new form with religious preference omitted—the single word RACE.

On O.G.H.

Graduate students sometimes think quite deeply, and sometimes they think not at all. Sometimes they act judiciously, and sometimes they act rashly.

The graduate "O.G.H." campaign is one of the latter acts. They may have some legitimate complaints about the library, but the order in which they prioritized their complaints is indicative of the attitude they have taken.

Their first greivance is that no graduate student is a member of the library committee, but when the time came last year to apply for the committee, no graduate student presented himself. Their should be graduate student representation on the library committee, but the grad students should take the initiative when their chance comes.

The second plea is perhaps justified, but the cut at the keeper or the documents as not being a trained and qualified librarian should be proved. A documents collection is necessary.

Despite the furor over the graduate study, there is a promise of future equipment for graduate students in their study, and if the grad students are impatient, they might pass the collection plate around rather than putting themselves to the expense of posters posters throughout the campus. It would be nice to have comfortable study facilities; indeed, they are a necessity for both graduates and undergraduates, and it is hoped that not only the librarian, but the administration takes this recommendation under adviseme nt.

The addition of a Serials catalogue so that students will know where to find current periodicals, while the library undergoes its reorganizations, would be helpful.

It woud be a good idea if Mr. Orne would ease the pains of transition for his staff and for the students. Changing everything all at once is quite a task, and Mr. Orne may be up to that task. However, all students are not accustomed to so much zeal, and all library staff members are forced to answer innumerable questions which crop up from those who do not know what is happening. Easing the burden slightly, supplying needed information as often a possible, publically acquainting the student body of changes, all would aid in the transition.

Lastly, all haste must be put to getting an undergraduate library, so that adequate study facilities for all may be obtained, and so that undergraduates and graduates will have ample room and opportunity for study.

North Carolina Laws

Lawrence McElroy Jr.

The North Carolina Legislature has occasionally been concerned with the night life and good times of college students in the Tar Heel state. In 1889, the Legislature enacted that

If any loose woman or woman of ill-fame shall commit any act of lewdness with or in the presence of any student who is under twenty-one years old, of any boarding school or college, within three miles of such school or college, she shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The three-mile limit might have been sufficient to separate college students from Lewd women in 1889, but its effectiveness seems obsolete in any age of fast automobiles. Before there is a stampede of Carolina gentlemen toward points outside the three-mile limit, however, it should be pointed out that several North Carolina laws forbid unmarried venery. An 1805 statute forbids any man or woman not married to each other "(to) lewdly and laciviously associate, bed, and cohabit together." A 1917 law, similar to laws passed in other states as a result of Comstock League agitation, forbids a man or woman to occupy the same bedroom in any hotel, public inn or boarding house for any immoral purpose, or to falsely register as husband and wife in such places.

A law passed in 1925 forbids any male person to willfully disturb, annoy or harass the students of any boarding school or college for women situated anywhere in North Carolina by rude conduct or by persistent unnecessary presence on or near the property of the school or college; or by the willful addressing or communicating orally or otherwise with said students while on school property or while elsewhere when in charge of a teacher, officer, or student of said school.

So it looks like panty-raids are forbidden at colleges and schools for women. (And the North Carolina law forbidding disturbance of the peace prohibits panty-raids at co-ed schools too.) The law protects only students at a school or college for women it must be lawful, then, to disturb or harass co-eds by addressing rude remarks to them. Perhaps students at women's schools need more protection than their more worldly-wise sisters at schools where the sexes are mixed.

In 1913 the Legislature forbade having at any North Carolina school or college and defined hazing as to annoy any student by playing abusive or ridicilous tricks upon him, to frighten, scold, beat or harass him, or to subject him to personal indignity.

The 1913 law further requires that any student convicted of hazing be expelled from the college or school he is attending, and makes it a misdemeanor for the faculty, or governing board of any college or school charged with the duty of expelling students, to fail to expel a student convicted of hazing. A third provision commands that copy of the law be framed and hung on display in every college or school to which it applies. However, the various deans and college administrators probably need not bother to buy frames and obtain copies of the law, because no penalty is prescribed for failure to comply with this provision. Women are expresly exempted from the provisions of the law; sorority girls apparently may paddle their pledges without fear of any legal consequences, except those that would result from violation of the laws forbidding murder and assault.

ETHEL CASEY

Letter From Olympus

On Sunday evening, October 19, in the Graham Memorial Lounge Les Petites Musicales will present Ethel Casey, soprano, and Walter Golde, pianist and teacher of voice, in a program of songs by Claude Debussy. The concert will begin at 8 p.m., and the public is cordially invited.

We contacted Mr. Golde, and drove to his home on the outskirts of Chapel Hill. He greeted us most pleasantly, and saw that we were comfortable.

"The songs chosen will comprise the most representative of Debussy's later works, in which the composer strove to create in sound a style similar to the impressionist painters Renoir, Degas and Monet. For his poetry he chose the lyrics of the symbolist poets Mallarme, Pierre Louys and Paul Verlaine. We will present the Fetes Galantes of Verlaine, the Chansons de Bilitis of Pierre Louys, the four Proses Lyriques to which Debussy wrote the words, and the Ballade de Femmes de Paris of Francois Villon.

"Ethel Casey will be remembered in Chapel Hill for her frequent appearances in concert, oratorio, opera and operetta. She is a versatile artist and has won distinction as an interpreter of contemporary music, and took part in the American Composers Festival at Mars Hill in 1956."

Mr. Golde is one of the outstanding men of his field. He is well known for his knowledge of the Debussy song literature, having been associated in the studio and on the concert stage with such great interpreters of this master's works as Mary Garden, Maggie Teyte and Georgette Leblanc, all of whom had the advantage of the composer's personal guidance and instruction.

The Graham Memorial Lounge is ideally suited for a concert of this type, providing an intimate and comfortable atmosphere. We left Mr. Golde's home assured that we would enjoy an outstanding evening.—C.L.

"Now, Does Everybody Understand Our Position?"

Ordivician Orgy

P. W. Carlton

In this world of ordinary people, extraordinary people, I'm glad there's my Geology class. Those psychos get their kicks from scouring the landscape pecking on boulders and like that. Fortunately, most of their work is confined to the mountains of that adjoining state that is so famous for its hams and superiority complexes, Virginia. (An exception to this was made known several days ago when an enterprising young rock hound was found chipping a fossil fish from a marble floor in Morehead Planetarium. This is frowned upon, friends.) Almost every weekend finds a group of these bearded and grossly attired individuals piling into filthy vehicles and pounding away in a clatter of rock hammer and hip flasks.

Arriving in some remote part of the countryside, these fiends in jeans dismount and descend upon a towering wall of shale with boyish giggles of delight.

"Oh, what a delicious strate," says one, clapping his hands and clobbering the man next to him with his rock pick.

"Even the cork tastes good, "repliest his encumbent, chuggalugging from his hip flask. The road work commences and soon the sound of tapping drowns all conversation. Clouds of dust and profanity arise and an occasional crash is heard as a lump of rock loosens and roars downhill, terrorizing the would be Trilobite hunters and occasionally flattening some unfortunate. Eventually someone shouts with glee as he unearths a genuine Graptozoan (2x109 years old). Everyone crowds around to see and usually the specimen gets broken or else is pocketed by some sly member of the party who has been less fortunate in his endeavors. A roar goes up as two of the group discover a genuine fossilized piece of Tyrannosaurus fecal matter. What a thrill for scientists everywhere!

Usually the manners observed on these trips are the epitome of decorum. Some one up above will shout" Pardon me, I'm coming down," and all below will move aside as he loses his grip and tumbles by in a cloud of rock dust. And there's always the clown who starts screaming that "it" has live Trilobite has just assaulted him and who solemnly swears a him. (These animals are very scarce nowadays in the breathing form.)

Actually, Geologic exploration is adventure of the first degree. Anyone with one eye and half sense would gain something valuable from such a jaunt. The esthetic values to be derived from observation of the landscape and the farmer's daughter make tripping worthwhile. Admittedly my inane roommate detests the idea of arising at the early hour required, but aside from that even he should get something out of such endeavor.

Scientific research is not all drudgery, as I've found out in my several years of college. The benefits to be derived therefrom often outweigh the liabilities involved. A study of science will help any individual to see more clearly the close knit relationship between this experimental world and the humanities. Better understanding of Man as a being must inevitably lead to the fusion of these various field of learning into one integrated body. I pray that this state may be reached within a reasonable period of time, for then and only then will man begin to fit major pieces into the seeming puzzle of existance.

Out Of Joint

March Wind

When a particularly vile crime is committed the usual police procedure is to bring in a hundred or more suspects for a rather muscular "interrogation." Pius devotees of civil liberties are always shocked by American police procedures, but this is the way the game works. And by and large, our police manage to solve a good proportion of the serious crimes.

Why then, we ask, have there been no convictions in the wave of dynamitings that have swept the South in recent years? I seem to remember that in Charlotte this Spring there was a trial for a synagogue bombinging, but the verdict is still on appeal. And in Montgomery, Ala. an all-white jury refused to bring in a guilty verdict in spite of incontrovertible evidence. But these two cases are the exceptions. They are the only ones that have even gone to trial; and it must be remembered that to date nobody BUT NOBODY has served a day in jail for practicing the new Southern sport of (Dynamite) Stick Throwing.

Typical of the cases that are unsolved is the murder of Dr. Harry Moore and his wife. Moore was an NAACP leader in northern Florida. On Christmas morning, 1951, while sleeping soundly with his wife, Dr. Moore and spouse were blown to their eternal rest by several well-placed sticks of TNT. The intrepid agents of the FBI poured into this sleepy little Florida town, as they have since gone into so many other towns—as they are in Atlanta today. But oddly enough, the very same FBI which is so deadly effective against bank robbers and communists is batting zero-zero-zero against these maniacal bomb-throwers in our midst.

Every police department in the South knows who the local lunatics are. When a bomb is thrown, it should be routine to pick up every one of these creeps, toss them into a back room, and "sweat" them just a little. Even if no convictions are obtained, this sort of thing can have a very salutary effect on the maniacs. Twenty-four hours in a tough police station can be a most unpleasant experience.

Keeping this in mind, we now make a slick transition to the idea of preventive police work—discouraging the bomb throwers before the overt act instead of after. The dominant principle here is "harassment," and once again we can expect wounded outcrys from the puritannical devotees to civil liberties.

My favorite example of the way "harassment" works was provided by Governor J. P. Coleman of Mississippi. Ordinarily, I am not numbered among the admirers of anything from Mississippi (with the exception of the current Miss America), but on this occasion Coleman hit the nail on the head. Governor Coleman was asked at a press conference a couple of years ago what he would do if John Kasper came into the state. The Governor replied: "We'll have him in a butterfly net the second he steps across the state line."

You will be surprised to hear that John Kasper has not yet stepped across the Mississippi line, and that "sovereign state" has been conspicuously free of dynamite tea parties. This makes a nice contrast with North Carolina where we have an attorney general who talks a good liberal game while at the same time permitting Kasper and others of his kind to play their dirty trade free from judicious (if not judical) harassment.

The ruling circles of the South are going to have to make the hard decision: these dynamiters are vermin. The immediate answer for vermin is enthusiastic interrogation coupled with continual and ingenious harassment.

Editor:

It seems to us that if you can find no better material for the editorial section of the DTH than your recent "gem", entitled "Subversive Organizations," then this space could be devoted to some worth-hwile articles—namely "Pogo," or "Peanuts."

While we don't wish to degrade your editorial section, we feel that it is of little value, unless a shortage of tissue paper should arise on campus.

You seem to think that unless a campus is involved in a controversy, or stimulates unconventional thinking, it is not alive. If this is true, then maybe the students should found a Klu Klux Klan organization, or hang President Friday in effigy, or better still, rejuvenate the "panty raids."

Surely these are examples of radical thought and actions, and would bask our fair campus in the national limelight. But we seriously doubt that UNC would profit from this fame.

Truthfully, the world is large. Surely, there are places for ideas that differ from the conventional, and of course one of the best of these is a college campus. But in the midst of controversy, and radical thought, let there be at least some intellectual stability.

A most curious letter appeared in October 15 Daily Tar Heel, signed by no les than 10 people, all of whom were intent on forcing Anthony Wolff into silence by threatening to recommend his expulsion from the Daily Tar Heel staff. This same method of dealing with people whose race, religion or political opinions we find repugnant to our own has proved an effective instrument of policy in totalitaria regimes—in Soviet Russia, Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. It is based on the theory that the best way to defeat dissent is to inspire fear in the dissenter; once he is a cringing shell of his former self, his dissent no longer has force.

Rather than this one embittered Argumentum ad Hominem written by ten individuals, ten separate letters written in coolly discursive language, showing Mr. Wolff his wrongs point for point, item for item, would probably have ten times the desired effect; they certainly would win ten times as much respect.

Editor:

After reading John F. Miller's very fine article in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel, I began to get the feeling that I might make the same mistake as he did, so right away I decided to make my move.

I am convinced the Daily Tar Heel is one of the finest school papers in existence, but like all papers it naturally covers some topics (especially in the editorial section) that I do not whole-heartedly agree with. I frown with disgust every time I read an article by your religion authority, but why not let him have his say? I get a warm feeling of amusement when I become deeply involved in Miss Godwin's little nonsense, but that too is fine, for nonsense makes sense seem clear. (Excuse me, Miss Godwin, but some of your articles fit that perfectly well—the nonsense topic that is.)

I see now that I shall be fighting a losing battle, for I just remembered something that shall be of utmost importance when I start tearing down what I had in mind when I started this.

I had planned to give my reasons for disassembling the people how constantly "belly-ache" about the Daily Tar Heel, but as I give the matter further thought, I realize that they also play a great part in making the Daily Tar Heel what it is, therefore, I really have no problem at all.

Unlike Mr. Miller, I have made my move while still young and tender. I have not waited until I reached the last of my schooling to write to the Daily Tar Heel, although that can be questioned too.

I do wish that we could find some way to give credit where it is due, and I can thing of nothing that deserves more credit for covering the UNC campus that does the Daily Tar Heel. We can not expect our Daily Tar Heel to cover every item of world importance, for it is a paper of, for and by the students, and students want to know things that they themselves have a part. If there are those that care to read of Sputniks etc., then it has been my experience, in the past, to find such items covered very well in a couple of the city papers.

I like to see young people think and express ideas even if they do not coincide with mine, for that makes for interesting reading. Who would bother to write and slander another's article if the said article had not aroused interest?

There is a place in the world for every man (young or old) with ideas. Whether God given or a product of evolution, man's greatest instrument for destruction or construction is that little mass of gray matter, and I, personally, am glad to see ideas coming from the student body at UNC and printed for all to share in the Daily Tar Heel.

These days are about as perfect as it is possible for them to be. The nights are perfect for the kind of sleeping we have been dreaming about all these summr days. The forenoon is a time when it is cool enough to do manual labor in comofrt. The midday is a time when we can get our fill of the warm sun which is the best of all medicines. The early afternoon stays bright and warm until three o'clock. At that time you can feel a small chill breeze start, and it gets a little stiffer and a little colder as we approach the end of the day. Here we retire contentedly.

A BIRTHDAY SONNET FOR THE PRESIDENT

To you, dear Ike, I dedicate this verse,
In hopes that, as you stamp the putting green,
Or drop sad tears upon your party's hearse,
You will not find my attitude so mean.
Although I never once have praised your name,
And never will, as long as I can think,
Yet here I write a sonnet to your game,
Which once again has dragged us to the brink.

And, as we totter on the verge of war,
With Russian bombers looking down each throat,
I drink to you, my dear dynamic bore;
But there! Just take your hand from off my coat,
Go back now to the green, resume your play;
Three weeks remain until election day.

$471,210 Given UNC For Research Building

A contingent grant of $471,210 towards construction of a $989,400 medical science research building at the UNC School of Medicine has been announced jointly in Washington, D. C. and in Chapel Hill by the Surgeon General for the federal Public Health Service and by officials of the University.

The fund is granted on a matching basis, provided the remainder of the cost of the building can be raised from private sources, it was announced by W. D. Carmichael, Jr., vice president and finance officer of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of the School of Medicine.

The research activities of the medical school have developed to such an extent that present facilities are badly overcrowded and grossly inadequate to the challenges offered for the institution.

The additional research space will enable the medical school faculty to provide more adequate services to the state and nation.

Present grants for medical research total about $1,000,000 annually, with above $500,000 additional research grant requests pending.

Research is being pursued in the basic sciences and in clinical departments.

Among the many facets of research under way are projects related to virus, heart, kidney, hemorrhagic and respiratory diseases; tuberculosis, psittacosis, cancer, brain tumor and gallstones.

Collect Americana?

Two recent lots of books in our old book corner have been unusually rich in material for the Americana collector.

Maine, Massachusetts and New York state items have almost matched the Civil War and North Carolina material for which we bought the collections.

You'll find the treasures in their appropriate sections of our Old Book department—the lesser stuff will be scattered through the 48c, 72c and 97c shelves.

It's treasure-hunting time, friend, and the welcome mat is out!

Rockefellers' Scholarships Aid Ministers

The Rockefeller Brothers Theological Fellowship Program is to give several scholarships to students willing to consider study in the ordained ministry.

The Fellowship Program has announced that approximately 150 fellowships are to be awarded for 1959-60 to graduates of accredited colleges and universities in the United States and Canada. These fellowships are awarded to both men and women, married and single, who are not planning on seminary or graduate theological work, but who would be willing to consider the ordained ministry.

This is a one year award made on the basis of a "trial year" during which the fellow seeks to determine whether or not the ministry should be his lifetime vocation. There is no obligation to continue after the trial year.

Fellows may attend any seminary which is a fully accredited member of the merican Association of Theological Schools.

The awards cover the following expenses: room, board, tuition, fees, books and spending allowances. Married Fellows with children are allowed additional compensation.

Fellows normally should be 30 years or under at the time of admission to seminary. College seniors, graduate students, teachers, businessmen and women, those in military service and other professions are eligible. Candidates must be citizens of the United States or Canada.

To enter the competition for the next school year, secure information from Dr. Arnold S. Nas, 301 Gardner Hall, or Samuel H. Magill, 206 South Building, before Dec. 1.

Weather REPORTS

Generally fair today and tomorrow. Becoming partly cloudy tomorrow. Rather warm today and tomorrow, with high 80-85. Mild tonight, with low around 60.

Carolina Law Graduate Assigned To Town Court

A UNC law graduate was elected by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen Monday night to serve as prosecuting attorney in Recorder's Court following the resignation of Emory B. Denney.

John Tapely, a resident of Glen Lennox, will assume the duties of solicitor in the next session of the court, Oct. 21, Tapely, married with two children, is associated with the John Manning law firm in Chapel Hill.

The 29 year old ex-Marine officer graduated from the UNC law school in 1956. His undergraduate work was completed at Duke University. He became a member of the bar association in the fall of 1956.

The present salary for solicitor in the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court is $1660 a year. Tapley, however, may be granted an increase. The Board of Aldermen was requested Monday night to consider an increase in salaries for the judge and the solicitor. The judge's present salary is $1650 a year, which is below the average.

"They're improving with every game and right now are a 2-1 better team than they were last year." Those were the words of Coach Jim Tatum on the subject of Maryland's football team. "They can beat any team in the country on any given Saturday," he added.

The Terps will be tough, much tougher than most fans expect They are hard to defense because they will run from almost any of fense in the book. They often pass on first down, and both the halfbacks and quarterback can throw. The work for Carolina's tough defense will be cut out for it.

SECOND UNIT TROUBLE

Although the Terp first unit is no doubt a good one, containng 4 seniors and 7 juniors, the second unit has been the trouble. Almost completely composed of sophs, the second team has been lacking somewhat even though they have shown scattered signs of power.

The line is plenty tough, according to Coach Pat Preston who scouted Maryland. Preston stated that we won't meet a much better line all year. They have successfully contained almost all types of offenses, in spite of their rather poor record.

WASHINGTON PAPERS BLAST MONT

The Washington papers have been blasting Tommy Mont from College Park to Georgia and back about his coaching style. Mont they say, either leaves the sophs in too long, or doesn't put them in to give the regulars a rest.

Maryland, however, is a much better club than their 1-3 record would indicate. Any coach at Maryland is going to take a pounding from the Washington writers when he doesn't win, and Mont hasn't been winning. He must really want the Carolina game bad, though since he sent a scout all the way to Southern Cal to look over the Tar Heels.

BOTH TEAMS IN TOP SHAPE

In the personnel department, both Carolina and Maryland seem to be in top shape. Tar Heels Ronnie Koes, Paul Russel, and Rip Hawkins are all suffering contusions at the present although each should be ready to go Saturday.

Maryland's Ted Kershner and Jack Forbes are fully recovered from early injuries and should be able to see action this week. Kershner is the lad who broke loose for some 85 yeards against the Heels last year and out-ran the entire Carolina team for a touchdown.

KLOCHAK OR LOWE?

A hint comes from Jim Tatum that big Don Klochak may see some action, possibly even start, this Saturday. Tatum was nomcommital about definite plans for Klochak, but he may break into the line up against the Terps. If he does he may break up the Terps line with his powerful straight-ahead running. Another possible starter at fullback — Nelson Lowe.

The personnel on defense seems to be set, according to the coaching staff, and rightly so with the tremendous job they have been doing.

BIG CROWD SATURDAY

How many people for Carolina's homecoming game against Maryland? The stadium holds 43,000 and that could just about be the attendance story.

Tar Babies Face Deacons

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Bud Carson's Tar Babies, already the possessors of a 29-8 victory over Virginia, try to make it two in a row at Winston-Salem this afternoon when they go after a winless Wake Forest freshman eleven at 3 o'clock.

While the Tar Heel frosh were in the process of walking over the Cavaliers, the Baby Deacs were being battered and bruised by South Carolina, 16-12, and by Clemson, 30-14.

"This week will be more of a test," That's they way Carson feels about the upcoming game. After the win over Virginia the young Carolina coach felt he had beaten one of the toughest teams on the schedule, but when the Duke frosh smashed the Cavayearlings 49-0 it became apparent that the freshmen from Charlottesville were not as good as they were cracked up to be. "I thought Virginia was much better than that," said the coach who is not so sure just how good his squad really is.

Holland Leads Deac Scoring

What little offense Nick Consoles' crew has shown has been led by Julian Holland,a 170-lb halfback from Thomasville, Ga., who has scored a touchdown in each of the two Deacon contests. Quarterback Chuck Reiley and halfback Mike Ogborne have tallied the other two TD's for the Baptists.

Quarterback Ray Farris has dominated the Tar Baby scoring by figuring in all the Carolina touchdowns. Against the Cavaliers Farris made two six pointers himself and passed for two more.

Consoles has an array of backfield talent to throw at the Tar Babies led by signal caller Reiley. Backing Reiley up will be halfbacks Alan White, Bill Burgess, and Holland plus fullbacks Jack Tesh and Bobby Knott.

Deac's Have Big Line

According to Carson the Deacon line will be, "much bigger than that of any team we'll play this season." Outside of ends Henry Newton and Jack Shore the Baby Deac's starting forward wall will be made up of out-of-state players.

Carolina, plagued by injuries during the early part of the season, will have several doubtful starters in addition to some who definitely won't be able to perform.

Besides Farris, the starting Tar Baby backfield will find Gene Shuford and Gil Carson at the halfs and Joe Davies in the fullback spot. The starting line will be composed of ends John Runco and Bill Loppi tackles Don Amos and Ben Gallagher, guards Bill Taylor and Sam Loflin and center Gary Truver.

Frosh Harriers Win

Carolina's freshman cross-country team opened its season yesterday with a one-sided 19-45 win over State at Raleigh.

The Tar Babies grabbed off the first three places, which coupled with 6th and 7th supplied the necessary margin. Speedster Dave Peltz crossed the line first, being trailed by Rett Everett and Louis Sullivan.

Booters Meet Va.

By JIM PURKS

The varsity soccer team will square off against the Virginia Cavaliers here today at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field in its first conference test.

With a hard-earned 4-3 victory over Lynchburg College under their belts, the Tar Heels will be out to better last year's showing in which the Cavaliers tied them, 4-4, in Charlottesville.

Coach Marvin Allen announced two surprise starters in the defensive lineup. Allen said he will go with Bill Stem and sophomore Tom White at the halfback positions instead of Bob Borden and Tate Robertson, who started in last week's game against Lynchburg.

Allan Impressed

Allen said he had been greatly impressed with the hustle and speed shown by Stem and white on defense in the Lynchburg game.

Today's game with Virginia, a traditional soccer rival, "will be a very tough one," Coach Allen said.

Except for the halfback positions, Allen said he will have the same lineup. On offense, Mike Thompson, who scored the winning goal against Lynchburg, will be at the center forward position, flanked by Joe Perkins at left forward and John Ghanim at right forward.

Coleman Barks, who shared scoring honors with Thompson last week, will be at right wing, with Rick Grausman holding down the left wing post.

As in the Lynchburg contest, the Tar Heels will be on a revenge mission. In last year's contest with Virginia, the Tar Heels built up an early lead, only to lose it and be eventually tied, 4-4.

It was also during the Virginia contest last year that Captain Rattay was knocked out during a scramble in front of the Carolina goal, the injury putting him out of the lineup for the rest of the season.

Grimes Dorm Nixes New Laws Of IDC

Grimes Dormitory will not set up a Dormitory Council Court, according to Graham Adams, dorm president.

Under the dorm court revision laws passed by the Interdormitory Council Wednesday night, Dormitory Council Courts in each men's dorm were provided for. These courts have original jurisdiction over violations of dorm rules committed by residents of the dorm.

Previously, all dorm rule infractions came before the IDC Court, which now has appellate jurisdiction over such violations.

NO JUSTICE

Graham Adams said yesterday his dorm is not setting up a Dormitory Council Court (DCC) "because the dorm executive committee does not feel there can be justice through the Dormitory Council Court."

The dorm executive committee, under the dorm court revision laws, would sit as the DCC with a three-man jury.)

DISAGREES IN PRINCIPLE

Adams said, "The executive committee does not agree in principle with the Dormitory Council Court. And even if the committee did agree, they could not set up a court as the law is written."

By this last statement Adams meant that the DCC would not be acceptable under any conditions "until the principle is changed."

Interviews Tuesday

Student Body President Don Furtado will be interviewing graduate students for an appointment to the Student Library Committee Tuesday afternoon from 3:30 to 5 o'clock in his office.

FBI Charges 5 With Bombing; Law Is Serious

ATLANTA — (AP) — Five men were charged Friday with the bombing of Atlanta's Jewish Temple under a law that could bring death sentences.

The five, rounded up by police and a large force of FBI agents, were indicted by a grand jury five days after the Sunday dynamiting of the Temple. They were charged with destroying a house of worship.

Named in the indictment were Wallace H. Allen, 32; George Bright, 33, Kenneth Chester Griffin, 32, Robert A. Bowling, 35, and Richard Bowling. The latter two are brothers. Richard Bowling has not been arrested.

Luther King Corley, 23, who had been held on a vagrancy charge during the investigation, was freed at an afternoon hearing.

Attorneys for the suspects attempted to gain release of all of the five in custody at the hearing. The lawyers charged the quick indictment smacked of an "underhanded" method.

Judge Virlyn B. Moore of Fulton superior court set a hearing for Oct. 22 at 10 a.m., to decide whether the suspects should be granted bail. The Fulton County prosecutor, Paul Webb, announced he would oppose release of the men on bond.

Tar Heels Seeking Third Straight Win In Homecoming Contest Today In Kenan; Carolina Slight Favorite Over Maryland

1958 Queen To Be Shown Today At Game

The 1958 homecoming queen and her 10-member court will be presented during halftime at the football game this afternoon by Student Body President Don Furtado and University Club President Dave Jones.

The queen and her court were selected yesterday afternoon from a field of 38 entries.

Also during halftime, three trophies will be awarded for the best homecoming displays in the three divisions: men's dorms, fraternities and women's.

The displays will be judged this morning by representatives of the Interfraternity Council, Interdormitory Council and Carolina Women's Council.

The queen and her court were selected yesterday by a panel of judges including: Mrs. William Friday, Mrs. Kay Kyser, Miss Margaret Carmichael, Ty Boyd and Don Furtado.

Miss Judith Bunn of Huntington, W. Va., has been chosen 1958 Homecoming Queen.

Miss Bunn was chosen last night by a panel of judges, along with members of her court.

Members of her court include Misses Mary Britton, Raleigh; Carol Carruthers, Charlottsville; Sharon Footh, Birmingham, Ala.; Faye Gooch, Durham;

Maxine Greenfield, Chapel Hill; Diana Johnson, Asheboro; Jane Newsom, San Juan, Puerto Rico; Charlotte Pons, Albemarle; Carol Tieslau, Portsmouth, Va.; and Lynn Walker, Winston-Salem.

Defense To Get Workout Against Gambling Terps

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Maryland Terrapins meet their former Coach Jim Tatum's Carolina Tar Heels here today with a team coach Tommy Mont has described as having "7 sticks of dynamite (the line) and 4 fuses (the backs)."

All these explosives have been successfully kept silent for the last two games, as the Terps have been beaten by Clemson and Texas A & M, and the Tar Heels will hope to do the same and start a few fireworks of their own.

Carolina, after losing its first two games of the season, has found itself in a sturdy defense, good enough to take two straight from highly touted Southern Cal and South Carolina.

The probable starting line-ups:

Pos.	Carolina	Maryland
LE	John Schroeder	Ron Shaffer
LT	Phil Blazer	Ed Nicla
LG	F. Swearingen	R. Breedlove
C	Ronnie Koes	Vic Schawrtz
RG	Fred Mueller	T. Gunderman
RT	Don Redding	Fred Cole
RE	Al Goldstein	Ben Scott
QB	Jack Cummings	B. Ruselvyan
LHB	Wade Smith	Gene Varardi
RHB	Emil DeCantis	Bob Layman
FB	Ed Lipski	Jim Joyce

The Tar Heels will enter the contest as slight favorites today on the basis of their performance in the last two games. Although the Heels have bogged down in enemy territory, the defense has been superlative.

This game, however, has had a habit in past years of being a surprising eye-opener for fans from both schools. Two years ago Maryland entered Kenan heavily favored to beat the down-trodden Tar Heels and got smeared, 34-6. Last year the exact reverse was true as the Queen of England watched the underdog Terps take the Tar Heels apart to the tune of 21-7.

TERPS TAKE CHANCES

Carolina's fine defensive contingent will definitely have its work cut out for it today against the gambling Terps. Maryland takes chances, and often makes them pay dividends. They pass a lot on first down and run from every offense in the book.

Carolina will hope today to solve its offensive problems. The Heels have moved the ball consistently all year until getting under the shadow of the goal post. The fullback problem is still wide open, for though Ed Lipski has been named starter in today's game, any one of four other players could see action in this spot. Bob Shupin, golden-toed Don Coker, or even Nelson Lowe or Don Hochak could get the call.

LINE IS SET

The Tar Heel line is fairly set, although John Schroeder will be starting in place of the injured Don Kemper for the second straight week. Schroeder played a fine game last week against the Gamecocks, along with counterpart Al Goldstein.

This series began in 1896, and the Tar Heels lead it 14-9-1.

'Around World In 280 Seconds' Band Theme

By CURTIS CROTTY and EDDIE FOWLKES

"Around the world in 280 seconds" is the theme for UNC's Marching Band in its halftime show this afternoon.

"Carolina Joe" will be sped away on a rocket trip by the 90-piece band into far-off places and finally back again.

Carolina Joe is loafing around a guided missile center, just happens to climb aboard a rocket, and before he knows it, "Whosh," it goes up in a cloud of smoke.

SEES NEW CARS

The first thing Carolina Joe knows is that he is high above the United States and looking at the parade of 1959 cars. High up in the rocket over Russia Carolina Joe sees the Rixer Volga and none other than the famed Volga Boat men sculling a scow.

Later, Joe looks down from his rocket ship and sees on the side streets of mysterious Calcutta a native snake charmer with a snake that just won't stay in the basket (here, the Carolina majorettes snake their way out of the basket) Just as things get going well, the rocket explodes.

It's a good thing that Joe has a parachute to carry him back to Kenan Stadium just in time for the second half.

MILLER TUNE

A special attraction for today's halftime show is the band's majorette team, headed by Jo Carpenter. The girls will dance the "Shake Rattle and Roll" and dance to the Glenn Miller arrangement of "The Volga Boatmen."

Today's halftime program, and all others, are planned by Band Director Herbert Fred and his assistant directors, Calvin Huber and Earl Gates.

Officers of the UNC Band are: John Gardiner, president; Bill Kellam, vice president; Ron Hamilton, secretary-treasurer.

Halftime: UNC's Cardboard Section Ready For Action

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

It's halftime in Kenan Stadium.

The teams run off the field, the band marches on, and the University of North Carolina Cardboard gets get for action.

Pat Dooley of Raleigh, Cardboard president, steps up on the platform in front of the nearly 2,100 students and their guests who are seated in the card section.

Using a public address system, Doodley begins directing the operation which provides color and entertainment for the spectators at halftime.

AT NOSE-LEVEL

After the ushers have distributed 18-inch-square multi-colored cards, Dooley gives the signal for the first stunt: "Okay, all cards down . . . now raise your card and hold it at nose-level."

After a pause so that the picture may be recognized by the spectators on the north side of the stadium, Doodley cails, "Lower the cards and get ready for the next stunt . . . second stunt, all cards down . . . ." and so the cardboard performs about ten stunts within 15 minutes.

This is the procedure followed at home games; however, this is certainly not all the work involved for the Cardboard Club.

The production of a stunt—from an idea in the mind of a Cardboard member to the finished presentation before 20,000 spectators—involves many hours of planning and technical preparation of materials. The paper work is carried out in Cardboard offices in Emerson fieldhouse.

Illustrative of the problems faced in devising an elaborate stunt is the Confederate flag which will be presented at today's game with Maryland.

Suggested by a club member, the idea was turned over to Lawrence Wilson, who heads all art work. After his approval, artists begin drawing the flag on graph paper, each square representing a seat in the card section.

Three problems occur when an idea is transferred to a drawing: the picture must be in proportion and not consist of any curved lines, colors must be accurate to describe the scene, and the colors must not clash but stand out so that they are clearly seen by the people across the field.

FLAG ON GRAPH

Someone using colored pencils draws the waving flag on the graph paper. To the artist it might look odd because instead of the flag flowing with gentle curves, it is squared at each fold. However, when the stunt is seen from the north side ofthe stadium it appears to be composed of only curved lines except for the staff, which in reality is not straight but jagged.

With the completion of the graph drawing, the picture is enlarged on a large sheet of poster paper so that the folks in the card section will know how the finished stunt will appear. This process is repeated for each stunt.

Sometimes there is a flip stunt, in which a sequence of scenes shows an action, as in the tree stunt. Here the first drawing shows a tree in the summer full of leaves. The next flip illustrates the tree with its bright autumn leaves, and the stunt continues by showing winter when the tree is leafless, and then spring when new leaves begin to appear.

After the overall design has been worked out, the individual instructions for students seated in the card section must be stamped out. The color assignment of the seat holder for each stunt is listed on a small direction card which he will find clipped under his seat in the stadium.

As the halftime approaches at the game, ushers distribute general instruction sheets and then pass out the bright cards, four to each student, which cover the color range: red, green, while, black, orange, yellow, purple and blue.

Then Dooley takes over at the microphone giving the signals to synchronize the movements of the 2,182 card-holders so that a waving flag is seen by the viewers across the field.

Perhaps the best of the cardboard stupts is the UNC script in which these letters are spelled in a diagonal line from the upper left corner to the lower right.

STUNT FORMULA

The formula for the stunts is that they should represent something pertaining to the Universiy or of local interest. Stunts are also given on the serious side. This year there will be a picture in connection with the T. B. Christmas seals.

Officers for the UNC Cardboard this year, in addition to President Dooley, are the club's vice president and secretary, Patricia Sweeney; office head,

WUNC-TV's New Position To Studdiford

WUNC-TV, North Carolina's pioneer Educational Television station, has announced the appointment of James E. Studdiford as director of Special Projects for the Chapel Hill Studio.

Studdiford was formerly the Program Co-ordinator for the studio, located on the UNC campus.

One current contract for a special project by WUNC-TV is a series of four "Heritage" films on the noted North Carolina author and poet, Carl Sandburg, for the Educational Television and Radio Center in Ann Arbor, Mich.

Other contracts for special projects include a series of 14 safety kinescopes for the North Carolina Highway Safety Division, 13 dramatic programs for the North Carolina Bar Association and 10 teaching kinescopes for the Dept. of Psychiatry at UNC.

Studdiford, a native of Florida, will receive a masters degree in communications at the University next year and has a bachelor of arts degree in dramatic art from Tufts University in Medford, Mass.

Only Two Saturdays Left To Register For Elections

Stamping an X on a ballot beside a favorite candidate's name is only a small part of voting in the North Carolina General Elections, Nov. 4.

Besides being 21 years of age by election day, the prospective voter must have been a resident of the State for one year and of his voting precinct for at least 30 days, according to "Voting Information," a booklet prepared by the Department of Defense.

Anyone not registered to vote must do so in person at the office of the Registrar in the county of his legal residence either today or next Saturday.

Persons who have registered and wish to vote by absentee ballot should write for an Application for Absentee Voter's Ballot from: Chairman, County Board of Elections. Or a member of his immediate family may make the request for him.

This is simply an application—not the ballot. The ballot will be sent when the completed application is returned to the County Board of Elections.

Voting by absentee ballot must be done in the presence of a Notary Public. Mrs. W. H. Branch, secretary to Chancellor William B. Aycock, has offered to notarize absentee ballots free of charge for UNC students. She may be reached on first floor, South Building.

The ballot must be received by election officials no later than 3 p.m. Nov. 4 to be counted.

Students who are out-of-state residents and wish to vote should write election officials in their own state for information concerning registration and absentee balloting. Or they may call Henry W. Lewis at the Institute of Government.

Second Talk On Radiation Set For Today By Wells

Dr. Warner Wells of UNC will deliver the second part of his lecture on "The Atomic Era—Survival or Extinction" at the School of Medicine today at 11 a.m.

The lecture will be given in the Clinic Auditorium. This is the second of the four-month long Medical Science Lecture Series sponsored by the School of Medicine.

The public has been invited to attend the series of lectures, which is given each Saturday at 11 a.m. The lectures opened with the first part of Dr. Wells' lecture on Saturday, Oct. 4. No lecture was held this past Saturday because of a conflict in the celebration of University Day. University Day commemorates the physical founding of UNC. The cornerstone for the first building, Old East, was laid Oct. 12, 1793.

The entire series of lectures is in the general field of radiation. Dr. Wells is eminently qualified to speak in this field, having made a decade-long study of the subject. In 1949 he went to Japan to make a two-year study of the long range effects of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The project was undertaken at the invitation of the U. S. Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission.

Other forthcoming speakers in the series, and their subjects, will be: Dr. Maurice Whittinghall, UNC Department of Zoology, "Radiation Damage - Unexpected and Unrecognized," Oct. 25; Dr. Gordon Sharp, UNC School of Medicine, "Radiation Physics for Medical Students," Nov. 1; Emil Chanlett of the UNC School of Public Health and John Lumsden of the N. C. State Board of Public Health of Raleigh will speak on "Environmental Measurement of Exposure" on Nov. 8 and 15. Their first lecture will deal with "Units and Limits" and their second lecture will be the subject of "Instruments."

Later in the series guest speakers from other institutions will be presented.

G. M SLATE

The following activities are scheduled for Graham Memorial today:

Steering Committee of the Fourth Southern Regional Institute on Hospital Recreation, 9-12, Roland Parker I; Political Science discussion group, 10-11, Woodhouse Conference Room.

HE'S A ONE-WOMAN MAN—"With me it's all er nuthin' is one of the featured songs in the Carolina Playmakers' production of 'Oklahoma,' scheduled to open Friday night at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall for a three-day run. Pictured above are Margaret Starnes as Ado Annie, and Darwin Solomon as Will Parker. Tickets for the performance are available at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard's. All seats are reserved at $2.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesday included:

Evangelos Stavaros Stassinos, Dennis Wentworth Lee, Albert Douglas Barbee, Charles Knox Masser, Charles Thomas Davis, Franklin Pope Inman, John Norris O'Bannon, Happy Hal Pulliam and Julian Leroy Sessoms.

GRADUATE CLUB

The Executive Board of the Graduate Club will meet Monday night at 6 o'clock in the upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall.

All members of the Graduate Club have been urged to attend this meeting because the revised constitution of the club will be presented at that time.

A Mistake

The admissions department has reported that the capitalization of the word race in the new admissions forms was done by mistake, and that they are being changed.

The admissions department should be thanked for making the change, and the hope of many is that the word race will in the near future not be on any application form of the University of North Carolina.

On Employees

The action of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors regarding employees of Graham Memorial is commendable, and shows the culmination of several months of effort by the board and other interested students.

The proposal to make all Graham Memorial employees student employees, and to seek a reversal of the attorney general's opinion of a year ago is the only wise course that could have been taken to preserve student autonomy in the fields which students ought to be autonomous.

From here it will be the job of the administration to realize the value of student autonomy, so that they may help in getting a reversal of the year-old ruling. It is hoped that this can be accomplished.

IDC Court

The Interdormitory Council should be commended for their action Wednesday night in passing the new court proposal.

It is only hoped that it will be implemented fully.

Those who opposed the new court system at the IDC meeting have been threatening to petition secession of the group, for their disagreement with the new proposal.

It is hoped that these people think better of their actions in order that they give this program a chance. If they do not, a reversion to the old IDC court program would be disastrous.

Dormitory government has the possibility of being efficient. It has not been up till now. The future may hold brighter things.

Self Liquidation

The petition that is currently being circulated to express student feeling on the self liquidating room rent program is a good idea.

It is hoped that the overwhelming majority of students sign the petition, and that the chancellor's position, which has been clear up to now in opposition to the room rent scheme will be strengthened.

It might be a good idea if copies of the petition were sent to members of the General Assembly. A large block of voters and potential voters may get something done.

Against Atlanta Temple Bombing

Ralph McGill

Dynamite in great quantity Sunday ripped a beautiful Temple of worship in Atlanta. It followed hard on the heels of a like destruction of a handsome high school at Clinton, Tennessee. The same rabid, mad-dog minds were, without question, behind both. They also are the source of previous bombings in Florida, Alabama, and South Carolina. The school house and the church are the targets of diseased, hate-filled minds.

Let us face the facts.

This is a harvest. It is the crop of things sown.

It is the harvest of defiance of courts and the encouragement of citizens to defy law on the part of many Southern politicians. It will be the acme of irony, for example, if any one of four or five Southern governors deplore this bombing. It will be grimly humorous if certain state attorneys general issue statements of regret. And it will be quite a job for some editors, columnists, and commentators, who have been saying that our courts have no jurisdiction and that the people should refuse to accept their authority now to deplore.

It is not possible to preach lawlessness and restrict it.

To be sure, 'none said go bomb a Jewish temple or a school.

But let it be understood that when leadership in high places in any degree fails to support constituted authority, it opens the gates to all those who wish to take law into their hands. There will be, to be sure, the customary act of the careful drawing aside of skirts on the part of those in high places.

"How awful," they will exclaim. How terrible. Something must be done."

But the record stands. The extremists, of the Citizens' Councils, the political leaders who in terms violent and inflammatory have repudiated their oaths and stood against due process of law have helped unloose this flood of hate and bimbing.

This, too, is a harvest of those so-called Christian ministers who have chosen to preach hate instead of compassion. Let them now find pious words and raise their hands in deploring the bombing of a synagogue.

You do not preach and encourage hatred for the Negro and hope to restrict it to that field. It is an old, old story. It is one repeated over and over again in history. When the wolves of hate are loosed on one people, then no one is safe.

Hate and lawlessness by those who lead release the yellow rats and encourage the crazed and neurotic who print and distribute the hate pamphlets, who shrieked that Franklin Roosevelt was a Jew; who denounce the Supreme Court as being Communist and controlled by Jewish influences.

This series of bombings is the harvest, too, of something else.

One of those connected with the bombing telephoned a news service early Sunday morning to say the job would be done. It was to be committed, he said, by the Confederate Underground.

The Confederacy and the men who led it are revered by millions. Its leaders returned to the Union and urged that the future be committed to building a stronger America. This was particularly true of Gen. Robert E. Lee. Time after time he urged his students at Washington University to forget the War Between the States and to help build a greater and stronger Union.

But for too many years now we have seen the Confederate flag and the emotions of that great war become the property of men not fit to tie the shoes of those who fought for it. Some of these have been merely childish and immature. Others have perverted and commercialized the flag by making the Stars and Bars, and the Confederacy itself, a symbol of hate and bombings.

For a long time now it has been needful for all Americans to stand up and be counted on the side of law and the due process of law—even when to do so goes against personal beliefs and emotions. It is late. But there is yet time.

Memo To A Dynamiter:

It was too dark at the time of the blast to see what it did to the inside of the temple. This is what it did.

It buried the little sky-blue robes of the children's choir under glass and plaster dust. The white collars lay gray and torn in water from broken pipes.

It blew from the vestibule wall and buried a bronze plaque commemorating men of the congregation who were killed in the military service of the United States flag.

It shattered a little glass display case set up by the sisterhood of the congregation and spilled its contents onto the wet rubble. The contents lying there consisted of bathinett covers and fuzzy little baby bibs sewn by the women.

It toppled Menorahs from a broken shelf and left those symbolic candle holders lying bent and tarnished under the wreckage.

It broke open a children's book case and tore a red-backed reader entitled "Jeremy's ABC Book."

A small record album on one damaged shelf was named; "Thank You, God."

In the water on the floor below the book case lay a picture book named, "Davy Crockett."

There was to be a dance Sunday night in the blasted meeting room of the seventh, eighth, and ninth-grade children. They had put up some decorations. They had cut out round discs from colored paper and pinned them to the walls in the shape of records. They had labeled these little records with song names such as "Hula Hoop" and "Tears on My Pillow."

But they didn't hold the dance because chunks of the ceiling and pieces of the light fixtures cluttered the floor they were going to dance on. A piano in the corner had plaster dust on it and all the windows were smashed. Fragments had scarred the walls as if a shell had burst, and some of the round disks clipped from colored paper were no longer in the right places.

Did you know The Temple did not begin as a religious congregation at all, but as a society which devoted itself, a century ago, to feeding and clothing and caring for released Confederate prisoners as they hobbled home from the War?

Walking back across the small blue choir robes in the debris and through a shattered door into a sanctuary, it would have been interesting to ascend behind the great golden Ark and read the page at which the prayer book was open when the dynamite exploded.

You had to brush aside the plaster dust in order to read the words very well, but they said this:

"O God, may all created in Thine image recognize that they are brethen, so that one in spirit and one in fellowship, they may be forever united in Thee."

—From The Atlanta Constitution

Moonglow

Joe John

Another day has ended; the sun has spent its substance on the bloodshot eyes of this hemisphere. Conquering silence seeps across the land, broken only by the hollow roars of automotive destruction. The veiled shades of evening have fallen, it is night, and moonglow.

Peace has inherited the land, a mocking peace. In her mind rests the vision of a vicious tomorrow. Strife and tension—between individuals, between nations, between races — await the faintest glimmer of dawn, even now spreading their seeds of hate. There are no stars, only traces of reflected white, it is night, and moonglow.

I walk along amid these varied spells, my thoughs more jumbled than they. Then, lunar brightness inspires one decision. The moon shall henceforth patron my scribblings.

May she guide me well.

In the racial drama which has gripped our nation, a recent incident of considerable consequence failed to receive the headline attention granted to its more sensational cousins.

Justice in the state of Alabama had decreed that Jimmy Wilson, a 55-year-old Negro handyman, receive the death sentence for his violation of state law. What was Jimmy's horrible crime? Murder? Rape? No, Jimmy's afront was far greater than these. He had robbed $1.95 from a white man.

From all parts of the nation, even from abroad, came protests against this monstrous treatment of a man. Ultimately, Governor Folsom spared the life of the little Negro. His sentence was changed to life imprisonment.

Only the bloodthirsty or the of the law" could criticize Folof the law" could criticize Folsom's action with any degree of vehemence.

Such stern punishment could hardly be justified even if no such thing as a color problem existed in Alabama. But one does, and the violent storm of protest that whipped up in private circles throughout the world magnified American problem everywhere. Even John Foster Dulles turned his eyes from the brink and expressed his grave concern.

Despite the importance of Jimmy Wilson's life, it is not the primary point in question in this Deep South drama. The focus of greatest concern is a set of severe criminal laws enacted in a racial climate and administered with racial overtones.

In theory, such laws engender equal application to all. In fact, prejudices and fears often prompt biased interpretation, and thus create such flagrant injustices as the Jimmy Wilson affair.

Wilson, the individual, escaped death because a certain man happened to be governor of Alabama at this particular time.

Irrational laws, resting in the hands of prejudiced interpreters, are, however, still in effect. Are they to remain so?

In medieval English history, one finds statutes prescribing for the hanging of all criminals, from the petty thief to the mass murderer. Have we not progressed any further since those ancient times?

On Dormitory Living

Ken Wheeler

Beyond the shadow of a doubt, the most fortunate of all frenzied freshmen are those who room with the man holding a football scholarship. One cannot realize the joy experienced by living with a gridiron hero. Take the other night for example . . .

"Hey, Fred. How about getting to bed? My Lord, it's after one o'clock!"

"Just a minute, Pal. What's four and eight?"

"Fourteen. Now hit the sack, how about it?"

"Why do these profs pick on us just because we're on scholarships? It ain't fair."

"Tough break. Now turn out that light, please."

"Pal, did I ever tell you about that Willston game last year?"

"Not since last night. Now leave me alone. I've got two quizzes tomorrow."

"Well, I was at right guard, see, because this Twinkel who usually . . . . . "

"And an eight o'clock class, too. Please knock it off."

"Twinkel got hurt, see, and coach turns to me and says, 'Okay, Fred, it's up to you," he says, see. So's I gets up and gets a big hand from the crowd as I . . . . ."

"Hand me a cigarette, will ya? Over 'there."

"Sure. Well, I went out there, see, and gave it all I got, see. Say, who the hell's that banging on the wall? KNOCK OFF THE BANGING, MAC!"

"Kee it down, will ya! You want us before the IDC?"

"What's that?"

"The discipline officers of the dorms. They'll kick you out of school if you aren't quiet."

"Mmmm. Coach wouldn't like that."

KNOCK KNOCK

"Who is that, Pal?"

"For crying out loud! How should I know? Answer it and find out."

"Suppose it's the IDC fella?"

"I'll get it, fathead. (Opens door.) What can I do for you, friend?"

"My name's Morton Twinkel."

"Well, we all have our problems."

SLAM!!!

KNOCK KNOCK

(Opens door again.) "Yes."

"I'd like to see Fred."

"MORT! How in the world are you, man? I was just telling Pal here about the Willston game when I . . . . . "

Cheer

L. H. Gatepost

1. Load the machine. Place clothes in basket until ¾ filled—do not pack.
2. Add less than ½ cup soap or detergent through door.
3. Set water temperature to "hot" or "warm" depending on your mood.

No, this is not a commercial for the Ogburn Furniture Store's all night Laundromat—but tell me have you been on a laundry date? The new all-night laundry seems to have made quite an impression on the dating habits of the student body—at least those included in the lower lower socio-economic level—which is probably everyone but Joe Frat and Joanne Sorority.

Last Saturday night I had a laundry date—my date came by McIver and there I was—in Bermudas, laundry bag over my shoulder and a box of Cheer in hand. By the time we got to the laundromat (11:30) the place was really jumping! As we entered we heard the muted barks of a dog. At closer look we saw a taffy colored spotted cocker spaniel in the washing machine. It seems going round and round and round the taffy colored spots were the result of practical joker and a bottle of clorox.

As I said before, the place was really hopping—the chess players from GM—complete with beards, pipes and bored looks — took a break. They brought their clothes down to be washed and managed to squeeze in two plays while they did five loads.

In the farm corner was the Victory Village "femme fatale"—her "legal eagle" husband seated with his back to her, almost hidden by a stack of books—Crime and Punishment in Raintree County in 64 volumes. The young hellion belonging to this fortunate couple nearly ran over me as he whizzed by driving a laundry cart with poor brakes. The washers were making so much noise no one noticed that he whizzed out the door till a cop came in and wrote out a ticket for reckless driving and having no license.

After setting the water temperature to "warm"—it was already a hot night—I settled down comfortably in a wooden straight backed chair and thumbed through the well-thumbed copies of Eve and U. S. News and World Report.

When the washer came to a screeching halt—my date, like the gentleman that he is, loaded the soggy clump into a cart, hopped in and wheeled over to the dryer. He had to wait a few minutes while the taffy colored spotted dog got through his drying cycle. Ten minutes later—clean sweet smelling laundry—still warm from the dryer—back in the laundry bags —box of Cheer in hand, we made our exit.

Letters

To Male Residents of UNC Dormiteries:

Last Wednesday night, the IDC voted to accept a new set of Court By-Laws and a new Court system. I saw nothing wrong with the old system that couldn't be remedied with more intense work by the individual dorms; therefore I was opposed to the new system, along with a few others. However, these By-Laws and the new court system passed, and although opposed to them, I am going to work with the majority to help make this new system a success.

If this were the attitude of all the others opposed, this letter would not be necessary but that is not the case. Several of the dormitory presidents who were violently opposed to the acceptance have now passed around petitions for all of its residence to sign. The gist of this petition is, that those undersigned will not co-operate with the new system and its mechanism. Now this attitude is bad, not only for the IDC Court but also for the morale of the IDC per se and the dormitories, and this attitude of these few shows signs of immaturity, irrational thinking, and lack of respect for the decisions of the majority.

I'm asking now, not as Secretary of the IDC, but as a person defeated and willing to co-operate for the betterment of UNC dormitory living conditions, that all others that were and are opposed to this new system, co-operate and help make the new system a success.

You will be living under this system, so act as adults and not as children and accept the new system as it is and with minor changes in the future. Make it work.

Editor:

Regretfully I read the critical remarks of Anthony Wolff's 'piece' on Billy Graham.

They seem to me unnecessarily caustic.

Although I did not find Mr. Wolff's Graham piece my favorite of the talented Mr. Wolff's writings, the Graham opinion was his own. There is freedom of the press, and in its light, in my humble opinion at least, certain of the writers' diatribes smacked of the insulting.

The puzzling and yet beautifully written novel, Lolita, recently reviewed by Anthony Wolff, struck me as a very talented written critique. The young writer—Mr. Wolff—showed remarkable maturity in his un-didactic appraisal of a book which read and appraised honestly is apt to leave the reader panting, both with admiration and bewilderment.

His review conveyed both reactions with a clarity little short of genius.

I only wish I at a great age could write as Mr. Wolff in his youth can write at the height of his fine capabilities.

A soldier, griping about life in the army said "They took my clothes and gave me a uniform. They took my name and gave me a number. When they announced that we would stand and sing, 'Art thou weary, Art thou languid,' I answered, 'I sure am.' "

I agree with Curtis Gans that the University is becoming so large there is danger that the individual will lose his identity and become just a number.

The peculiar charm of Carolina has always been the "Carolina Spirit." The love of the students and, particularly of the alumni, for the University from its earliest history has amounted almost to a passion.

This love can be attributed to the friendliness and the personal relationship between the administration and the students, from the President on down; between the faculty and the students; between the students and each other; and between the University and the public.

This feeling of comradery and of belonging was possible because the University was small. With the tens of thousands of young people knocking on the doors of the Universities and colleges it is possible that Carolina will lose the Carolina Spirit. When that happens it will have lost what it can never be compensated for by mere bigness.

Someone has advocated eliminating sentimentality in admitting students to a school just because their parents attended that school. I wouldn't like to see anybody turned away who desires to come, however there is a point of diminishing returns and as Editor Gans says, "the challenge of the future is to find that point and to make sure the University retains its greatness.

While the father-son tradition has contributed to the intense loyalty of the alumni to their Alma Mater, it has also contributed to provincialism.

Each section of the country has much of value to contribute to the others, but no one should go into another section with the avowed intention to critize and reconstruct the people, their habits and customs. We all have our faults, and we all have much to learn. By the same token, we all have our good qualities. The road winds up-hill all the way for all of us. Courtesy demands that we give and take in a spirit of tolerance and good will.

Otelia C. Connor

The great white bird sat high
In the air and surveyed the Country under him. Suddenly
He heard the wild cry of the Great black bird and he looked
To see it swooping down in its Flight of destruction. The claws
Brought the bright blood from the Neck of the great white bird and
The black one laughed, but then
From the sky above them came the Call of death; and the battling
Titans tried to run, but to no
Avail as the great eagle dropped
From above and in one great plunge
Placed death upon the heart of
The minor birds. Then looking over
His deed, he laughed and once more
Sought his perch high over
The mingling blood of
The black and the white.

'Changing Values In College' To Be Discussed Sunday At 8

The Jacobs study of "Changing Values in College" will be discussed Sunday at 8 p.m. at the monthly meeting of the Faculty Christian Fellowship in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

The Faculty Christian Fellowship, a local expression of an interdenominational national movement, has been meeting for three years to discuss problems in religion and higher education

Last spring the local group sponsored the campus visit of Harold Shilling, dean of the Graduate School at Pennsylvania State College.

The group last month held a faculty luncheon for Professor Paul Tillich of Harverd.

Its informal sessions are open to all interested faculty and staff persons.

A member of the dean of student life staff, a professor, and a campus religious worker will initiate the discussion of the controversial study by Philip E. Jacobs on the values of American college students today.

The Jacobs Report says that students are "gloriously contented . . . unabashedly self-centered . . . politically irresponsible . . . and vaguely religious."

Job facts from Du Pont

DU PONT PLANTS AND LABORATORIES IN 26 STATES OFFER VARIED JOB LOCATIONS TO TECHNICAL STUDENTS

BENEFIT PROGRAM MEANS ADDED INCOME
by J. I. Reid, Jr.
Du Pont personnel representative

Don't forget the "extras" of an employee benefit program when you compare the job offers and salaries of different companies. At Du Pont, these extras mean added income that doesn't always meet the eye. They include life insurance, group hospitalization and surgical coverage, accident and health insurance, pension plan and paid vacation.
In addition, the Company sponsors a thrift plan. After two years of service, for every dollar you invest in U. S. Savings Bonds the Company sets aside 25 cents for the purchase of common stock in your name. Roughly, 60,000 of our employees are now participating in this plan.
If you have specific questions on Du Pont benefits, just send them to me. I'll be happy to try to answer them. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Room 12421 Nemours Building, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

EXPANSION PROGRAM OPENS UP MANY NEW CAREER OPPORTUNITIES
The location of your first assignment with Du Pont depends on your qualifications and on the openings in your field, but every effort is made to match the job and the location with your preference. The chances for a successful match are good.
Today there are men and women carving out careers with Du Pont at more than 75 plants and nearly 100 laboratories spread throughout 26 states. Last year the Company spent $220 million for new plants and for increased capacities at existing installations. This year new plants have already been put into operation in Virginia and Michigan. Six more are under construction. Others are planned for the near future.
Most Du Pont units, it is true, are located east of the Mississippi. Company headquarters, for example, along with many labs and plants, are located in and around Wilmington, Delaware, which is a pleasant residential area within easy reach of Washington, Philadelphia and New York. But there are also plants and laboratories in California, Iowa, Kansas and Texas, and plants in Colorado, Missouri and Washington.
Wherever you're assigned, you'll be proud of the Du Pont Company both on and off the job. You'll find the people you work with friendly, stimulating, and active in the life of the community.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERING MOVIE AVAILABLE FOR A.S.M.E. MEETINGS
There's a great demand for mechanical engineers at Du Pont. In fact, the ratio of mechanical to chemical engineers is just under 1:2. Whether your chosen field is research, development, plant engineering, production supervision or sales engineering, you'll find a good future at Du Pont.
If you would like to learn in detail what mechanical engineers do in the chemical industry, arrange to see the Du Pont film, Mechanical Engineering at Du Pont. It is available at no cost for A.S.M.E. chapter meetings, fraternity house and dormitory showings. Write to Room 12421 Nemours Building, E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Wilmington 98, Delaware.

SEND FOR INFORMATION BOOKLET
Informational booklets about Du Pont are yours for the asking. Subjects include: mechanical, civil, metallurgical, chemical, electrical and industrial engineers at Du Pont; technical sales, research and development. Just name the subject that interests you and send your name and school address to E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), Room 12421 Nemours Building, Wilmington 98, Delaware.

Tar Babies Lose To Wake Forest, 20-12

WINSTON-SALEM (AP(— Tormented most of the game by the passes of Carolina's Ray Farris the Wake Forest freshmen made a goal line interception of a Farris aerial in the closing moments Friday afternoon to insure a 20-12 victory over the Tar Babies.

A crowd of about 500 on the Wake Forest campus saw guard Tom Hartman make the game's interception after the extremely accurate Farris had guided the Tar Babies from their own 28 to the Wake Forest six.

Hartman returned the ball to his own 24 and four plays later time ran out and the Wake freshmen had their first triumph in three starts. Carolina had defeated Virginia in its only other game.

Outing Club

The outing club held its kick-off meeting in Woollen Gym Thursday night. The purpose of the meeting was to get the club organized.

They discussed some of the events that would take place during the course of a year in the club. The officers of the club will be president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, and a chairman to head up all of the individual groups which are: camping, shooting, boating, archery, hiking, fishing, and other events that interest the outdoor sportsman.

They also discussed some of the projects that they would be undertaking this year aside from their regular meetings. Some were weekend trips to the coast, mountains, and lakes in and around this region.

Booters Beat Va. 3-2

By JIM PURKS

Carolina's soccer whiz Mike Thompson scored three goals to lead the Tar Heel soccer team to a 3-2 victory over the Virginia Cavaliers here yesterday.

The win was the second victory for the Tar Heels in as many games and marked the first conference test for the squad.

Thompson scored in the first quarter and twice in the third quarter. He scored the winning tally on a penalty kick, blasting the ball into the right corner of the Virginia goal past the sprawled goalie, Duke Felt.

Come From Behind

Carolina had to come from behind to take the contest, overcoming a 2-1 lead which Virginia had built up early in the third quarter on center forward Johnny Marcellus' goal.

The Tar Heels took the lead in the first quarter when the scoring duo of Coelman Barks and Thompson, who had combined for three goals in the game with Lynchburg, got together.

Barks, playing at right wing, momentarily broke away from a Virginia defender and centered the ball to John Ghanim, who headed it to Thompson for the score.

Cavaliers Strike Back

Virginia bounced back to tie the score at 1-1 on a goal by Jim Turner, who tapped it in during a scramble in front of the Carolina goal after a corner kick.

After Virginia's Marcellus scored early in the third quarter, Thompson hit paydirt again when he headed in a ball which had been kicked across the Cavalier goal by Barks.

Penalty Clinches It

At the end of the third quarter, Thompson then scored on the penalty kick to put the inspired Carolina eleven out in front for good. From then on, the contest was all Carolina as the Tar Heels put on a fine display of effensive power but were unable to score again.

Coach Marvin Allen's squad was particularly sharp on defense in the second half. Playing the center fullback position, Hugh Goodman gave goalie Jim Rattay fine proctection. Goodman's defensive plays often drew applause from the crowd.

Carolina's passwork, both on defense and offense showed considerable improvement over the Lynchburg contest, which the Tar Heels won, 4-3.

Although Thompson and Barks dominated the scoring plays, several other players looked considerably improved and drew praise from Coach Allen, left wing Rick Grausman made several nice plays, barely missing on goals twice. Grausman worked well in passing combinations with Joe Perkins and John Faucette.

Speeding was blamed for 13,200 deaths on U. S. highways in 1957.

Harriers Meet Deacs And Terps

By BING SUMMERS

Since the opening day of practice back on September 14, for one solid month, the index finger of cross-country Coach Dale Ranson's right hand has been pointing rather ominously to October 18 on the calendar.

Today is the day that his Tar Heels can accomplish that deed which has caused all the concern, that of defeating the terrible Terrapins from Maryland.

Seething after Navy took them apart piece by piece last weekend, the boys from College Park, along with mild-mannered Wake Forest, face this triangular meet with vengeful eyes.

The meet, scheduled for 11 o'clock, should be as good as anyone would hope to see.

Carolina Routs Maryland Terps 27-0 Before 25,000 Homecoming Fans; Defense And Offense Equally Tough

JUDITH BUNN — A Homecoming Queen is crowned by student body president Don Furtado at halftime in yesterday's game. Miss Bunn won from a field of 34 candidates in judging Friday.

Four Tar Heels Score In One-Sided Game

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's fast improving Tar Heels combined an already proven defense with a newly-found offensive punch to completely rout the Maryland Terps here yesterday before a homecoming crowd of 25,000 in Kenan Stadium.

The Tar Heels scored midway throuh the first quarter and were never headed, as the Terps could penetrate no further than the UNC 20 yard-line.

It was sweet revenge for Tatum's Tar Heels on two counts. First, it avenged a humiliating 21-7 upset last year before the queen, and secondly it gave Coach Tatum another victory over the team which he coached to the national championship.

LIPSKI SCORES FIRST

After Ron Koes had picked off a stray Terp aerial in the first quarter and returned it to the Carolina 40, the Heels launched a sustained 60 yard drive which led to the first TD. The big play was a 33-yard pass play from Jack Cummings to Wade Smith which gave the Heels a first down at the Maryland 18. Four plays later, from 4 yards out, Ed Lipski broke off the weakside (left) of an unbalanced line and cracked into the goal for the first score. The two-point try failed and the Tar Heels led 6-0.

SCHOEDER GETS SECOND

Carolina got its second score early in the second quarter. The Tar Heels started another sustained drive, this time from their own 20, and marched the remaining 80 markers for another 6-pointer. Once again the big play was a Cummings to Smith aerial which advanced the ball to the Maryland 41. The TD came when Cummings hit soph end John Schroeder on a straight up the middle button-hook pass, good for 19 yards and another touchdown. A three way conmbination clicked for the two extras, reading Cummings to Smith to DeCantis, to give the Heels a 14-0 advantage with 9:47 left in the half.

GOLDSTEIN SPECTACULAR

Al Goldstein, a guy who has had fans on their feet all season with his spectacular catches, provided the third UNC score on an interception which he created. With the ball on the Maryland 46 Goldstein shot through the line, knocked the ball high into the air out of Terp qb Russevlyan's hands, and galloped 40 yards untouched for the touchdown. The extra point failed, but the Tar Heel went into the dressing room at halftime with a 20-0 lead.

In the second half Carolina penetrated once to the Maryland 8

DRIVE TO VICTORY — Wade Smith (31) drives through the Maryland defense for yardage, as the Tar Heel vanquished the Maryland team yesterday at Kenan Stadium 27-0. A good running offense and a strong defense highlighted the Carolina victory.

Soprano To Sing In Petite Musicale

The first Petite Musicale of the fall semester will feature Raleigh soprano Ethel Casey today at 8 p.m. in the lounge of Graham Memorial.

The Petite Musicales are sponsored by the Music Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Open to the public, the program will be devoted to songs by the French composer Claude Debussy [illegible] feature four song cycles from the latter part of the composer's creative life.

The cycles, set in the impressionistic style, will be the two series of the "Fetes Galantes" set to four poems by the composer; and the "Chansons de Bilitis" set to three poems by Pierre Louys.

"Ballade des femmes de Paris" set to a poem by Francois Villon will conclude the recital.

Mrs. Casey is well known to local music groups as soloist for the Raleigh Oratorio Society and at Duke University where she was soloist for a performance of "Elijah."

She also appeared in two Petites Musicales last spring and in the initial Sunday afternoon Musicale at the N. C. State Museum of Art in Raleigh.

Mrs. Casey will be assisted in the program by Walter Golde of Chapel Hill, a noted voice teacher, composer and accompanist.

Dulles, Chiang Kai-Shek To Have Understanding

TAIPEI — (AP) — Nationalist quarters said Saturday Secretary of State Dulles and Chiang Kai-Shek would go into their talks this week with a full understanding of each others problems in the Formosa Strait crisis.

They predicted the talks would be smooth and foredoom Red Chinese hopes to drive a wedge between the United States and Nationalist China.

It was believed the meetings, starting after Dulles' expected arrival here Tuesday, will result in a strengthening of cooperation between the two allies.

Dulles come here at the invitation of the Nationalists. He is expected to suggest rather than insist on a reduction of Chiang's force on the Nationalist offshore island of Quemoy.

It was possible, however, that Dulles might not raise the troop question until Chiang asks him to clarify the U. S. position on troop cuts.

The United States feels that a reduction of Quemoy forces would take the wind out of Communist charges that Chiang plans to use the outpost as a springboard for an invasion of the mainland.

Washington apparently is working on the theory that troop cuts might placate the Chinese Reds and enhance the prospects for what Dulles would consider a dependable cease-fire.

The idea is that if the Reds can be convinced that the island outpost will be used for defensive purposes only, they would be more likely to agree to an indefinite cease-fire.

Mozart Comic Opera To Be Shown Tonight

Members of the Boston University School of Fine Arts will be featured in two hours of comic opera when WUNC-TV, Channel 4, presents "La Finta Giardiniera" by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart today at 8:45 p.m.

Interviewing For Jury Duty To Be Tuesday

Interviews for those students interested in serving on the jury for Men's Honor Council or Women's Honor Council will be held Tuesday and Friday, according to an announcement by Ken Hall, chairman of the Jury Commission.

The interviews will be held from 2-4 p.m.

Appointments may be made on a sign-up sheet in the student government office at any time. Applications for potential members of the jury will also be available there.

Jurors selected last week by the commission include: W. Graham Claytor, William C. Jacobus Jr., James O. Pfaff, Jerome W. Stokes, Sally Pullen, Dixie Jackson, Margaret Ray, Phyllis Blake; Betty Woodward, Anne Nichols, Fern Rhyne, Barbara Meitzler, Jean Whiting, Julia Brott, Nancy Faison and Betty Jean Baxter.

Street Named Representative For Students

Gordon Street, UNC junior, has been appointed by Student Body President Don Furtado as student representative to the Board of Directors of the Chapel Hill Merchants Assn.

Street is a member of Student Legislature and Alpha Tau Omega fraternity.

Last year he interviewed the local merchants in connection with the parking problem.

As an exofficio member of the board he will provide any information which the directors might need in reference to students. He is also responsible for disseminating information to the students themselves.

This student postion on the board is designed to try to get better communication and understanding between the two groups.

Homecoming Display

Prize-winning homecoming displays this years were prepared by: Pi Beta Phi Sorority (women's division), Phi Delta Theta (fraternities') and Old East (dorm men's).

Displays were judged yesterday by representatives of the Interfraternity Council, Interdormitory Council and Carolina Women's Council.

Honorable mentions awards were also made. In the women's division, honorable mention went to Spencer Dormitory; in the fraternities' division, to Sigma Nu; and in the men's dorm division, to Lewis and Mangum.

LEGISLATURE ROUNDUP:

Greer's Proposal Expected To Be Highly Controversial

By STAN FISHER

The oft discussed "discriminatory clauses" in various campus organizations' charters were brought before the Student Legislature again last Thursday night as the subject of a bill introduced by Gary Greer (SP).

Greer's bill would delete an amendment to the National Student Association's declaration of basic policy passed by the legislature last session. This amendment reads, "However, while the student Legislature would possibly like the removal of discriminatory clauses, we do not recommend the denial of recognition to any organization whose national charter includes such restriction clauses as to membership."

Greer's bill proposes the deletion of this amendment and the restoration of the policy declaration to its original wording. In its original form the NSA's declaration would deny campus recognition of any organization having discriminatory clauses except those organizations whose aim is to bring together those of a specific religion.

This proposal is expected to be the subject of much controversy among the student solons. Fraternities and sororities will probably move to defeat the bill since they would be organizations most affected by its passage.

In passing a bill to provide graduate students with representation on the library committee, the solons heard Bill Rennick, president of the graduate club, describe the recent protests against UNC Head Librarian Jerrold Orne as not being a mass protest. According to Rennick, only five to six students were active in the movement.

The legislature passed unanimously a bill establishing a student dining hall committee. The five member committee will have the chairman and one member appointed by the Student Body President, one member elected from the legislature membership and one member each from the CWC and IDC.

This committee will have full investigative power, and authority to make recommendations to Lenoir Hall administration and to the Student Aid Office. It will make a full report on its investigations, actions and activities to the legislature at least two weeks before each end of the fall legislative term.

A bill to establish a filing clerk of the legislature hit an unexpected snag as it came before the body. The proposal was at first passed, then brought back before the legislators for reconsideration. The bill was then referred back into committee for revision and revision of the legislature bylaws to insure the permanence of the position.

A proposal calling for the appropriation of $525 to buy four typewriters for the Yackety Yack was passed by the legislature. Previously the bill had called for $620, but investigation into the cost of the typewriters and the subtraction of funds currently used for typewriter rental by the Yack from the $620 resulted in the final $525 total.

Charlie Gray (UP) introduced a proposal seeking the establishment of a committee to study the fraternity parking problem. This committee would investigate the feasibility of buying the property now occupied by the old Chapel Hill high school Gym and converting it into a parking lot.

If the committee investigation indicates the practicality of such action, the parking area would have rules drawn up by the committee and endorsed by the IFC. The parking lot would be financed through cooperation between the fraternities, the university and the town of Chapel Hill.

Under a bill introduced by Norman B. Smith (SP), a committee would be established to investigate the possibility of providing for additional study areas. The committee would constist of a chairman and two members appointed by the Student Body President.

Other bills introduced Thursday night were:

(1) A bill to establish a committee to investigate the need of bicycle racks on campus;

(2) A proposal requesting the appropriation of $140 to include the Ram and Ewe and the Carolina Handbook in the Yackety Yack; and

(3) A bill calling for the appropriation of $200 to be used in buying a TV set for Whitehead Dormitory.

Other action by the Legislature Thursday night was the swearing in of six new legislators and the approval of four presidential appointees to various campus positions.

SP's Third Meeting To Be Monday Night

The third meeting of Student Party will be held Monday night at 7:30 in the Roland Parker Lounges.

At this time candidates will be nominated to run for election to the Student Legislature from both men's and women's dorm districts.

Student Party Chairman Leon Holt has urged anyone interested in running for these positions to attend.

Nuclear War Man's Threat, Says Dr. Wells

"The real threat facing man today does not come from radioactive materials, but from nuclear warfare that could eliminate the human race."

This and other observations were made Saturday by Dr. Warner Wells of the UNC School of Medicine. Dr. Wells was delivering the second part of his lecture on "The Atomic Era—Survival or Extinction."

These two lectures by the UNC professor of surgery are part of a four-month Medical Science Lecture Series sponsored by the School of Medicine. The lectures are given each Saturday at 11 a.m. in the Clinic Auditorium and the public is invited.

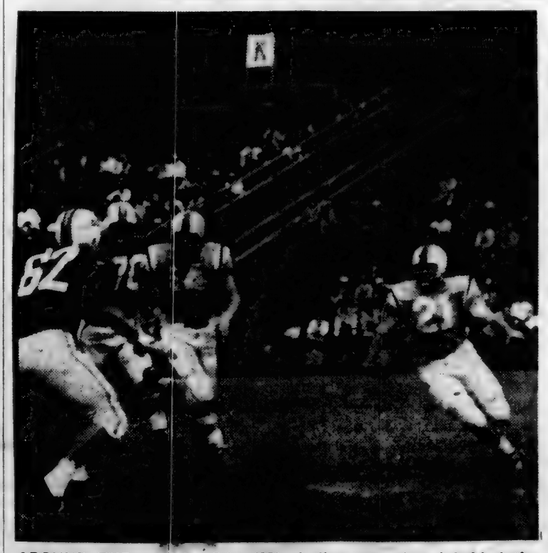
"The use of diagnostic and therapeutic x-ray has been criticized as being dangerous to the patient. Such criticism is unjustified as x-ray is the most important tool in medicine," Dr. Wells explained.

Dr. Wells pointed out that the development of the atomic bomb did not bring man to realize the dangers of radiation, such dangers were long ago recognized by such scientists as the Curies and Einstein, before the development of the bomb.

The speaker said that much has been heard about the atmospheric contamination with radioactive materials, and then pointed out that there was more fancy than fact in such discusions.

Dr. Wells is eminently qualified to speak in the field of radiation.

LEADING CHEER — Head Cheerleader Carter Jones leads a cheer for Carolina's victorious Tar Heels. There was plenty to cheer about as Carolina emerged the winner 27-0.



AROUND END — John Stitt (21) circling around end behind the blocking of Dick Scarbath (14), while Paul Russell (62) and Phil Blazer (70) close in for the tackle.

MARYLAND TERP — The Maryland human mascot climbing a goal-post, the Maryland team did not come. This was part of the half-time festivities at Yesterday's Homecoming game.

Foreign Policy

The largest single issue in the November elections, President Eisenhower's comments not withstanding, is foreign policy.

It was the same issue that should have been the election issue in 1956, but wasn't — due to the determination of many people and the press to make the issue something else.

The only chance the people have to manifest their dissatisaction with what the President and his administration has done is through the ballot, and through the election of persons whose point of view reflects ideas incongruent with the philosophy that is being expounded in Washington.

The largest single place of divergence should be foreign policy, where the activities of the government have been most reprehensible, and have led the United States not only to the brink of war but to the brink of annihilation.

The chance of reoreinting foreign policy lies in that being made an issue and of having pro-administration candidates soundly trounced. This may be in the offing.

On Nixon

Vice-President Nixon is campaigning around the country, like the Nixon of old — the Nixon which will compromise anything for the sake of votes.

He is debunking and defaming as he did six and eight years ago, and people are beginning to recognize the true colors of Mr. Nixon, who more recently has been placed in the public eyes as something of a statesman.

It is a peculiarly happy occurence that Mr. Nixon is showing his colors, for it may awaken the people of the United States before the 1960 election, that Mr. Nixon represents interests inimical to democracy.

The contest for governor in New York bears watching, for if Nelson Rockefeller beats Averill Harriman in New York, Mr. Rockefeller becomes a presidential potential candidate in 1960.

The Republicans may well realize that Nixon can be a liability in the presidential campaign in 1960, and so may lean to Rockefeller.

Rockefeller has been treated with kid gloves in New York. The Liberal Party of that state which has usually been able to cause trouble for any person who represents interests differing from their own, has been unable to campaign vigorously against him. He may well win by default, and be almost as untouchable a presidential candidate in 1960.

The liberals of New York in their distate for Carmine DeSapio and the lack of overt Harriman rebellion against him in the Democratic Convention this year, may well be crowning a president of the opposite party, a party, whose interests if given another chance at national power, would be destructive to the United States. A look to the future at this time would be wise. Later may well be too late.

In California

Congressman Clair Engle's campaign for senator is having a great deal more difficulty than is that of Pat Brown in his opposition to William Knowland for governor.

At least part of this is due to Congressman Engle's willingness to be open in expressing his views and his alignment with the liberals.

Pat Brown has tried to cut himself out in the image of Earl Warren as a moderate progressive and has apparently succeeded.

Both men are liberals, and it is only the fact that California is not as responsive to ideas as are some other states in the Union that is causing Brown to be less open, and Engle to have difficulty in a year where the errors of the Eisenhower administration have been more than obvious.

Ronnie Dugger, editor of The Texas Observer, wrote a series of articles explaining the situation in California in The New Republic. Clearly from Dugger's series of articles came the idea that the failure in California is the failure of the press as an educational force.

It is the error of commission in suppression of ideas, and the error of omission in not presenting these ideas that has led the state to be somewhat unreceptive to new approaches.

Clair Engle may win due to the present dissatisfaction with Eisenhower, but the problem of the not-so-free press in California and indeed the entire West Coast still remains.

The World News In Review

Ed Rowland

Events this week were not as dramatic as those of weeks past, fortunately, but as always, news there was.

In the Far East, Red China decided to extend its one-week old ceasefire on Quemoy and Matsu for two more weeks. In the prevailing quiet Chiang Kai-Shek will continue to remove civilians from the off-shore islands and strengthen his garrisons there.

In Washington President Eisenhower told his news conference he would not press the Nationalists to reduce their 85,000-man force on the islands, but that he felt keeping so many was illogical. The remarks re-echoed those of Sec. of State Dulles who had said Chiang Kai Shek would decide for himself what to do.

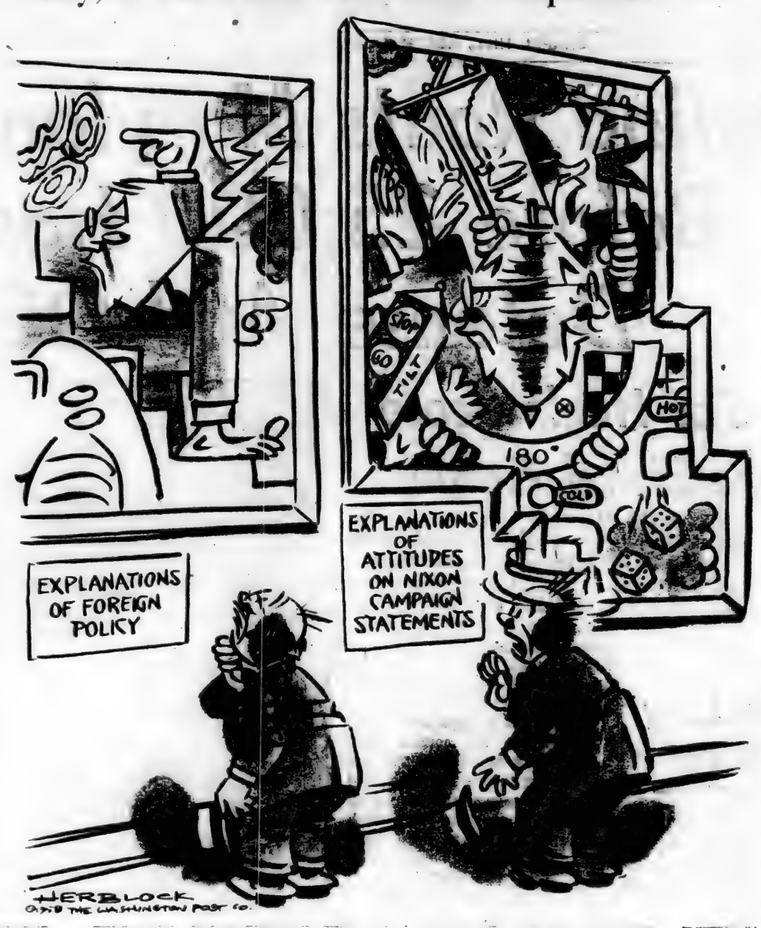
The possibility that Chiang, with U. S. approval and perhaps some persuasion, might voluntarily decide to cut back his troop strength as a means of easing the Formosa crisis was open. But Eisenhower made clear such action would not be a concession to Red China.

Dulles will fly to Taipti next Tuesday for talks with Chiang Kai-Shek. The meeting is expected to clear up rumors that the two allies are at odds on policy. Dulles is also expected to seek some agreement from the Nationalists to induce them to agree with Red China on some measure that will arrange for a permanent ceasefire instead of the temporary one.

RITES FOR PIUS XII

In Rome, with awesome ceremony Pope Pius XII was laid to eternal rest Tuesday near the tomb of St. Peter. The location, selected by the assembled College of Cardinals, was a sign of their vast esteem for Pius XII. He himself had announced in 1950 the finding of the burial place of St. Peter.

"Boy, If You Think That One's Complicated —"



The giant bells of St. Peter's basilica tolled a dirge as the body of the Pope, encased in three coffins, was lowered into the massive stone foundations of the basilica. The ceremony itself was one of extreme sadness.

By the end of the week, all but a handful of the Cardinals who will elect a new Pope were in Rome. And as they gathered, Communists were attempting to cast popular suspicion on the forthcoming conclave.

The Reds have charged that Americans, French, Germans and Italians would negotiate over the candidate to be chosen, and that the American Cardinals were trying to organize the outcome.

The traditional nine days of the church's mourning will end today, and with the arrival of Sec. of State Dulles in Rome to attend the final requiem mass may herald Red efforts to introduce political overtones into the balloting. 50 of the 54 Cardinals are expected to attend the election.

In the meantime, a predominately Protestant group in the United States contended to the State Department that three Roman Catholic Cardinals would violate American law in voting on the election of a new Pope.

Protestants and Other Americans United for Separation of Church and State urged Dulles to advise the Cardinals they may be subject to loss of nationality if they vote in the secret conclave. The whole contention is based on a section of the 1952 Immigration Act which says a citizen "shall lose his nationality by . . . voting in a political election in a foreign state or participating in an election or plebiscite to determine the sovereignity over foreign territory."

It cited a number of precedents in its argument that the Vatican City is a sovereign state.

The State Department declined comment. The three U. S. prelates are Cardinals Francis Spellman of New York, John Francis McIntyre of Los Angeles and Edward Mooney of Detroit.

CHURCH BOMBINGS

Also in the United States mounting terrorist bombings of churches and synagogues, coupled with threats and window breakings in five states, brought calls for a sweeping investigation by Federal state, and local authorities.

On the heels of bombings of Jewish synagogues in Atlanta and Peoria, Ill., St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York was searched twice for a bomb, a Jehovah's Witnesses meeting place in Boston was shaken from a hand grenade blast, a Brooklyn synagogue found three of its windows stoned out, and a search was made of eight churches in Keyport, N. J. after calls said bombs had been planted.

Meanwhile, in the most vicious of the bombings, Atlanta police were confident they were close to cracking into a ring of terrorists responsible for the deed. Three of the suspects have been arrested and police expect to take in more. A signed statement of a man in custody provided the initial break in the case.

Police said the ring may have been connected with three other organizations: The Knight of White Camellia, a Florida outfit; The National States Rights Council and the Anniston, Ala., Klu Klux Klan, which may have been the source of dynamite.

In the backwash of the failure of a moon rocket to reach its objective over the weekend officials, citizens and spokesmen for foreign nations hailed the United States achievement as a brilliant one. The moon probe soared 79,120 miles into space and sent back signals to the U. S. about cosmic rays, density of atmosphere, and other things.

And the Air Force disclosed that the vehicle was also used as a radio repeater station to transmit signals almost halfway around the earth. Tracking stations in Hawaii, Manchester, England and Cape Canaveral were in direct contact with one another during the historic flight.

Three days after the moon rocket returned to a fiery death in the earth's atmosphere, the unified space command of the U. S. asked the Army to turn over to it top missile scientists and facilities.

Army officials were preparing a protest to President Eisenhower on the matter. The proposal would require the Army to turn over about 2,100 space scientists and engineers at Hunstville, Ala., and Los Angeles, Army officials said the plan, which would turn over top men like Werhner Von Braun, would seriously undermine the Army's space program.

Pip's Quips

Pringle Pipkin

Methods used to attack Dr. Jerrold Orne, University Librarian, have been inexcusable. The antics used in this campaign of discord do credit to a high schooler.

It is fortunate that this campaign is not a mass movement on the part of the graduate students.

It may well be that there are legitimate complaints concerning the operation of the Library. However, the methods used to draw attention to these real and imagined grievances were not honorable.

It is obvious that the "O.G.H." committee wanted to get publicity —this they have gotten in full measure — but their cause could have been advanced more rapidly if they had appealed through the proper channels.

If direct appeal to an administrator is not successful, the petitioners are justified in trying to use other methods of appeal. Appeal over the head of someone is most uncourteous if no attempt has been made to talk the problem out.

The recent campaign is especially immature in that the petitioners will not identify themselves. Their crime was no light one.

Their marking on the walls is small when considered in view of the damage they have attempted to do to the reputation of a man.

The librarian could not defend himself because there was no specific attack against his policies until the "O.G.H.'s" committee's recommendations were delivered to him anonymously.

Let us hope this form of action will not be imitated in the future. There is a student government here which is at the disposal of the students.

If the students have problems, they should work through their representatives. This "O.G.H." campaign manifests an extreme lack of confidence in the ability of the student government.

Who is to place confidence in the ability of the students to govern themselves if they do not?

On A Union

Sidney Dakar

One hears almost daily the cry that the most important boost to campus social life would come from a new college union building. This might be true, but other changes would also have to come if social conditions are to improve.

The main argument used by the proponents of a new union building is to point to the very successful one over at N. C. State. I spent several years at N. C. State and I believe that I can consider both sides of the issue. First of all, State was in desperate need of a union building. Before this union was built there was no place on the campus where students could gather. Such is not the condition here at Carolina. The places for gathering are here; they just are not being used.

The crux of the problem of how to arrange for boy to meet girl under accepted social conditions seems to be a mental or state of mind problem rather than a lack of physical space at Carolina. To put it bluntly, the average Carolina Co-ed seems to think it is a disgrace to go to a place where she can meet boys unless she already has an escort. Rather than go out and show her fellow students she does not have a date, she seems to prefer to stay in her room and brood. I am not positive that it is in their rooms where they stay, but it is obvious that they are in hiding somewhere.

This attitude is contrasted by the attitude of the Raleigh girls from the three girl's Colleges, Rex hospital, business colleges and working girls. These girls come to the State Union to meet boys, not with them. It is easy to meet and to obtain the names of ten or fifteen girls within one or two hours under these circumstances. Truthfully, those girls are not nearly as "aloof" as the average Carolina Co-ed. They are more concerned with getting their man

Actually, the large dancing area of the State Union is mostly used only for the more formal dances (i.e. where boys bring dates, not to meet them for the first time). Most of the time the "platter parties" are held in the snack bar where the dancing area is smaller than the Rendezvous room. And the complete snack bar room is certainly smaller than the G. M. reading room. It seems almost sacrilegious to suggest that the historical furnishings of the G. M. reading room could be removed to make way for "progress," but this could easily be done if space is the solution.

However, as I stated above, the problem isn't lack of space, but one of mental attitude. Unless the Carolina Co-ed will change her opinion that going out to meet a boy instead of with one is a disgrace, a college union twice the size of the one at State would be a waste of this state's limited resources.

On A Funeral

Ronnie Shumate

The time was 4:28 p.m., October 15, 1959. The place was the first block of W. Franklin St., Chapel Hill, N. C. A funeral was passing. You ask what was so momentous about that. Nothing, ordinarily. As a matter of fact, nothing was so momentous about this funeral. It was just another funeral. I noticed first the hearse and then the other cars. Negroes occupied them. Still nothing momentous you say. Read on. Two males, about college age, I'd say, were standing on the sidewalk watching the funeral go by. Now comes the clincher. Those boys, both white, were standing there jeering at the passing funeral. They called out such remarks as "Another 'nigger' gone," and "We want another one, just like the other one," and "That's where the rest of you blacks oughta be." There were more such utterances, but I just wanted to give you the general idea. Got it?

Now do you know why anyone would take the time to sit down and write an editorial about a funeral? Actually, this isn't going to be about a funeral. At least not the funeral that wound its way up Franklin St. this afternoon.

At first I wondered if the two boys, obviously Carolina students, were under the effects of some witch's potion. Often such potions are called names such as bourbon, vodka, gin, and the old stand-by, beer. I don't believe they were. I didn't bother to smell their breath or give them a "walk the line" test, but they showed no outward signs of being under the influence of such beverages.

It puzzles me as to why two college students, supposedly on the brink of maturity, would want to publicly make such fools of themselves. It's a shame, in a way, that they weren't in a state of inebriation. Then they would have had an excuse, of sorts, for such behavior. They may have thought it was cute. Believe me, it wasn't cute. Oh, it may have been to them and their buddies, if they have any, but to anyone with any decency at all would not have thought their little "show" to be so cute.

I sincerely hope the boys are reading this. Probably they aren't, because they obviously don't have the mentality to read a newspaper. I've wondered how they even got in college, or for that matter, how they ever got out of high school. Legally, I mean. Now I don't profess to be perfect. I've done my share of things I shouldn't have done. In a talk to the Press Club last week, Mr. Weimar Jones said "We must damn the act, not the individual." At the time I fully agreed with him. Now much to my amazement, I am inclined to disagree somewhat with his statement. Here I must about-face and damn the individuals along with the act. I haven't decided yet which was worse: the act or the individuals. It's a pretty close race.

If we allow such vermin to continue to exist here in Chapel Hill, they are going to bring on the funeral of our self-respect.

Out Look On Latin America

Russell Eisenman

Why is there some feeling against the United States in Latin America? It is at least partially due to our narrow outlook. Haven't you heard at least one person say. "Companies can do so well down there because labor is so cheap. The people work for practically nothing." Don't think enlightened Latin Americans like our exploitation of their people. We, the American people, are often resented because some American companies pay the workers a wage which would be an insult to almost any American.

The juicy details of how Vice President Richard Nixon was spat upon when he toured South America was perhaps interesting but not important. The importance is why. Our feeling of great superiority to these people manifests itself in our relations with them, and works to our detriment.

Communists aren't the only ones who level the charge of imperialism against the United States. Hugo Calceda Borrero of the National Union of Colombian Students said, "With our youth rests the salvation or the disaster of humanity, depending upon whether we help the imperialist forces—capitalist or communist—that are subjugating the weak peoples of the world."

We are living in a dangerous age. Our actions today will decide if we have a world tomorrow. Therefore, it is important that we look at world situations with a broad, intelligent perspective. Our lives depend upon it.

Seeds Of Hate

I sometimes fear we wear our virtues or religious tolerance more on our sleeves than in our hearts. It's a wonder that no bones were broken as politicians scrambled to denounce the dastardly bombings of synogogues in Atlanta and Peoria. And denounce them they should, but how much less evil is the respectable anti-semitism of restricted neighborhoods and how many politicians rush itno print to condemn such practices?

War, as someone said, is an extension of politics, the exploision of a church, obviously, is the violent climax of prejudice. Everybody hates war, but we take less care in activating our antipathy to dirty politics or to reckless polities that may sweep us to the brink of catastrophe. And yet we are surprised, stunned outraged when a crisis breaks. "Who is to blame for this?", we cry, looking hastily around for a scapegoat, while trying to suppress guilt pangs for our own irresponsibility. Isn't there a valid parallel here with our reaction to religious and/or racial prejudice and persecution?

"For shame!" we shout with righteous inidgnation as a temple is desecrated. (Human refuse, incidentally was used to defile the synogogue in Peoria.) But how righteous really is our wrath? The beastliness of the crime shocks us into a commitment. Even the most virulent anti-Semite would scarcely dare publicly to condone violence. Society would close in on him. And yet, how often have the most proper social circles echoed with the comment, "Well, I don't like the Jews, but after all — bombing; that's going too far"?

There is another aspect to the issue. The mayor of Atlanta has already been widely quoted but what he said is worth committing to memory. "Whether they like it or not," observed Mayor William B. Hartsfied after the Atlanta Temple blast, "every rabble-rousing politician is the godfather of the cross-burners and the dynamiters who are giving the South a bad name."

The extremist should not be surprised at these recent incidents. The school bombings and the synogogue bombings may or may not be linked. It really doesn't matter. The fact is that the extremist have been preaching and attempting to practice defiance of the law. This is an invitation to anarchy. In such an atmosphere no citizen is safe — or can be for long. What the small-minded politician have been preaching in their racial tantrums is not really the sancity of states rights. It is lawlessness. That is to say, defy the law you don't like. But once one law is defied, it is interesting (and frightening) how quickly it becomes convenient or necessary to break the rest.

In castigating the synogogue bombers as hoodlums of the Capone ilk, President Eisenhower said with feeling it was an insult to the fair name of the Confereracy, to have any of these gangsters refer to themselves as members of a "confederate underground". There is a broader question of whether it isn't a corrosive insult to American decency to give any of these ailing minds, violent or nonviolent, anything more solicitous that a psychologist's care for their sickness. Some of the most eloquently scurrilous anti-Semitic tracts have been written by one Joseph Kamp, whose hate-mongering President Eisenhower, who has been one of his victims, also roundly deplored.

Now it has happened that the current target of Kamps' attack is Walter Reuther. This has made the pamphleteer the dark darling of a number of Republican politicians and party contributiors who don't seem to realize — or if they do, don't mind — the fact when the acid of hatred is spilled, there is no discrimination about what it eats away.

In discussing these matters this morning, President Eisenhower remarked he thought Americans were "growing up". Let's hope the time will come when we can despise somebody for his cussedness and not his color or his catechism and a man can, unpatronizingly, say, "some of my best friends are human beings." —Edward P. Morgan

Cities Rights

With the closing of several schools in Arkansas and Virginia, the segregation dispute shifted overnight from the area of demagogic politics to what seems to have been a secondary matter up to now, namely, education. For the first time, white parents are confronted not with Confederate rallying cries, excitement, and verbiage, but with the hard fact that their kids are staying home all day or out on the street instead of being in school.

Perhaps the best comment on this situation was contained in a letter to the editor, signed "Cities Righter," that appeared in the ARKANSAS GAZETTE recently:

"For over a century My People have gone to school. They have become accustomed to it. It is a tradition. It is a way of life. The customs and traditions of many years cannot be changed overnight. A new way of life cannot be forced upon a reluctant people. My People are not ready for no schools. They must have time . . .

"Personally, I am a moderate. I am neither for schools nor against schools. I speak only for My People . . .

"By what rights does the legislature of a foreign state (Arkansas) and its Governor say that the citizens of the sovereign city of Little Rock shall not attend school? The constitution of the foreign state of Arkansas does not say that the citizens of Little Rock cannot go to school. That is not the law, and I have never said it was the law. Even if the constitution says that, it is not the law, because the people of the city of Little Rock have never ratified the constitution of the State of Arkansas.

"You must remember that no schools is merely the first step. Next comes no football teams, no dances, no dates. My God, can't you see where this is leading?

"Basically, the problem here is Cities' Rights. My People are solidly behind me and we will never buckle down to the State House . . .

Over in Virginia, Governor Almond reacted furiously to Attorney General Rogers's statement that the Justice Department has received reports "concerning efforts on the part of parents and children to prevail upon responsible state officials to open the public schools."

"It is the old familiar technique of divide and conquer" said the governor. "I would say that would meet the full applause and approbation of Mr. Khrushchev, whoever he is."

Now, Governor, you surely must know whose side Mr. Khrushchev is on. —From The Reporter

Physical Ed Professor Gets Grant Of $5000

Dr. Carl S. Blyth, assistant professor of physical education at UNC has received a $5,000 grant from the Office of Naval Research, it has been announced by Dr. O. K. Cornwell, chairman of the department.

The grant will enable Dr. Blyth to continue this research on the relationship between body type and composition, on the capacity to work and maintenance of themal regulation.

Covering The University Campus

IN CLEVELAND

An assistant director of the Institute of Government, Henry W. Lewis, will be in Cleveland, Ohio, this week for a five-day annual conference of the National Assn. of AsAsessing Officers. Lewis' attendance will tie in with his interest in the training of North Carolina's county tax supervisors.

GUEST SPEAKER

A scientist from the Oak Ridge National Laboratory at Oak Ridge, Tenn. will be the guest speaker at the combined staff conference of the UNC School of Medicine Wednesday.

Dr. Theodore T. O'Dell of the Biology Division of the laboratory will speak in the Clinic Auditorium at 4 p.m. on "Tissue Transplantation in Mammals after Treatment with Irradiation and Chemical Agents." The public has been invited.

FINAL LECTURES

The final lectures in the current postgraduate courses in medicine will be held at Asheville Oct. 28 and in Morganton Oct. 29.

The speaker will be Dr. Priscilla White of the New England Deaconess Hospital, the Boston Lying-In Hospital and the Joslin Clinic, all of Boston.

The two courses are sponsored by the University of North Carolina School of Medicine and the UNC Extension Division. The Asheville course is co-sponsored by the Buncombe County Medical Society and the Morganton course is co-sponsored by the Burke County Medical Society.

MED SCHOOL SYMPOSIUM

The annual UNC School of Medicine Symposium will be held Thursday and Friday, Nov. 20-21, at Chapel Hill with some 100 physicians attending from the two Carolinas and Virginia.

Physicians attending this event have been urged to reserve accommodations at once as this also is the weekend of the Carolina-Duke football game.

CLASSICAL ASSOC.

High school and college teachers of classics in North Carolina will meet in Chapel Hill Oct. 31 for the purpose of setting up a statewide organization to be known as the North Carolina Classical Assn.

Dr. Charles Henderson of the UNC Classics Dept. explained that such an organization is needed because of "the general lack of communication between the high schools and the colleges which may eventually have a harmful effect on the teaching of the classical languages in North Carolina."

MEDICINE MEET

Eight representatives of the UNC School of Medicine, Department of Preventive Medicine, will attend the meetings of the Teachers of Preventive Medicine and American Public Health Assn. in St. Louis Oct. 25-30.

Dr. Leon Andrews will present a paper on "A Study of Patterns of Patient Referral to a Medical Center in A Rural State."

Others attending the meeting will be Dr. William L. Fleming, Dr. Kerr L. White, Dr. T. F. Williams, Dr. Daniel Martin, Mrs. Aileen Hamrick, Miss Shirley Callahan and Earl Diamond.

BRAUER RECEIVES $1000 CHECK—Dr. S. Everett Moser of Gastonia, right, president of the North Carolina Dental Society, has presented a $1000 check to Dean John C. Brauer, center, University of North Carolina School of Dentistry, for the Dental Foundation of North Carolina, Inc. The gift to the Foundation was made by Mr. Robert J. Gurney of Gastonia and New York City; not shown. Dr. Charles Z. Candler of Asheville, president of the First District Dental Society, is shown here on the left.

Student-Painting Dialogue To Be 'Dimensions' Feature

A dialogue between a student and paintings will be featured on "Dimensions" Monday night on WUNC-TV from 9:30 to 10.

The program, sponsored by the YM-YWCA, will present a student, portrayed by Louise Crumbley, to ask typical questions about art, and a voice from a painting to give answers.

Paintings by Wood, Moses, Van Gogh, Pollock and Picasso will be used.

Press Issues Brochure On 12 Civil War Books

The UNC Press has issued an attractive brochure on 12 books concerning the Civil War which the Press is now offering the public.

These books are being called to the attention of the public at this time because of the forthcoming centennial of the Civil War. This war has a special meaning for all Americans as it was the only war that we both won and lost.

This current selection of books covers such colorful characters as Ranger Mosby, Stonewall Jackson, Joseph Shelby, General Sherman, General Robert E. Lee and Lincoln and Johnson, just to name a few.

Mont Praises Heels

By STEWART PHIZIZY

An alumnus, walking past the Maryland dressing room waving a red Maryland banner, blurted out "We needed to win that game."

There is no doubt that Tommy Mont agrees.

Speaking in a low almost monotonous voice the bitterly disappointed Maryland Coach said, "They were faster, quicker, hit harder . . . and just wanted to win more than we did. It seemed that with every touchdown, they were a little more hungry."

"We looked lousy. Our whole performance stunk, what more can you say. This is one Maryland team I can't figure out," said Mont.

Continued Mont: "Goldstein's run put us in a terrible hole."

Al Goldstein, a 6-0 193 pound junior from Brooklyn, picked off a Terrapin pass and raced 40 yards for a Carolina touchdown with 1:12 showing on the scoreboard clock in the first half.

Somebody asked Mont how he would compare Ronnie Koes with the Ex-Maryland great Bob Pellegrini. Mont evaded the question but he did have this to say, "Koes caught us in a couple of crucial plays. There is no doubt that this boy is a marvelous center."

Did Mont feel that this was the toughest game Maryand had played?

"I will admit it got a little rough, some of the boys lost their heads, for that I am truly very very sorry

"The thing that I noticed about Carolina was that they now seem to know who they want to play at each position. Looking back at their past games, I feel this certainly was their best . . . they beat the hell out of us, that's all," concluded Mont.

Tatum: "Our Best Game"

By ELLIOTT COOPER

An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth and Jim Tatum got Tommy Mont for what happened last year. After the game it was a happy Tatum who said, "This was my best ball game, but we also got a lot of breaks out there."

From the 27-0 score of the contest it would seem that the Tar Heels had things all their own way, but such was not the case. Although Carolina led in total offense, the Terps outgained the Heels in the passing department by some 88 yards. "Maryland has a fine football team," Tatum stated, 'they certainly did entertain the crowd."

Defense Great Again

The Carolina coach was again prolific in his praise of the Tar Heel line. "They caught on in the Southern California game and haven't stopped yet." After the offensive display that his team put on Tatum was asked if he thought his offense was now as good as his defense. Sunny Jim was quick to reply that it had a long way to go before it was in the class with the defense.

"What did you feed them this week that made them run so much better?" Tatum was asked. The answer, "extra work." He went on to explain that last week he had spent much more time working with the offense than with the defense.

As was the story last week Wade Smith was again one of the offensive stars of the contest. "I don't believe anybody could give the crowd a better show than he did." Tatum commented. "He certainly has improved since his sophomore year; I've seen lots of linemen do the same thing but not many backs."

Tatum Lauds 4 Seniors

In addition to being proud of his line, Tatum was especially high in his praises of the senior foursome which anchors the center of the forward wall. When you see fellows like Ronnie Koes, Phil Blazer, Don Redding, and Fred Swearingen take pride in their play like they have been doing it makes all the disappointments in coaching disappear. They want to help any boy that comes along and see that he gets a chance to play."

Although the Carolina punting average was a mere 33 yards per kick, everyone who saw the game remembers the 61 yard punt that Don Coker got off in the third quarter. "Boy, that Coker really got his foot into the ball," was the way the junior fullback's coach put it.

Commenting on the play of Don Klochak Tatum said he was quite pleased with his performance. "I'm sorry Don didn't get to run more. He is still not in his potential shape."

38 Tar Heels See Action

While Klochak was playing in his first game of the season, several other Tar Heels saw action for the first time yesterday. "We used 38 men," Tatum added. "We haven't used that many in a long time."

John Schroeder, who was carried off the field on a stretcher, received a neck injury. Trainer John Lacey said he did not think it as anything serious, but he would have to wait until tomorrow to make sure.

Does Bob Shupin like playing a guard position? "I really like it great," was the way Bob put it. "I had a big time out there today."

Tar Heels Win 27-0

before loosing the ball on a fumble.

One For Good Measure

But the Tar Heels weren't through with the Terp yet. They hit paydirt for the fourth time with just 2:46 remaining in the game when Cummings hit Danny Droze with a 4-yard pass in the end zone. Phil Blazer split the uprights to give the Tar Heels their final margin, 27-0.

The Carolina defensive crew provided their usual fine game, limiting the Terps to only 56 yards on the ground. Maryland did gain 239 yards in the air, but had to set a conference record for passes attempted to do it. Bob Russevlyan, Jack Scarbath's little brother Dick, and Dale Betty filled the air with 35 passes, completing 21.

Harriers Lose To Terps

The powerful and spirited Maryland Terrapins, led by sensational sophomore Frank Colavita, today mauled Carolina and Wake Forest in a triangular cross country meet by a 25-39 margin.

The Tar Heels, however, lost a great deal more than the meet. Their number one man and probably best in the conference, Wayne Bishop, wrenched his knee on a foot bridge after covering about one and a half miles. At the time, he was leading Colavita by 15 yards. The extent of the injury was unknown, but should Bishop be out for the rest of the season, it would strike a crushing blow to Tar Heel hopes for retaining their conference championship.

Following Colavita, who finished in 1:45, were Bob Medlin of Wake Forest, John Claggett of Maryland, Ralph Palfi of Maryland, Cowles Liipfert of UNC, and Richard Creditor of Maryland. The last four of the top 10 were all Tar Heels—Dave Scurlock, Howard Kahn, Bing Somers, and Alex Coffin.

Wake Forest ran only four men and, consequently, had no score.

In an otherwise very dark day, the sole bright spot for the Tar Heels was Scurlock, who turned in a 21:26 and, for the first time this year, gave an indication of what he can really do.

Frosh CC Win

Carolina's undefeated freshman cross-country team rolled to their second victory in as many starts here yesterday by out-pointing Wake Forest's Baby Deacs 20-40.

Although Jim Wodford of Wake Forest finished first the Tar Babies sewed up the event by copping the next 5 places.

Shirt Satellite Launched!

The first Shirt Satellite is finally a reality! Just yesterday, during their lunch hour, Van Heusen scientists launched a Van Heusen Century Shirt into the stratosphere. It's now circling the earth 180,000 miles up, in an orbit so large that a grown man couldn't walk it, even in a whole day! Traveling at the legal 35 miles per hour, it is expected that the Van Heusen Century Shirt Satellite will remain up there in the blue beyond for at least 1200 years. And, with luck, maybe 1201.

"But," you will ask, "what value will the Shirt Satellite have for science?" Just this, friend! It will further prove the immutable law that the soft collar on Van Heusen Century Shirts won't wrinkle . . . ever! You see, the slick Van Heusen physicists have attached an electronic Wrinkle-ricter to the collar of the Van Heusen Century Shirt. This clever device will constantly send back electronic reports on the condition of the collar, so, for 1200 years, we earthlings will have absolute proof that the soft collar on Van Heusen Shirts won't wrinkle . . . ever. Should you ever have any doubts, just drop in to the Van Heusen office, and listen to the reports coming back from the Shirt Satellite.

One more thing—the Van Heusen Century Shirt Satellite will drop back to the earth in the spring of 3157 (possibly 3158) and you're all invited to the return party! If, in the meantime, you want to see the Van Heusen Century Shirt, you can at your campus haberdashery. He has them in 5 collar styles, in white, stripes and colors. $4 & $5. At better stores everywhere or write: Phillips-Van Heusen Corporation, 417 Fifth Ave., New York 16, N. Y.
